Over one hundred of his neighbors testify to his poverty and worthiness, and to the fact that some years ago he was run over by a railroad train, which caused the amputation of one of his legs and crushed the remaining foot. While this mischance has no direct bearing upon his claim for a pension, his being stiff and inactive from rheumatism may have been the cause of his misfortune.

Your committee believe the man may properly claim the relief provided for in the bill, and therefore report it favorably, with a recommendation that it do pass.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARY J. GILBERT.

Mr. CONGER. A few moments ago I objected to the consideration of a bill called up by the gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLARD]. I now withdraw my objection.

Mr. MILLARD. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill I have indicated. I make the request for the reason that the applicant is blind, and her only brother lost his life in the service of his country.

The bill (H. R. 5345) for the relief of Mary J. Gilbert, called up by Mr. MILLARD, was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary J. Gilbert, sister of De Witt Gilbert, late of Company G, Eighty-ninth New York Volunteers.

Mr. TAULBEE. Let the report be read subject to objection.

The report (by Mr. SAWYER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred House bill 5345, beg leave to submit the following report:

Mary J. Gilbert is a sister of the late De Witt Gilbert, of Company G, Eighty-ninth New York Volunteers. Young Gilbert enlisted and was mustered into service the 2d day of October, 1861. The report of the Adjutant-General, dated March 14, 1882, shows that he was enrolled a private in Company G, Eighty-ninth Regiment New York Volunteers, on the 2d day of October, 1861, at Windsor, N. Y.; that he was wounded in the battle of Antietam, Maryland, September 17, 1862; that he recovered from his wound and returned to his company. Afterward, to wit, September 28, 1864, he died of chronic diarrhea, at Baltimore, Md. He died at West Building hospital. At the time of his death he had risen to the rank of corporal. Young Gilbert at the date of his enlistment had no father, brother, wife, or children, but had a sister, the claimant, and a mother, who were absolutely dependent upon him for support.

On the 12th day of January, 1864, his mother died. May 24, 1880, claimant filed her application for pension. The claim was rejected on the 11th day of October, 1882, and upon the ground that claimant was fifty years old at the time of the filing of her application and, under existing law, was not entitled to a pension. From the affidavit of claimant, Irving D. Knox, and other papers in the case, it appears that claimant was, at the date of her brother's enlistment, service, and death, wholly dependent upon him for support, and in fact supported by him until his death; that she was an invalid, without any property whatsoever, and unable to care for herself.

It also appears, from the affidavit of Dr. I. C. Edson and other papers in the case, that the claimant's health was not only poor, but that she has a disease of the eyes known as amaurosis, which renders her almost blind. She is dependent upon the charity of her friends and neighbors for the necessaries of life. But for the age of claimant she would doubtless have been allowed a pension by the Department. We think this poor woman, whose only brother was wounded in battle, and afterwards died in the service of his country, should be entitled to the small pittance provided for dependent relatives, and accordingly recommend the passage of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MRS. EMILY M. SWIFT.

Mr. CARLETON. I ask unanimous consent to call up for consideration the bill (S. 2203) granting a pension to Mrs. Emily M. Swift, of Dexter, Mich.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Emily M. Swift, of Dexter, Mich., dependent mother of James C. Swift, late a lieutenant of Company B, First Regiment Alabama Union Cavalry.

Mr. TAULBEE. Let the report be read subject to objection.

The report (by Mr. WINANS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred Senate bill 2203, report that they have examined the same, and adopt the Senate report, as follows:

[Senate Report No. 964, Forty-ninth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2203) granting a pension to Mrs. Emily M. Swift, have examined the same, and report:

The petitioner applies for a pension as dependent mother of James C. Swift, first lieutenant of Company B, First Alabama Cavalry, and who died at Glendale, Miss., November 3, 1863, of wounds received in battle. The soldier's identity, service, and death are not questioned, and the proof is ample to show that he was the only son of the claimant. The pension is denied by the Pension Office on the ground of non-dependence at the time of his death.

The facts are that the mother was living with her second husband, William Stephens, in the village of Dexter, Washtenaw County, Michigan, when her son enlisted, which was also the home of the latter. It is in evidence that the relations between the husband wife were not pleasant; that the son gave his mother his bounty-money, and afterwards sent her portions of his pay, thus recognizing her dependence upon him independent of the fact that his mother had a husband who was under obligations to support her. It is also in evidence that the husband not only did not maintain her, but that he converted to his own use all the personal property she had; that he treated her with cruelty; that he procured from the estate of the soldier's father money that belonged to the son, converted it to his own use, and that the mother had no benefit from it.

Also that the petitioner has been granted a divorce from her said husband, William Stephens, and that she is now sixty-seven years of age, in poor health, and dependent upon her relatives for support; and that she has resumed the name of Emily M. Swift.

In the opinion of the committee this is a case demanding relief that may properly be given. The bill is therefore reported favorably with a recommendation that it do pass.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with the recommendation that it do pass.

SUSAN A. DUNCAN.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. I ask unanimous consent to call up for consideration the bill (S. 2252) granting a pension to Susan A. Duncan.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Susan A. Duncan, widow of Capt. Leroy C. Duncan, late of Company D, Twenty-seventh Regiment Missouri Volunteers.

Mr. WALLACE. I ask for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2252) granting a pension to Susan A. Duncan, submit the following report:

The claimant, Susan A. Duncan, is the widow of Leroy C. Duncan, captain of Company M, Fortieth Enrolled Missouri Militia, who died at Warrensburg, Mo., May 18, 1865, of wounds received on the 7th of the same month, at Kingsville, Johnson County, Missouri, while in an engagement with "bushwhackers." The claim was rejected by the Pension Office, as stated by the Commissioner in his letter to the Senate Committee on Pensions, on the ground that "it was not prosecuted to a successful issue prior to July 4, 1874."

It appears by the report of the Adjutant-General that the soldier was mustered into the service as captain Company D, Johnson County (Missouri) Horse Guards, Twenty-seventh Regiment Mounted Troops, to date from July 4, 1861; mustered out January 27, 1862; then he was commissioned captain Fortieth Enrolled Militia October 30, 1862; was detached for active service as captain Company B, Fifth Provisional Enrolled Militia, May 23, 1863. It was while connected with this organization that he received his death wound, according to the testimony of his comrade, Henry C. Rose, who was wounded at the same time.

It is shown by the report of the Third Auditor that the regiments to which he belonged were "employed in the military service of the United States, and the State paid for the above service, and has been reimbursed by the United States."

In another report from the Third Auditor it is stated that the widow filed a claim for his pay, which was paid.

From the proof contained in the papers accompanying this case it is apparent that the husband was in the service of the United States and that he died from wounds received in action. The bill is reported favorably with a recommendation that it do pass.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOHN A. FAGG.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. I call up the bill (H. R. 6188) for the relief of John A. Fagg.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, instructed to place on the pension-roll the name of John A. Fagg, late lieutenant-colonel of —— North Carolina Regiment, in the Mexican war, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws of the United States.

The report (by Mr. JONES, of Alabama) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred House bill 6188, beg leave to submit the following report:

John A. Fagg was lieutenant-colonel of First Regiment North Carolina Volunteers in the Mexican war, during which he contracted typhoid fever and this resulted in chronic diarrhea, at Buena Vista, Mexico, in 1847.

The committee recommend that his name be placed on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws of the United States.

The Committee on Pensions recommended an amendment inserting, before the words "North Carolina," the words "the First."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

CHARLOTTE O'NEAL.

Mr. MARKHAM. I call up the bill (S. 859) granting a pension to Charlotte O'Neal.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That from and after the passage of this act the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Charlotte O'Neal, widow of Col. Richard O'Neal, deceased, late colonel of the Twenty-sixth Regiment Indiana Volunteers, and to pay her a pension at the same rate the widows of colonels of volunteers are now paid.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred Senate bill 859, respectfully report that they concur in the Senate report hereto annexed and adopt the same as their own, and recommend the passage of the bill with the following amendment: Insert the word "lieutenant" before the word "colonel" wherever it occurs in said bill.

The claimant, Charlotte O'Neal, is the widow of Richard O'Neal, late lieutenant-colonel of the Twenty-sixth Regiment Indiana Volunteers. It appears from the evidence in this case that the soldier was the first lieutenant-colonel of the above command; that he resigned and went home by order of Governor O. P. Morton and was put in charge of the United States camps at Indianapolis, Ind., and that while performing the duties of that position he contracted disease, and died in January, 1863. The funeral ceremonies were conducted under a special order of Col. Henry B. Carrington, of the Eighteenth United States Infantry, which is as follows:

HEADQUARTERS UNITED STATES FORCES,
Indianapolis, January 6, 1863.

1. The funeral ceremonies of Lieut. Col. Richard O'Neal will take place from his late residence, on Virginia avenue, this day, at 2 o'clock p. m. The escort will consist of six companies of the Seventy-first Indiana Volunteers, and will form at the late residence of Lieutenant-Colonel O'Neal at half past 1 o'clock p. m. precisely.

2. Other military bodies joining the procession will march directly after the family of the deceased.

3. The late Lieutenant-Colonel O'Neal, having performed faithful service in the field, and having distinguished himself by unremitting devotion to his country's service in charge of the camps near Indianapolis during the last four months, as well as on account of his high character as an officer and gentleman, the commandant of this post will take charge of the funeral ceremonies on the occasion.

By order of Col. Henry B. Carrington, Eighteenth United States Infantry.

LEWIS T. MORRIS,
Lieutenant, United States Infantry, Acting Adjutant.

The widow now asks that a special act be passed, granting her a pension at the same rate allowed to the widows of officers of the same rank. She has not applied at the Pension Office, because the disease from which her husband died was incurred after his formal resignation. Such disease was, however, incurred virtually in the service and while Colonel O'Neal was in charge of the United States camps at Indianapolis.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommended the following amendments: In line 6, strike out the word "colonel," and insert in lieu thereof "lieutenant-colonel;" in line 7, the same amendment; in line 9, strike out "colonels" and insert "lieutenant-colonels."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

WILLIAM REDDICK.

Mr. HALL. Mr. Chairman, I call up House bill No. 10473, granting a pension to William Reddick. The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension-roll of the United States the name of William Reddick, corporal in Company B, in the Thirty-third Regiment of Ohio Volunteers, and who was one of the so-called "Mitchell raiders" sent out in 1862, by General O. M. Mitchell, for certain hazardous military purposes, at the rate of $24 per month; and this act shall take effect as of June 2, 1881.

Mr. TAULBEE. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. CONGER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill H. R. 1073, have considered the same, and report:

William Reddick was a corporal in Company B, Thirty-third Regiment Ohio Volunteers, and was one of the so-called Mitchell Raiders, whose hazardous service, valiant exploits, and inhuman treatment are fully detailed in Senate Report No. 361 of the Forty-eighth Congress, hereto attached.

The Forty-eighth Congress passed an act placing these so-called Mitchell Raiders, mentioning each one by name, on the pension-roll at $24 per month, which was approved July 7, 1884, and is also appended hereto. William Reddick's name was in some way omitted from this bill, evidently an oversight, as in the whole history of the case his name appeared as one of the leaders and principal men in the party. And your committee believe it was the intention at the time to pension him with the others.

If it was right to pension all the other members of this band, it is certainly wrong to discriminate against William Reddick. The passage of the bill is therefore recommended, after striking out the last line and adding "July 7, 1884."

The principal facts relating to the claim of Wilson W. Brown and others were set forth in detail in a favorable report of the House Committee on Invalid Pensions on House bill 4444, during the Forty-seventh Congress, and also in a report of this committee (Senate Report No. 722, Forty-seventh Congress, first session), as follows:

"The petitioners seeking to be benefited by this bill are known in history as the 'Mitchell Raiders.' In the early part of April, 1862, General Ormsby M. Mitchell had advanced his column as far south as Shelbyville, Tenn. On the west the battle of Shiloh had just determined in favor of the Union arms. At the east McClellan, with his army of the Potomac, was at Yorktown, threatening an advance upon Richmond. Against these two armies of the West and East, the South had concentrated their strength. General Mitchell saw then, as a bloody history so fully demonstrated subsequently, the vital importance of seizing and holding Chattanooga as a strategic point on the great railroad line between the East and the West, which connected the main armies of the rebellion. The capture of Chattanooga, at that crisis of the war, involved also the possession of East Tennessee, and a probable uprising of a strong loyal element there.

The Mitchell Raiders were a body of twenty-one men, under command of one J. J. Andrews, selected by General Mitchell to undertake the desperate enterprise of penetrating nearly 200 miles south into the heart of the enemy's territory, and endeavoring to destroy the wooden bridges on the railroad between Chattanooga and Atlanta. This, Mitchell hoped, would cut off the advance of troops from the south, while he moved down his army and captured Chattanooga. Judge-Advocate-General Joseph Holt did not exaggerate when he said of this expedition that "in the daring of its conception it had the wildness of romance, while in the overwhelming results which it sought to accomplish it was absolutely sublime." The account of the raid, following, is borrowed from another writer, and is correct, according to the evidence of participants:

"The soldiers of this forlorn hope, dressed in citizen's clothes and representing themselves as good secessionists, set out on foot through the enemy's country by twos and threes, and after many adventures, came together at Marietta, a point on the railroad a little north of Atlanta. The plan was to take passage on some north-bound train, and, at an opportune moment, overpower the guard, seize the engine, and drive onward with all speed, burning bridges, and tearing up tracks as they went, and leaving a trail of flame and destruction behind them; to dash clean through Chattanooga, and meet Mitchell as he advanced along the Memphis road. It was early in the morning of April 12, when these adventurous travelers, with tickets for different points to avert suspicion, boarded the train, and finally seated themselves in the same car. At broad daylight the conductor called out, 'Big Shanty; twenty minutes for breakfast,' and at once passengers, engineer, and trainmen all poured into the long eating-room, leaving the engine unguarded, although it was within the lines of a rebel encampment.

"The little band sauntered forward, each falling into his appointed place, when in a twinkling, on a signal given, the passenger coaches were uncoupled, an engineer and firemen of the party sprang into the cab, the valve was pulled open, and the engine, tender, and three cars moved off as the remaining adventurers leaped into the open doors of one of the box cars. A few minutes placed the exulting party beyond what seemed to be the danger of any successful pursuit, for there was no telegraph at Big Shanty, and no other engine at hand. But it was one day too late. General Mitchell had advanced to Huntsville, and his approach was so threatening that all the rolling stock about Chattanooga had been ordered south, and the delay caused by meeting these unscheduled trains was fatal.

"Andrews, representing himself as a confederate officer of high rank, who had impressed the train for the purpose of running powder through to Beauregard at Corinth, excited no suspicion. But while he was losing precious minutes in waiting for the extra trains, and moving them off the track, the conductor at Big Shanty left his coffee and began the pursuit on foot until he reached a hand-car, and soon after, in a swift locomotive, which, by rare good fortune, had come down to the road, on a private track from large iron works, just in the nick of time. Before the raiders found opportunity for any serious work their pursuers were upon them. A desperate chase ensued, until finally, after a run of nearly 100 miles, the captured locomotive, now jaded and shattered, was abandoned, and the captors scattered to the shelter of thick woods.

"The whole party was captured after enduring the sufferings incident to fruitless efforts to escape their pursuit. It is unpleasant to recall the history of the treatment to which these prisoners were subjected. They were denounced as spies. They were chained together by twos by the neck, marched through the streets of Chattanooga amid the angry jeers of an infuriated crowd, and thrust into a kind of dungeon. This apartment was 13 feet square, and of about the same depth. Twenty-one men were confined here for nearly three weeks. Scanty provision was furnished, and no sufficient means afforded for the removal of excrement. If we may credit the statements of survivors of the party, which are as given above, the horrors of this confinement were beyond description.

"When released from the dark and noisome hole, their condition was pitiable, and for hours they were blinded by the light of day. Andrews, the leader, was hung as a spy. The party was removed then to Atlanta, where seven more were tried, convicted, and hanged as spies. One Jacob Parrot was whipped, one hundred lashes being inflicted on his back. For six months some of the survivors, and for eleven months others of them, were in constant apprehension of the same death by hanging as their comrades had suffered. It were better that the story of the sufferings and indignities inflicted on these heroic soldiers were left unrecited, as they were incredibly terrible, as told by the survivors.

"In considering this case the committee think it very clear that this raid was a military expedition. Judges Baxter and Temple, who, it appears, acted as attorneys to defend the men who were hanged, have lately written that they considered that they clearly showed before the court-martial that the expedition was a military one under authority and command of General Mitchell, and that the men were not spies. It is evident that the confederate government so regarded the matter, as the further trial of the survivors was stopped after the execution of Andrews and seven of the party. These soldiers, therefore, who undertook and with marvelous energy essayed the task imposed by their commander, suffered an outrage in being treated as spies and worse, which justifies their appeal for consideration."

All of the persons referred to in the present bill have presented claims to the Pension Bureau, and their present condition is as follows:

Name.	Pension.	Remarks.
Wilson W. Brown	Pensioned at $16	Claim for increase pending.
John R. Porter	Receives no pension	Claim for pension pending.
William Bensinger	Pensioned at $4	Claim for increase pending,
John A. Wilson	...do...
William Pittenger	Pensioned at $24
Martin J. Hawkins	Pensioned at $8	Claim for increase pending.
Daniel A. Dorsey	Pensioned at $12
Elihu Mason	Receives no pension	Claim for pension pending.
Rachel Slavens (widow)	Pensioned at $8*

*And $2 for each of three children.

A careful examination of the testimony has satisfied the committee that disabilities were contracted by all the survivors, for which they should receive pensions. Most of them are already, as shown above, receiving pensions under the general law, while others have applications pending, which, in our belief, should be granted.

It is unnecessary to dwell upon the details of the extraordinary enterprise in which these men engaged, the dangers they incurred, the sufferings they endured; their coolness, gallantry, fidelity, devotion, and patriotism, or upon its immense importance to the Union cause had it been successful. It is sufficient to say that these men dared and endured everything, and that failure was not their fault.

We recommend the passage of the bill with the following amendment:

Insert in line 4, after the word "twenty," the word "four," so as to read "at the rate of twenty-four dollars per month."

Your committee also recommend the addition of the following as an additional section to the bill:

"SEC. 2. This act shall not be construed to diminish the pension now being paid to any of the persons therein named, nor to deprive them of any increase to which they now are entitled or hereafter may be entitled."

Mr. JACKSON, from the Committee on Pensions, submitted the following views of the minority:

The undersigned, members of the Committee on Pensions, not concurring in the report of the majority upon bill S. 337, increasing the pension of Wilson W. Brown and others, respectfully submit the following views of the minority:

The papers before the committee, consisting of the pension files in the several cases of the respective parties proposed to be pensioned by the present bill, do not disclose anything upon which to rest the highly-drawn picture of the brilliancy and magnitude of the enterprise for the voluntary undertaking of which special honorary pensions should be granted. The extravagant colors in which it has been presented are taken mainly from the account of the undertaking published some years since by Rev. William Pittinger, one of the survivors, whose name is included in the bill under consideration.

The description is exaggerated and inaccurate in many respects. The value and importance of the enterprise, undertaken under the leadership of J. J. Andrews, a spy in General Buell's employ, is greatly overestimated. It was "hardly commendable," in the opinion of very accomplished Union officers of high rank. General Mitchell never even made any report whatever of the operation.

The majority report is inaccurate in the proposition that the parties engaged in this transaction were not "spies" and liable to be treated as such by the enemy. Very high Federal military authority so pronounces them. But without pausing to discuss the inaccuracies of the alleged "facts" and the exaggeration of the performance, and of its possible importance if success had attended it, we think that the reasons presented in the adverse report of the Senate committee at the last session of Congress constitute grave and sufficient objections to the passage of the bill, and we here readopt the same, as follows:

"The wisdom and necessity of the enterprise in which those claiming benefits under this bill were engaged, and the estimation of its importance by Judge Holt, have been criticised in military circles; and the conclusion of the foregoing report, that the expedition was a military one, and that the men were not spies, is open to question; but for the purpose of determining whether it is just or expedient for Congress to pass this bill, both the facts set forth in the report of the House committee, and its conclusions as to the character, importance, and the necessity of the expedition may be assumed.

"Upon such assumption, however, the committee are unable to find sufficient grounds for a report in favor of the passage of the bill, which proposes to grant to each of the survivors of the expedition, and the widow of one who is dead, a uniform pension of $20 per month without reference to the degree of their disability, a provision which is unknown to the existing law relating to pensions. The argument in favor of thus discriminating in favor of the beneficiaries in this bill against the soldiers who are pensioned by general act seems to be based upon three considerations, viz, the brilliant services of these soldiers, their extreme suffering, and their imminent danger of death as spies.

"In the opinion of the committee neither of these considerations can justify the passage of the bill, giving to these men an arbitrary rate of pension greater in amount than that allowed to other soldiers.

"Pensions should be granted for disability, and should be proportioned to the disability sustained. It is believed that no other just basis for pensions to soldiers exists. The country gratefully recognizes the patriotism, the heroism, and the brilliant achievements of those who fought its battles, but in granting pensions we must not forget that hundreds of thousands, nay millions, of our volunteer soldiers were patriotic and heroic, and performed deeds of conspicuous courage and gallantry; nor must we forget that such service was due from the soldier in the defense and protection of his Government in return for the protection which the Government afforded to the soldier as its citizen.

"To single out a few from the great body of those who performed patriotic, heroic, and brilliant services in the war, and bestow upon them special pensions therefor, is an unjust discrimination against those equally deserving of praise who pass unnoticed. Nor can such pensions be put upon the ground of extreme suffering, unless we propose in all instances to estimate, in rating the pensions granted by Congress, the physical and mental pain endured by the soldier from any and every cause incident to his service. A great number of soldiers other than these suffered cruel hardships, and, in imminent danger of death, languished in hospitals and in prisons, and no reason exists why these few soldiers should be pensioned for such suffering while the many similarly situated are not pensioned.

"To rate pensions according to the amount of suffering endured, either physical or mental, is manifestly impracticable, even if such causes were admitted to be just ground for pension. Nor does the fear of an ignominious death as a spy seem to the committee to furnish a basis for a pension any more than the fear of death consequent upon battle or other dangerous service. If it be said that the disability of soldiers who suffered such imprisonment and endured such hardships, should be presumed to be the result of such imprisonment and hardships, such considerations would only justify the granting of pensions to the petitioners according to the disability which might be found, upon medical and other testimony, actually to exist, and not the establishing of a uniform rate of $20 per month for each.

"It is not to be presumed that each of these petitioners is equally disabled. It is possible that some of them may be entitled, under the existing provisions of the general law, to a higher rating even than $20 per month, while it is probable, to say the least, that some of them are not sufficiently disabled to justify such a rating. However that may be, the law provides an equal rule for all.

"The Pension Office is liberal in the administration of the law, and if in particular instances the Commissioner of Pensions fails to rate a pension under the law according to the degree of disability, it will not be questioned that Congress is exceedingly liberal in granting increases in such cases. The committee do not believe it wise or expedient to single out particular soldiers, or particular classes of soldiers, and grant them pensions of greater rates than the pensions granted to others for similar disabilities.

"The petitioners were brave and patriotic; their bravery excites our admiration, and their suffering enlists our sympathy; and while a special compensation for such bravery and such suffering may at first sight seem an act of justice, it needs but a little reflection to see that it is an act of palpable injustice to the thousands of unnoticed and unrewarded soldiers whose bravery and sufferings equally compel our admiration and our sympathy. In view of these considerations, your committee recommend the indefinite postponement of the bill.

"HOWELL E. JACKSON.
"JAS. H. SLATER.
"A. H. COLQUITT."

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommended an amendment, striking out, in line 11 of the bill, the words "June 2, 1881," and inserting in lieu thereof the words "July 7, 1884."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the words "July 7, 1884," and insert in lieu thereof the words "from and after the passage of this bill."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. WINANS moved that the committee rise, but immediately withdrew the motion.

M. LOUISE BUTLER.

Mr. HAYNES. I call up the bill (S. 773) granting a pension to M. Louise Butler.

The bill was read.

Mr. TAULBEE. I object to the consideration of that bill.

MRS. ANNA ETHERIDGE HOOKS.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Chairman, I call up the bill (S. 2884) granting a pension to Anna Etheridge Hooks.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. Anna Etheridge Hooks, a volunteer nurse in the late war, at the rate of $25 per month.

Mr. CUTCHEON. As the report is somewhat long, I think I can state the merits of the case more briefly.

Several MEMBERS. State it.

Mr. CUTCHEON. This lady was a volunteer nurse in the Army of the Potomac for four years. She went out with the three-months men at the beginning of the war; she was always at the front, and was in twenty-eight battles, because she was always at the field hospital.

She was known, I think, to every member of the old Kearney division, afterward the Birney division; her name then was Anna Etheridge. She was complimented in general orders by General Birney; she was decorated with the Kearney cross in the presence of the entire division; she served to the end of the war, and altogether she has a record such as I think no other woman in America has.

Several MEMBERS. That is enough.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I have a bill for a case almost exactly like that. [Laughter.]

Mr. WALLACE. What is the amount of the pension proposed?

Mr. CUTCHEON. Twenty-five dollars a month. This lady is poor; she has no means, and thousands of men of the old Kearney and Birney division are praying for the passage of this bill.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. We will answer their prayers.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

REBECCA MORRIS.

Mr. O'HARA. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8486) granting a pension to Rebecca Morris.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Rebecca Morris, dependent mother of William E. Morris, late a private in Company C, Fifty-fifth Massachusetts Volunteers, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The report (by Mr. O'HARA) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8486) granting a pension to Rebecca Morris, have had the same under consideration, and submit the following report:

Claimant is the dependent mother of William E. Morris, late private Company B, Fifty-fifth Massachusetts Volunteers (colored), who enlisted May 17, 1863; discharged August 29, 1865; died October 27, 1878. Claim rejected on the ground that there is no record of the fatal disease while in the service, no medical evidence showing the existence of same in service or at or after discharge, and the claimant declares her inability to furnish the same.

William H. Furnoh, comrade, testifies that—

"He entered with soldier in Company B, Fifty-fifth Massachusetts Volunteers; had known him many years prior to his enlistment; knew him during service, and also intimately from discharge to death, October 27, 1878. Soldier was a hale, hearty young man when he entered the service; contracted disease of the lungs from exposure at Jacksonville, Fla. Had a severe cough. He remained with the regiment, refusing to go to the hospital, but a great part of the time was excused from duty on account of physical disability.

"At discharge he had lung disease and a bad cough, from which he never recovered. He died from disease contracted in service. His attending physician, Dr. Bayard T. Smith, is now dead. Soldier prior to his enlistment worked in a brick-yard. While in the Army his health broke down; he complained of pain in his side, had a severe cough, and spat up blood. He was in this condition at discharge, and grew worse, and spitting up blood and corruption, with a severe cough. Was never able to work at his old trade; was unable to perform manual labor, became deaf and blind, with fearful discharges from his nostrils and mouth, from which he died."

Edmund H. Anderson testifies—

"That he has known soldier, William Emory Morris—who served as Emory Morris in Company B, Fifty-fifth Massachusetts Volunteers—from the time he was an infant. At enlistment he was a hale, healthy young man, but when he returned from the Army he was suffering from disease of the lungs, and had a severe cough, which he contracted in the service, from which he died."

Dr. Bayard T. Smith, soldier's attending physician, has died since soldier's death. Soldier was never able to perform manual labor after his return from the Army.

Hon. CHARLES B. LORE, member of the present House from Delaware, states that the character of witness, Edmund H. Anderson, is excellent for truth, and he is in every way a reliable man.

The evidence of claimant's dependence on soldier for support is abundant and very strong. Soldier during his lifetime faithfully contributed to his mother's support.

This claimant is at present quite old, and cannot live many more years; is in a condition of abject poverty.

Your committee are of the opinion that this is a worthy case for a mother's pension, and recommend the passage of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

There being no objection, the Committee of the Whole proceeded to consider the bill; and it was laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. FARQUHAR obtained the floor.

Mr. WALLACE. I demand the regular order.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I desire to call up the bill (S. 1463) granting arrears of pension to Mary Helena Mahan.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana demands the regular order, which is equivalent to an objection.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Unanimous consent is the regular order.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I think the gentleman from Louisiana would not object to my bill. I have in my charge the case of another Army nurse.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Louisiana withdraw the demand for the regular order?

Mr. WALLACE. I will withdraw it for the consideration of one more bill, but after that I shall insist on the regular order.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. If another bill is to be considered let it be my bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FARQUHAR] has been recognized.

MARY HELENA MAHAN.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (S. 1463) granting arrears of pension to Mary Helena Mahan.

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas Mary Helena Mahan, widow of Colonel and Professor Dennis H. Mahan, of the United States Army, was placed on the pension-roll on the 14th day of August, 1882, and from which date payment of said pension was made: Therefore,

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to readjudicate the pension claim of Mary Helena Mahan, widow of Dennis H. Mahan, as if her application had been filed in the office of the Commissioner of Pensions prior to the 1st day of July, 1880, and to pay, or cause to be paid, to the aforesaid Mary Helena Mahan a pension, at the rate prescribed by law, from the date of death of the said Dennis H. Mahan: Provided, That all sums previously paid on account of pension to the said Mary Helena Mahan be deducted.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Mr. Chairman, as the report in this case is quite long, covering four pages of small type, I request, on account of the merits of the case and in order to save time at this late hour, that the report be printed in the RECORD without reading.

Mr. TAULBEE. Are there any amendments proposed to the bill?

Mr. FARQUHAR. None.

Mr. TAULBEE. Then I shall object to the bill.

Mr. FARQUHAR. It simply grants arrears.

Mr. TAULBEE. That is a thing we never do; we never pass bills of that kind.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. TAULBEE. Yes, sir; I object.

Mr. WALLACE. I call for the regular order.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Mr. Chairman, I understand the objections to this bill have reference to the adjudication of arrears. I wish to say that two cases of a like kind have already been passed. One is the case of Professor French; the other that of Professor Agnel. One of these cases was sustained by an opinion of the Attorney-General, and was passed upon by the Pension Department. The other was passed through Congress only a year or two ago.

Now, this case can be adjudicated only by Congress itself. Unfortunately for Mrs. Mahan, who is the widow of one of the noblest men that ever taught the art of war in America, a man who was for years the head of our great Military Academy, who was the teacher of our Grants, our Lees, and numerous distinguished military leaders—this lady unfortunately did not make her application properly for arrears until after July 1, 1880, the limitation of the time designated for the presentation of such applications.

The action proposed in this case is, as I have said, in accordance with what has already been done in two other cases. This is the only remaining case of the kind that can come before any Congress. In consideration of the services of this lady's husband for forty years, the mentor of the Military Academy, and in consideration of the fact that others less deserving have received at the hands of Congress the recognition here proposed, I ask that this bill be laid aside to be reported favorably to the House. I ask this as a matter of bare justice. I have no sentiment in this case. I appeal to the manhood of every member that this old lady shall be treated with as much consideration as other Congresses have extended in other cases less worthy. With this statement I leave the case with the House.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. TAULBEE. I insist on my objection.

Mr. WHEELER. Let the bill be reported from the Committee of the Whole, and let us have a vote in a full House.

Mr. TAULBEE. No.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection being made to the consideration of the bill, it is not in order.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Several members addressed the Chair.

Mr. WALLACE. The regular order is called for.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana demands the regular order, which is equivalent to an objection to further requests for unanimous consent.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I submit that unanimous consent is the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. It is until some member objects.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Bills have been passed during the whole evening by unanimous consent, and now there are only a few of us left who have not enjoyed that courtesy.

Mr. ROWELL. I want to ask unanimous consent, not to call up a bill but to print some remarks in the RECORD on a pension bill.

Mr. TAULBEE. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois to print some remarks in the RECORD upon a pension bill?

Mr. TAULBEE. Yes, sir; I object unless I know what they are about.

Mr. ROWELL. I can not tell their substance until I have written them.

Mr. WINANS. I move that the committee now rise.

The motion was not agreed to, there being—ayes 9, noes 25.

Mr. WALLACE. I demand the regular order of business.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6162) granting a pension to Joseph Potter.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. There is no one who calls that bill up, and I therefore move it be passed over informally.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. SPOONER].

Mr. WALLACE. I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8828) granting a pension to Giles Wright.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. There is no one present to call up that bill, and I move it be passed over informally.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LITTLE].

Mr. LITTLE. I ask unanimous consent to substitute a Senate bill for that House bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. PERKINS. No objection.

Mr. WALLACE. I shall call for a quorum.

Mr. TAULBEE. Let us have the House bill read.

The bill was read.

Mr. WALLACE. Has the Senate bill been read?

The CHAIRMAN. It has not.

Mr. WALLACE. What is the Senate bill?

Mr. LITTLE. It is a bill (S. 1838) to increase the pension of George R. Hooper.

Mr. WALLACE. What is the gentleman's request?

Mr. LITTLE. I ask for the consideration of this Senate bill in place of the House bill the title of which has been read. I will state that I was requested by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG], who is necessarily absent this evening, to ask for the consideration of that Senate bill. I hope the House will grant unanimous consent to take it up at this time.

A MEMBER. The Senate bill is not the same as the House bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the claimant the same in each case?

Mr. LITTLE. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. It will not be in order to call up a Senate bill for a different person.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I move that that bill be passed over.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection the House bill, the title of which was read, will be passed over for the present. The Chair hears no objection, and it is ordered accordingly.

Mr. WALLACE. Is this Senate bill the same as the House bill?

Mr. LITTLE. It is not.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has ruled on that motion, and the House bill has been laid aside informally. There being no objection, the Clerk will read the title of the next bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6823) granting a pension to Peter P. Hoffman.

Mr. WINANS. I move that the committee rise. [Cries of "Oh, no!"]

Mr. CONGER. I ask for a division.

The committee divided, and there were—ayes 19, noes 15.

So the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. VAN EATON having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. RICHARDSON reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar had, according to order, had under consideration the special business set apart for this evening, and had directed him to report back to the House sundry bills with various recommendations, some with and some without amendments.

Mr. NELSON. I ask, by unanimous consent, the vote be taken on all the bills together; first, on those to which there are no amendments, and then on those to which there are amendments. For instance, that the question on ordering the bills to be engrossed and read a third time shall be put on all the bills to which there is no amendments together and not separately.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House has heard the motion. Is there objection to it?

There was no objection; and it was ordered accordingly.

BILLS PASSED.

Bills of the following titles, to which there were no amendments, were ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed they were accordingly read the third time, and passed:

A bill (S. 2519) granting an increase of pension to Richard B. Rians.

The bill (S. 1783) granting an increase of pension to George Bliss was indefinitely postponed, in compliance with the recommendation of the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. NELSON moved to reconsider the several votes taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I think the bill I hold in my hand was passed over by mistake in the regular order while I was otherwise engaged. I ask consent, therefore, that it be taken up now and put upon its passage. It is a bill pensioning James Smithpeter, and I am satisfied there will be no objection to it.

Mr. WALLACE. I think we have passed enough bills to-night.

Mr. PERKINS. This bill was passed over by mistake.

Mr. WALLACE. I must insist upon my objection.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. ROWELL. I would like to renew my request to be permitted to publish some remarks in the RECORD upon a pension bill, which request was objected to a short time since.

Mr. TAULBEE. I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection the gentleman will be permitted to print remarks in the RECORD upon a pension bill.

There was no objection.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

REPORT ON THE CONGO COUNTRY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Navy; which was read, as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, February 1, 1887.

SIR: In compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the 27th ultimo, I have the honor to transmit herewith a copy of a report submitted to the Navy Department by Lieut. E. H. Taunt, United States Navy, after completing a six months' journey on the River Congo, Central Africa. Accompanying the report will be found certain documents, together with samples of materials likely to be used in the region of that river and specimens of the articles used as currency in the different localities specified in the accompanying memorandum.

Should the report be printed, I have the honor to request that one thousand (1,000) copies may be supplied for the use of the Navy Department.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. C. WHITNEY,
Secretary of the Navy.

Hon. JOHN SHERMAN,
President of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the following order will be made in respect to the communication:

Ordered, That the letter of the Secretary of the Navy and accompanying documents be printed and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, together with the articles, ornaments, and coins accompanying said letter, to be returned to the Secretary of the Navy.

REPORT OF COMMISSIONER OF PATENTS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the annual report of the Commissioner of Patents for the year 1886; which was referred to the Committee on Patents, and ordered to be printed.

MRS. HENRIETTA M. DRUM HUNT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives non-concurring in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8869) granting a pension to Mrs. Henrietta M. Drum Hunt, further insisting upon its disagreement to the amendment, and asking for a further conference thereon.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Pennsylvania. I move that the request of the House of Representatives be complied with, and that a committee of conference be appointed on the part of the Senate. I suggest that the same committee be appointed that acted before.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania moves that the request of the House of Representatives be complied with, and that a new committee of conference be appointed.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. MITCHELL, of Pennsylvania, Mr. BLAIR, and Mr. WHITTHORNE were appointed.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 7508) granting the right of way to the Annapolis and Baltimore Short-Line Railroad Company across the Government farm connected with the Naval Acadamy at Annapolis, Md., was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

RAILROAD ATTORNEYS—PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to state that I was not present yesterday when the vote was taken on what is called the railroad attorneys bill. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] had agreed to arrange a pair between the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] and myself, but not having informed him the Senator from Indiana did not know the fact and voted. If I had been here I should have voted "nay" on the passage of that bill.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a joint resolution adopted by the General Assembly of Ohio; which was referred to the Committee on the Library, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Joint resolution relative to requesting our Senators and Representatives in Congress to do all possible for the passage of the bill S. 1976.

Mr. VEST. Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Jane Brown Dunn, daughter of William H. H. Dunn, late a private in Company A, Sixth Regiment Indiana Volunteers, and Company L, Fourth Indiana Cavalry, and to pay her a pension of $12 per month from and after the passage of this act.

McWhorter, late first lieutenant of Company C, Thirteenth Regiment Kentucky Cavalry, and pay him a pension, from and after the date of his disability, in the same manner and to the same extent as would have been done had his application been received and filed in the Pension Office prior to July 1, 1880.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report in that case be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. SAWYER, January 18, 1887:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2670) granting an increase of pension to James H. Thomas, have examined the same, and report:

The history of this case shows that James H. Thomas was a private in Company I, Thirty-second Iowa Infantry; that he enlisted August 19, 1862; that he was discharged June 2, 1865; that he was pensioned for pulmonary disease, first at the rate of $2 per month, which was increased to $6 per month. The bill for his relief provides for an increase to the rate of $12 per month. There is no question as to the incurrence of lung disease in the service and in the line of duty. All of the medical examinations agree as to the nature of the disease. The board by whom he was examined in April last recommended an increase to $10 per month. He is now over sixty years old, has a quick pulse and rapid respiration, and it is evident that he is totally disqualified for manual labor, and that he has no resources except his pension.

The committee therefore report the bill favorably, with a recommendation that it do pass.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is the duty of the Chair, the hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, to lay before the Senate the first special order, being the bill (S. 2288) to incorporate the Atlantic and Pacific Ship-Railway Company, and for other purposes.

Mr. DAWES. I was going to ask the consent of the Senate to take up one or two bills to authorize the construction of railroads through Indian reservations and to pass them at this time. It is quite important to do so.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I hope that motion will prevail.

Mr. DAWES. Some of these bills have passed the other branch and work is stopped on the roads because of the want of consent to cross these reservations.

Mr. VEST. I hope that will not be done, but that the Senate will proceed with the special order. It has been here now for some time. I have waited very patiently and have had this bill thrust aside.

Mr. DAWES. What is it?

Mr. VEST. It is the Atlantic and Pacific ship-railway bill. I want the bill taken up and disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The special order is before the Senate. Did the Senator from Massachusetts make a motion?

Mr. DAWES. I withdraw it for the purpose suggested by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to have the attention of the Senate for a few moments to an important bill reported unanimously by the Committee on Finance, and which I think will excite no discussion, and I hope to pass it in a very few minutes. I move that Senate bill 3114 be taken up for present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont asks that the pending bill be informally laid aside with a view to proceed to the consideration of the bill named by him.

Mr. VEST. I hope not.

Mr. MORRILL. It is the Freedman's Bank bill, and will not take long.

Mr. VEST. That will elicit discussion. I do not know any bill on the Calendar calculated to do so much good as the bill which is the special order. As far as I am concerned, I can not vote to take up now the bill of the Senator from Vermont, because it will lead to discussion.

Mr. MORRILL. Oh, no.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will submit the question to the Senate. The Senator from Vermont moves to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3114) to reimburse the depositors of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company for losses incurred by the failure of said company. The question is on that motion. [Putting the question.] The noes appear to have it.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask for a division.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A division is called for.

Mr. MORRILL. I will say that I do not think there will be any discussion in relation to this matter. I shall make a brief statement of the facts which are involved and nothing more. The bill has been carefully considered by the Treasury Department and by the Committee on Finance, and we have got it in as perfect a form as we know how. I do not think it will occupy very much time.

Mr. DAWES. I hope this will not be done. I gave way with matters which I thought were of as much importance as that bill, because the Senator from Missouri appealed to me, as I think he appealed to the Senator from Vermont after that.

Mr. VEST. I do not yield.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont, upon which a division has been asked for.

The question being put, the ayes were 6.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is not a sufficient number up. The special order is before the Senate. It will be read at length.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Before considering that matter I ask the Senator from Missouri to permit me to make a personal explanation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey rises to a personal explanation.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Several Senators have called my attention this morning to an article in the New York World, in which it appears I am supposed to be quoted as making some statement touching a brother Senator. Were it not for the fact that several Senators have called my attention to it I would not rise now to make any explanation or any statement concerning it; but I think by a careful reading of the article in question it will be found that I am not quoted as making any such a statement as Senators believe that I am. I will read the article.

Senator MCPHERSON, of New Jersey, said this afternoon: "This is a very great triumph for The World."

This appears in quotation marks, as will be observed by a careful reading of the article.

"This is a very great triumph for The World. Its revelations have produced this action to-day. It was very clear to my mind that as soon as Congress comprehended the true nature of the exposures made by The World that very vigorous steps would be taken to bring these Pacific railroads to book."

This statement I did make, and I stand by it and emphasize it now. That appears in quotation marks in the publication in The World. It goes on to say, however, as follows, which is not in quotation marks, and does not quote me as having said it:

It is believed the investigation will lead to such disclosures that Senator STANFORD will be willing to resign his seat in the Senate. He will have to explain his share of the $2,000,000 of illegal expenditures. If it can be shown that he is responsible for the disbursement of any of the lobby money since his election as Senator, he can be proceeded against for expulsion.

It will be noticed that the World does not charge or credit me with having made any such statement whatever, it not appearing in quotation marks as a statement made by me. The high character of the correspondent of the World forbids that he should quote me or any Senator, I believe, as making statements he did not make. Further than that the pleasant relations I have always had with the Senator from California forbid that I should make any statement of the character mentioned here, either upon the floor of the Senate or elsewhere, about matters of which I have no knowledge whatever.

Hence, I make this explanation that there may be no longer any misapprehension touching the subject, for the New York World does not quote me as having made any such statement, as a careful reading of the article will show. I make this explanation because the article in the "World" has been misapprehended by several Senators who have called my attention to it this morning.

WILLIAM KNIGHT AND OTHERS.

Mr. ALDRICH. I am directed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1986) granting a pension to William Knight, to report it with an amendment. This is a bill which should have been reported a few days ago and considered this morning with the other pension bills. I ask that it be taken up now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. By unanimous consent the bill may be considered now.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 1986) granting a pension to William Knight was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment of the Committee on Pensions was to insert, at the end of the bill, "and Jacob Parrott, William Reddick, and John Whollam, late of the Thirty-third Ohio Volunteer Infantry;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the act approved July 7, 1884, entitled "An act granting pensions to Wilson W. Brown and others," the name of William Knight, late of Company E, Twenty-first Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and Jacob Parrott, William Reddick, and John Whollam, late of the Thirty-third Ohio Volunteer Infantry.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting pensions to William Knight, Jacob Parrott, William Reddick, and John Whollam."

AMENDMENT TO A BILL.

Mr. GEORGE, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the Agricultural appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

ATLANTIC AND PACIFC SHIP-RAILWAY.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2288) to incorporate the Atlantic and Pacific Ship-railway Company, and for other purposes.

Mr. VEST. I ask that the reading of the original bill be dispensed with and that the amendment be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed, in the nature of a substitute, will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the Government of Mexico has granted unto James B. Eads, or to such company as he may organize, a concession containing certain powers, rights, and privileges in the matter of the construction and operation of a ship-railway across the Isthmus of Tehuantepec, with an accessory railway, lines of telegraph, and water approaches, and has authorized said Eads to obtain a charter for said company either in Mexico or elsewhere: Therefore,

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That for the purpose of constructing and operating said ship-railway and its accessories hereinbefore recited, and for the full enjoyment of all the rights, privileges, and concessions contained in the hereinbefore-recited grant, and such others as may be hereafter secured from the Government of Mexico, said James B. Farrar, of New Orleans, La., with such others as may be associated, and their successors, are hereby created a body corporate and politic in deed and in law under and by the name, style, and title of "The Atlantic and Pacific Ship-Railway Company," and by that name shall have perpetual succession, and shall be able to sue and be sued, plead and be impleaded, defend and be defended, in all courts of law and equity within the United States of America, and shall generally have and possess all the rights, privileges, and powers usually possessed by similar companies, and may do all lawful things necessary to carry into effect the purposes of this act, and secure the full enjoyment of the powers, privileges, rights, and concessions contained in the grant hereinbefore recited, and any supplementary grant; and said company is hereby authorized and empowered to make and have a common seal, to acquire, hold, transfer, or otherwise dispose of property, real and personal, to issue capital stock and bonds in such amount, which shall not, however, exceed in the aggregate $100,000.000, and to elect such officers, employ such agents and attorneys, establish such offices in such place or places, and impose and collect such tolls, rates, and charges as to it, said company, may seem necessary and proper; and said company is hereby authorized and empowered to make such by-laws, rules, and regulations as it may deem necessary and proper relating to the management of the affairs of the company; the issue and sale of its stock and bonds; the acquisition and disposal of its property, estate, and effects; the imposition and collection of its tolls, rates, and charges; the declaration of dividends on its capital stock; the number and character of its officers, their duties and terms of office; the safety and control of vessels in transit or in the docks, harbors, or works of the company; and relating to all other matters not inconsistent with this act, and connected with the business of said company or involved in carrying out the purposes for which said company is created.

SEC. 2. That said corporation shall exist and continue during the period of ninety-nine years from the date of the passage of this act.

SEC. 3. That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed, so far as they affect the corporation hereby created.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to ask the Senator from Missouri, as this company seems to be authorized to issue a very large amount of capital stock and bonds, whether or not there is any provision in the proposed charter that there shall be any actual capital paid in? Can they issue all, or nearly the whole, of this amount in bonds, making it a rather doubtful speculation? It strikes me that there ought to be a certain amount of capital actually paid in before they are authorized to issue a very large amount of bonds. The public is liable to be swindled.

Mr. VEST. I have no sort of objection to a provision being put in the bill requiring that a certain amount of the capital stock shall be paid in, and I have drawn up an amendment of that sort which I think will meet the views of the Senator from Vermont.

That if stock to the amount of $10,000,000 shall not be subscribed, and 10 per cent. thereof actually paid in before the expiration of two years next after the passage of this act, or if the work of constructing said railway shall not be actually commenced before and be in progress at the expiration of four years next after the passage of this act, the said corporation shall be deemed to have expired by limitation, and all its franchises and privileges shall be deemed to have absolutely ceased and become determined.

Mr. MORRILL. But that would be a very feeble limitation, merely providing that 10 per cent. should be paid in on $10,000,000, which would be $1,000,000; and then the company could issue $99,000,000 in bonds. I do not think such a corporation ought to be chartered by the Congress of the United States. I think there ought to be at least an equal amount of capital paid up to the sum of ten millions before such a charter as that is granted. It would be very easy for any band of speculators if they could get hold of this charter to pay in a million dollars, and then issue bonds for three or four times the amount, and recoup the amount they had paid out.

Mr. PLUMB. It would be a question who would buy the bonds. I have not read the terms of the charter and care nothing about it except that some very eminent men in this country are desiring it for the purpose of building a railroad, not on American soil but on Mexican soil. I am willing to give them, as far as my vote goes, whatever inducement can be given by way of chartered privileges to enable them to get together the moeyn to build this railroad and to try this experiment about which so much has been said. I have had my doubts about its being practicable, doubts which, I confess, when I have talked with Mr. Eads he has resolved, but the moment I got away from him they would come back again. Still, it is a very interesting question. It is a new field of investment and one in which Congress is only asked to give a charter. I think that the wise people or the unwise people, as the case may be, with whose money this railroad is to be built if built at all, may be relied on to protect themselves. They are not going to buy bonds because somebody has had them lithographed and signed. They will inquire what is back of them.

It is very likely to happen that whoever puts in a million dollars will take it out, as I am entirely willing he should take it out, in bonds; but do not give the company any authority to levy any exorbitant toll on the commerce of the country which will pass over the railroad. That is where the public may need protection.

Mr. MORRILL. I do not oppose the idea of having this railroad charter granted, and I fully accord with the Senator from Kansas that I have no objection to the company issuing bonds of equal amount with the amount of capital paid in. I would even be more liberal than that. But I do think that there ought to be more capital than the one-hundredth part of the sum allowed actually paid in before they are authorized to issue $99,000,000 of bonds.

Mr. DOLPH. I should like to have the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Missouri send his amendment to the desk?

Mr. VEST. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SEC. —. That if stock to the amount of $10,000,000 shall not be subscribed, and 10 per cent. thereof actually paid in, before the expiration of two years next after the passage of this act, or if the work of constructing said railway shall not be actually commenced before and be in progress at the expiration of four years next after the passage of this act, the said corporation shall be deemed to have expired by limitation, and all its franchises and privileges shall be deemed to have absolutely ceased and become determined.

Mr. DOLPH. I do not desire to antagonize the bill, but I call the attention of the Senator from Missouri to what seem to me rather loose provisions in this bill in regard to the issuing of stock and bonds.

If the Senator will refer to the printed copy of the proposed substitute for the bill, at the top of page 5, he will find that among the powers granted to the corporation are—

To issue capital stock and bonds in such amount, which shall not, however, exceed in the aggregate $100,000,000.

Then, further down, in line 89—

To make such by-laws, rules, and regulations as it may deem necessary and proper relating to the management of the affairs of the company; the issue and sale of its stock and bonds.

There is nothing in the bill itself requiring that books shall be opened and that stock shall only be issued on subscriptions to the capital. I would suggest that to this amendment the Senator had better add, "no stock shall be issued except upon subscription for the stock on the books of the company," or something of that kind, to show that the stock is not to be peddled out as the company may be disposed to use it, without reference to any amount paid for it, but that it should be regularly subscribed for.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] to the amendment.

Mr. VEST. In regard to what is said by the Senator from Vermont, it seems to me that these provisions secure the issue of stock. The provision of the amendment I have offered is that $10,000,000 shall be subscribed out of a possible capital stock of $100,000,000, and upon that $10,000,000 one-tenth, or $1,000,000, shall be paid in money. As the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] has stated, it is not supposed anybody will invest in this stock without looking into the details of the enterprise, and if he invests money he will see that it is secure.

The names of the gentlemen who are incorporators in this company are of themselves a sufficient guaranty that this is no wild-goose chase, no project for the purpose of seducing or inducing the unwary to put their money into this enterprise. These men represent a capital of from fifty to one hundred million dollars. One of them alone is worth more than $40,000,000, one of the largest ship-builders in the United States. Four hundred thousand dollars has already been expended upon this enterprise in actual money for the purpose of preventing the concession made by Mexico from terminating by reason of the enterprise not having been commenced within a certain time. There are $400,000 already expended and $10,000,000 to be subscribed, and one million of that is to be paid in. This is an absolute guaranty. Nothing is asked of the Government, not one dollar, no guaranty, nothing but a naked incorporation. If Captain Eads can persuade investors to put their money into this enterprise it is a matter between him and them. The Government in no sort of way is liable.

Mr. DOLPH. I admit that, but that is not the proposition I am driving at.

The incorporation of this company is something valuable in itself, a company which is to transact its entire business outside of the boundaries of the United States, but which is a corporation created by the Congress of the United States, and which may sue and be sued and be impleaded in the courts of the United States.

It is usual in acts of incorporation to provide that the incorporators or others named shall open stock books for the purpose of receiving subscriptions to the capital stock. That is not done in this case. The omission may be intentional or it may be unintentional.

The amendment of the Senator from Missouri would require that $10,000,000 of the stock, that is one-tenth of the stock, should be subscribed, and that $1,000,000, or one-tenth of that subscription to the capital stock of the company, should be paid in within a certain time, or the charter should be forfeited. I have no objection to that. Undoubtedly his amendment would require the subscription of one-tenth the capital stock; but what is to be done with the other $90,000,000 of capital stock is the question I have in view? They may issue stock and bonds amounting in the aggregate to $100,000,000. What is to be done with the balance of the capital stock and bonds amounting to $90,000,000? The bonds may be sold and distributed as they please; for all that is contained in this bill, they may take whatever they can get for them; they may barter them away as they please, so that they secure the construction of the road. But ought the stock to be held in the company's treasury and to be disposed of in the same manner or ought a subscription to the capital stock to be required so that some liability is secured on the part of the stockholder to the company when the stock is issued?

If that is the intention of the bill and it is so understood I am content; but if it is the intention of the bill and the understanding of the Senate that this stock is to be subscribed, and that the people who subscribe it are to bear the usual relation of stockholders to the corporation, it seems to me it ought to be provided that the stock shall be subscribed, and then a contract is made between the stockholders and the company. There is nothing that I see in this bill as now drawn, even with the amendment of the Senator from Missouri, to prevent all the capital stock except $10,000,000 being sold for 10 per cent. on the dollar, or 5 per cent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, in the chair). The question is on the amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. MORGAN. The suggestion of the Senator from Oregon is, I think, important. There is so far no provision in this bill which would exempt the United States Government from liability some day or other upon this act of incorporation on bonds that might hereafter be issued by this company. There ought to be in this bill an express provision that the United States Government shall not be bound in any way for any bonds or stock or any other transaction of this or any other company that may be authorized to build a railway or canal across the Central American States.

When the Government of the United States authorizes an issue of bonds that is a very high sanction to this company and gives it very great credit with all the people of the world in the sale of its bonds, and it will be understood that we would not do that unless we had perfect confidence in the ability of the company to meet its obligations and perfect confidence in the validity of the bonds and in the manner of their distribution, and the hands into which they should go. I do not wish any act of this kind to be passed here that would open us in any sense to subsequent reclamations or to complaints on the part of any person whatsoever.

This bill is not at all guarded in that particular. I think the Senator from Missouri ought to put in a stipulation to the effect suggested by the Senator from Oregon, and I hope the Senator from Oregon will prepare an amendment to cover his suggestion to this bill on that subject. There ought to be also another provision here that no part of the capital stock paid in shall be at any time withdrawn and returned to the stockholders or in any manner diverted from the proper uses of the incorporation. And there ought to be a provision that every person who violates this provision of the act shall be held guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof punished by a fine, whatever the Senate may think proper to impose, and by imprisonment if that should be deemed necessary.

In organizing these great corporations, which must control the commerce of this country very largely, especially between the Atlantic and the Pacific, and which are throwing upon the markets of the world an enormous mass of credit, we can not be too particular to see that what privileges we grant to them are guarded in such a way as that there will be no fraud perpetrated upon anybody; that there will be no opportunity for it.

The Senator from Missouri refers to the character of the gentlemen who are the incorporators. That certainly is very high, and as far as that can go it furnishes a guaranty; but it is our business, I think, to furnish the guaranty in the body of the statute to the stockholders and to all persons interested in this corporation, so that there will be no abuse of its privileges under any circumstances. I do not know whether the Senator from Oregon intends to formulate his amendment or not. The bill having been called up just a moment ago, during my absence from the Chamber, I have not myself undertaken to prepare the amendment he suggests; but I hope that the Senator from Missouri will put it in. I think it would strengthen his bill. Indeed, it would be an advantage to this corporation in its credit with the world if it were seen that Congress is putting in this bill such checks and restrictions upon the use of the power to issue bonds, and also upon the power to issue certificates of capital stock. That would give the world confidence in it.

Now, Mr. President, while I am on my feet I desire to say a few words about this and about other transits across the Isthmus of Darien or across the Central American States and Mexico. I conceive that there can be nothing more important to the people of the United States than enterprises of this character. In fact, in the light of present civilization and in the perfection of engineering and in the accumulations of capital at various centers in this and in other countries, I can not understand how we can be at all reluctant in going, as far as we are permitted to go, into the construction of a ship transit across this isthmus.

The amount of money that the corporations and those who are engaged in this work may make is a matter of inconsiderable importance; and yet if we take the history of the Suez Canal we find that that amount of money is going to be extremely large, and that year by year after this transit is opened through Central America the profits from ships passing through will increase continually, and that of itself would be an important consideration in favor of giving to Americans an opportunity of owning and controling this vast and valuable property. But no matter what may occur in that direction, no matter how much increased or enlarged the value of this franchise may be in time to come, it can bear no comparison with the necessity which rests upon this country of increasing its commercial facilities on the Pacific Ocean and the advantages that must result from that being done.

The remoteness of our coast from Southern California to Alaska from the eastern shores of the United States, in consequence of the intervening continent, is so great that whether we look at it in a military or commercial view we must see that we at this time are laboring under a disadvantage which it should cause us the greatest possible effort and care to overcome. I know that those are to be found—and I expect the world will class me in that company—who would have some doubt or some difficulty of a constitutional character in respect to doing work of this kind through the agencies of corporations that we may create ourselves. It might be said that there was no governmental purpose these corporations, we are creating here, were to perform, and that there was no warrant in the Constitution of the United States, of any express character, or one to be very clearly implied, giving us authority, as a Congress, to empower these corporations to go beyond our own limits and make arrangements under concessions from foreign governments; there to exercise within their borders the powers which we confer upon them, and at the same time that we should keep a certain degree of control over these corporations, so as to hold them amenable to our law, and the officers and agents thereof amenable even to our criminal law, for the protection of all concerned, and especially for the protection of the Government of the United States.

I desire to remark upon that branch of the subject, Mr. President, that while I am a strict constructionist of the Constitution of the United States, and would confine the powers of Congress to those subjects expressed in the body of that instrument or necessarily implied as being a part of the powers granted, I view all of these restrictions placed in the Constitution of the United States as guarantees in favor of American citizens either individually or in their collective capacity as States.

The object of the framers of the Constitution, in this particular, was to place American citizenship upon such a firm foundation of right and so thoroughly guaranteed in the instrument itself as that we should enjoy here the ancient liberties which had come down to us from our fathers without interruption by our own Government. The restraints found in the body of the instrument apply to citizens of the United States. The rights and privileges, very high privileges, which are granted to citizens of the United States, and guaranteed to them under the Constitution of the United States, are such as are given to no other people in the world. We do not give them to foreign countries or to foreign people. We expressly provide them for our own people and for their posterity.

Now, the Government of the United States being thus guarded and restricted in the exercise of its legislative powers in respect of the citizens and of the States, the next question arises what is this Government in its attitude to others and its relations with the other powers of the earth. We find no abridgment of the dignity, or of the power, or of the sovereignty, or of the supremacy of the United States as a Government when we come to compare its powers and its facilities with those of other nations with whom it must have international intercourse. No such restraint was ever intended to be imposed upon the Government of the United States, and when you take it as a unit in the character in which it operates in connection with the governments of foreign countries, the Government of the United States has as many inherent and essential powers as any government in the world. The Government of Russia, because of its autocratic form of administration and succession, and because it is not under the control or restraint of a parliament elected by the people, is supposed to be of all the nations of the earth the most powerful in its autonomy, the most powerful in respect of its organization. Nevertheless that government has no more power in the family of nations than this Republic, or this democracy, or whatever you please to call it.

The Government of the United States has not yielded to other nations of the earth any part of its powers. It has yielded some of its powers to the people of this country, and to the States of this country, but only to them. So when we come to look abroad beyond our own borders and consider what we may do in connection with or in respect of foreign countries, the Government of the United States is as unrestrained and as unrestricted as any other government in the world.

An ancient traditional policy has come down to us which we have always respected to a certain degree, that we would not intermeddle with the affairs of foreign countries. That is very correct, and yet there is nothing in the Constitution of the United States to prohibit us from doing it, or to restrain us if we saw proper to do it. We have interfered more or less with the affairs of foreign countries.

Another tradition has come down to us, that we are not to be a colonizing country, that we are not to have outlying territory beyond our own borders and beyond the seas that we can bring beneath the control of our flag and under our own Government. That is a mere traditional policy, and I do not conceive that we followed it in a very great degree, but literally and practically did we violate it when we bought Alaska from Russia, for there are some five or six hundred miles of land intervening between the northern border of Washington Territory and the southern border of Alaska. We have recently given to Alaska a form of civil government. It is now a Territory of the United States. How did we manage to do that if we have not overstepped the ancient line of policy which seemed to confine us to operations entirely within our own borders, as they have been enlarged from time to time by purchases and also by conquests?

So we see that the Government of the United States, upon all the precedents that we have seen proper to establish, has conceded to it, I believe by men of all parties and by statesmen of all the decades we have passed through, authority to deal with foreign powers upon the same broad principles and in the same broad way that any other government can, without restraint or restriction; and it is only left to us to determine in this generation whether the matters which are presented to us about which we are to deal and in which foreign governments are concerned, are matters which commend themselves to the wisdom of the American people. That is the only question that is open.

Now, that is precisely the attitude which we occupy toward the question of a water transit or a railway transit for ships from the Carribean Sea out into the Pacific Ocean, across the Central American States, at any point to which we may get the right to go. It is purely a question of policy, and nothing else. The question of power is not concerned in it.

I believe that it would have been wisdom in us, years and years ago, to have established by treaty such relations with some of the Central American States as that we should have had the right as a people, as a nation, to have carried our ships, by canal or otherwise, the best mode of conveyance we could find, across from ocean to ocean. If a policy of that kind could have been adopted twenty or thirty or fifty years ago, if the Government of the United States could have been thoroughly committed to that policy, we would have found ourselves within the last thirty years in possession of the means with which we could have established these transits without ever having felt the loss of the money, without having been embarrassed in the slightest degree by its expenditure.

So now, if we will start in with a policy in regard to this matter, and let it be understood (as was declared by the Senate, as I remember, on resolutions that were reported by the then Senator from Connecticut, Mr. Eaton, when he was chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations) that whatever transit there is across the isthmus shall be under the control of the American Government—if not absolutely and independently under its control, under its control in connection with the government through which the line of transit shall be established; but that no canal can be built across that isthmus unless the American Government gives its consent to its building.

That is the proposition which was in that resolution, and that is the true proposition of American policy upon this subject. It has been announced by various administrations, and it is a true, a wise, a sound, and an inevitable policy. It is one that we can not abandon without sacrificing our self-respect and without sacrificing into the hands of other nations of the earth the control, more or less, of our commerce in the Pacific Ocean and the protection of our own coasts in the West.

I believe the Senate of the United States is agreed that this policy ought to be adopted. I believe they are thoroughly agreed that whatever canal or railway passes across this isthmus over which ships are to be carried ought to be constructed by the consent of the Government of the United States, and that without such consent it can not be done. If we are agreed, as I hope we are, upon this main, leading proposition, nothing could receive from me a more cordial support than any reasonable enterprise through which this great result is to be accomplished.

If there exists a concession already from the Government of Mexico, I think it ought to be read and put in the RECORD so that we may understand exactly what we are legislating about. In the preamble of the bill it is stated that there is such a concession and that the bill has reference to that concession. If there is such a concession from Mexico to any company that we are about now to incorporate, and if the Government of Mexico and the gentlemen concerned here believe that they can accomplish the great result of the transmission of loaded ships across the Isthmus of Tehuantepec, I shall be rejoiced whenever they accomplish that result, as I think every American ought to be and will be. The men who are going to put their money into the enterprise ought to be the best judges, of course, as to whether the enterprise is going to pay.

I will make one observation on this enterprise, that to my mind it does not meet the whole necessities of the occasion. It may be that it will result only in having a double-track or a four-track railroad across the Isthmus of Tehuantepec. It may turn out that no ships at all can be safely carried across that isthmus. It may turn out that the insurance men are not willing to insure ships across that isthmus. But suppose it does turn out that way, still we have a very short line of railway transit across the Isthmus of Tehuantepec, and that surely would be a great advantage to the people of the United States.

I hope they may do better than that; I hope that they can carry ships of even more than 6,000 tons burden across that railway. I shall cheer them on in every way that I can in their efforts honestly bestowed and energetically bestowed in working out this great proposition, in which they have such entire confidence, for it can not result in harm to this country, and it is bound to result in good. Nevertheless, I do not believe that we can accomplish this American policy in that perfect degree which is necessary for the welfare of the people of the United States, by the mere building of a ship-railway for the transit of ships across the isthmus. I think we shall have to go further than that.

A project has been set on foot, and millions and millions of money have been spent upon it, to build a sea-level canal across the Isthmus of Panama. This country has kept a scrutinizing eye on the progress of that work, and I believe that nobody, except those engaged in its construction, has been satisfied that it ever could be accomplished on the original basis on which it was projected. I think the Government of the United States have been a little derelict, perhaps, in not informing France, if France be the power that is behind the constructors of the Panama Canal, that this Government has an interest in that question which is predominant over that of any other government in the world, and that certain guarantees are necessary to be given in respect of the transit of ships through that canal, which will entirely satisfy the people of the United States that, in peace or in war, their interests in connection with that isthmian transit are to be absolutely protected.

I happened this morning to see a letter from one of our ministers who was on his way to his post in a South American country, in which he remarked upon the recent great congregation of French and British ships on both sides of the Isthmus of Panama. Quite a number of vessels are there now; some of them are very heavy vessels, and the fact is given out to account for their presence that they are there to transfer their crews back and forth from the Atlantic to the Pacific squadron over the railway. It is stated that that is the object of their being present in Panama and on the coast of Panama. I do not intrepret that as being any sort of threat; but I do interpret it in this way, that both of those governments are on the lookout for their interests in that quarter, and it confirms what is stated by this officer; it confirms a belief which I have a long time had, that the islands which lie so conveniently near to the coasts of the isthmus at the mouth of that canal will be taken possession of and fortified by one of those great powers, which one I am not prepared now to determine. I think that it is a race of diligence as to which shall get it.

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question right there?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator understand that the large ships to which he refers as being there are war ships?

Mr. MORGAN. They are war ships. Some of the heaviest war ships in both navies are there now. My own belief is, and I throw it out for the consideration of the Senate, that those governments are preparing to seize islands in the vicinity of that canal with a view of having an independent right to them, with the power of fortifying them at their will and pleasure.

I advance this suggestion for the purpose of drawing an argument upon it. It may be a fact or it may not be a fact, but what have we got in that section of the world? What foothold have we got there? We have nothing at all except the precarious right that belongs to us, I suppose, under the Clayton-Bulwer treaty; that is the right to enjoy in common with Great Britain a protectorate over that part of the transit which may lie within the borders of the Central American States, not Colombia, where Panama is, but in the Central American States. That vague paper right which has now been upon our treaty-book for a great many years, and which is incapable almost of being expounded, which neither of these great governments understand alike or has ever understood alike—that vague paper right is all that we have got to show for years and years of contention and diplomatic effort in respect of the command and the control of the transit of the isthmus by ships of war or ships of commerce.

The islands lying north of there are in the doubtful or disputed possession of some of the small States of that country, and those great powers have nothing to do but go and establish themselves and raise their flag and have themselves in a position far better suited to offensive or defensive operations than the Island of Cyprus is in respect of the Suez Canal. Yet Great Britain did not leave her last great continental struggle without having drawn into her possession—it is true upon a quasi-lease, a sort of shrewd arrangement which she exercises over the Island of Cyprus—but she did not leave until she got her flag and her foothold planted there, and her naval stations in a position to command the entrance to the Suez Canal.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Alabama yield to me for a moment?

Mr. MORGAN. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. This is a very important subject, and I do not think it was expected by the Senate generally that it would be debated considerably to-day, the last day of the week, when the session usually is not very late. The Senator from Alabama is making a statement of extreme interest and importance, and I rise to ask him, the Senate being now rather thin, whether it would be more agreeable to him to finish his remarks to-day or to conclude them on Monday?

Mr. MORGAN. I should much prefer, if the Senate will indulge me, to go on upon Monday, because to-day I am very much out of health; I am not well at all.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Pending that motion, the Chair will take occasion to lay before the Senate bills received to-day from the House of Representatives.

Mr. HALE. I give notice that I shall offer an amendment to the bill which has been under consideration. I ask that it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment intended to be offered by the Senator from Maine will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

That except the guarantee to the extent of $7,500,000 expressly provided in this bill, the United States shall in no respect whatever be responsible or liable for any debt or obligation of said company, or for any of its transactions.

Mr. HALE. I shall offer that as a separate section.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be printed.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to have printed in the RECORD as part of my remarks the concession from Mexico to Mr. Eads and his associates. The Senate will want to see it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be printed as part of the Senator's remarks.

The concession is as follows:

CONCESSION FROM THE GOVERNMENT OF MEXICO TO JAMES B. EADS AND HIS ASSOCIATES.

ARTICLE 1. The American citizen, James B. Eads, of Saint Louis, State of Missouri, or the company which he may organize, is authorized to construct and to operate for ninety-nine years, counted from the date of the promulgation of this contract, a ship-railway, with its corresponding lines of telegraph, across the Isthmus of Tehuantepec.

ART. 2. The location of the line shall be that which, conformably to surveys made, may be the best for the establishment of communication between the two oceans; two copies of the surveys being presented for the approval of the department of public works, and of these one shall be returned to Eads or the company and the other shall be preserved in the archives of the department. The correctness of the surveys shall be certified by the government engineer, who is to be associated with those of Eads or the company, and whose remuneration (not to exceed $4,000 annually) shall be paid by Eads or the company.

ART. 3. Said Eads, or the company which he may organize, may construct the railway, telegraph, hydraulic works, and other accessory works and connections, as they may deem most convenient, and according as said Eads or said company may determine.

ART. 4. Eads or the company is authorized to construct on the line or near it all the edifices which to them may seem fit for the service of their railway, but they shall in no case construct forts nor any work intended for military uses. They may also make the works or improvements which they think fit, in the rivers or lagoons near the line aforesaid, without impeding the public use of them, and they may regulate, improve, or construct harbors in the Gulf of Mexico and in the Pacific Ocean, as well as all the hydraulic works which Eads or the company may consider necessary for the construction and operation of the railway and telegraph.

ART. 5. To said Eads or said company is granted a right of way of the width of 400 meters (1,312.36 feet) on each side of the road and its water communications, measured from the center line; in town lands this width shall be reduced to 200 meters (656.18 feet) measured in the same manner, while at stations the width shall, in like manner, be increased to 800 meters (2,624.72 feet). The same right being granted should a change be made in the line of the railway or its communications by land or water.

ART. 6. The lands comprised within the said zone, if they are wild and unimproved lands, shall be ceded by the government to Eads or to the company, without any remuneration whatever, and if they are not wild or unimproved they may be purchased by said Eads or the company, according to the laws relative to the taking of property for purposes of public utility; with the understanding that in either case they shall be devoted solely and exclusively to the service of the railway. Nevertheless, if it be possible, and be deemed proper, to establish settlements on any portion of said lands the company may do so, by permission of the executive, provided that it conform to the rules which he shall lay down in pursuance of the laws.

ART. 7. With the approval of the government, and gratuitously, Eads or the company may take from the public lands whatever materials are needed for the construction of the railway and other accessory works.

ART. 8. Eads or the company may take, conformably to the laws of expropriation on account of public utility, the lands and materials for construction belonging to private individuals which may be necessary for the establishment and repairs of the road and its dependencies, stations, and other accessory works, and until such laws be enacted by the Congress of the Union the following rules shall be observed:

1. In case of no agreement being arrived at with the owners of the lands or materials of construction, each party shall appoint an expert appraiser, both of whom shall present to the parties the valuation made, within the period of eight days from the time of their appointment; if the values fixed do not agree, the matter shall be submitted to the judge of the district court for that State within whose jurisdiction the land or materials in question may be situate, in order that he may appoint a third expert, who, within the period of eight days from the time of his appointment, shall give his decision as to what, in justice, should be given as indemnification to the owner of the lands or materials to be occupied or taken. The district judge, taking into account the opinions of the expert and the proofs presented by the parties when giving their decision, shall fix, within three days, the amount of indemnification. The decision of the district judge shall be enforced without other recourse than that of responsibility.

2. Should the owner of the property to be occupied on account of public utility not appoint his expert within eight days after being notified to do so by the district judge, this functionary, on demand of Eads or the company, shall appoint officially an expert to represent the interests of the owner.

3. In every case where it may be necessary to appeal to the district judge, this functionary, should Eads or the company so demand, or should it not be possible for them to fix the amount of land needed, shall begin the proceedings, the judge having taken the opinion of the government engineer, or, in his absence, that of the expert appointed by said judge, shall fix a sum which shall remain as a deposit during the pendency of the proceedings, and shall authorize Eads or the company to make use of or occupy provisionally the materials or lands in question, with the provision that if the final award of the experts be greater or less than the sum deposited by Eads or the company, what is lacking shall be paid or the excess returned.

4. If the ownership of the property to be occupied be doubtful, by reason of litigation or otherwise, the district judge shall assess, as the sum of indemnification, the amount which may be designated by the valuation of the expert appointed by the company, and of the one appointed by the said judge as representative of the legitimate owner of the property in question. The amount finally decided upon shall be deposited, conformably to legal usage, in order that it may be surrendered to him to whom it may belong.

5. In making their valuation the experts shall take into consideration the taxes which the property, of which the expropriation is in question, may pay, as well as the injury or benefit which, from the same cause, may result to the proprietor.

6. If, in making surveys and locations, it should be necessary to fell or to destroy, in whole or in part, trees, maguey plantations, or other obstacles, Eads or the company may do so, being obliged to pay the indemnification designated by the experts as soon as this shall be made known.

ART. 9. Eads or the company are authorized to make a canal of a depth of not less than 25 feet between the Laguna Superior and the Pacific. As compensation for making said canal there will be given to them 168 (41,515 acres) square kilometers of public lands for each foot of depth which is obtained, measured from the surface of the water at mean high tide, making a total of 4,200 square kilometers (1,037,862 acres) for obtaining the total depth of 25 feet.

If said Eads or the company think it necessary to deepen the bar of Coatzacoalcos to the same depth of 25 feet, then a second 4,200 square kilometers (1,037,862 acres) of land will be given them in compensation for this work, in which case a proportionate amount of the whole will be given for each additional foot of depth obtained beyond the present depth on the bar. The said lands may be granted on the Isthmus of Tehuantepec, or in the places which the government may designate, and they will be transferred with the corresponding title of property and previous measurement and location in proportion as the construction of the canal is accomplished, with the understanding that the company shall be obliged to make the river navigable to Minatitlan for vessels drawing at least 20 feet. Eads or the company is accordingly authorized to survey by metes and bounds up to 11,200 square kilometers of land in the place or places which may be designated by the government on the proposal of Eads or the company, all expenses of measurement and establishing the lines being his or the company's, and having the sole right, as compensation for these expenses, to the third part which the law grants to all companies which survey lands.

The lawful time to begin these operations will be after the date at which the government may make said designation.

The vacant lands once surveyed, the corresponding title of property will be issued to the extent of the third part referred to, and the remainder will be reserved, to be applied as soon as the works mentioned in this article are executed, within the period granted for the construction of the railway.

If at the end of said period Eads or the company should not have executed those works, the government may freely dispose of the reserved lands.

If Eads or the company should, in part or entirely, dispose of the lands acquired in virtue of this contract the purchasers, whatever may be their nationality, will not be considered foreigners in the act of acquiring, holding, and disposing of them in their turn, and will be subject to the laws of the republic in everything referring to the rights and obligations inherent to private landed property.

If in this event the purchasers or settlers of such lands should desire to obtain the character and franchises of colonists, the government will grant it according to the laws regulating such matters, provided they ask for it within the first six months of their installation.

ART. 10. During the time of the construction of the railway, telegraph, and other accessory works connected with this enterprise, both buildings and hydraulic works, and during the whole period of the concession, Eads or the company may bring and import to the isthmus all kinds of machinery, instruments, coal, and materials, which to Eads or the company may seem necessary for the construction, operation, and maintenance of the works, free of all kinds of duty, upon the following conditions: The rails, sleepers, fish-bars, locomotives, cars, and, in fine, all the articles comprised under the description of permanent way and rolling-stock, according to the decision of the department of public works, may be imported, notice having been previously given in each case to the aforesaid department. Other materials which, in addition to being necessary for the various works and appurtenances of a railway, may be considered as current articles of commerce, such as iron, corrugated zinc, common nails, lumber, paints, &c., will require in each case the previous permission of the aforesaid department, and order of that of finance.

Vessels, passengers, or merchandise, which may come to the isthmus, and which may be in transit, shall be free of all kinds of duties, general as well as local, during the concession, except that of transit, for which they shall pay after the completion of the work, and during the entire period covered by the concession, at the rate of 15 cents per passenger on each passage fare collected by the company; one-half mill on the value of coin, silver or gold in bars or dust, and on that of precious stones, and 10 cents per ton on each ton for which the company collects toll.

Nor can a tax or contribution of any kind, except that of revenue stamps, be levied upon the capital invested in this enterprise, its property, or edifices indispensable for the service of the railway, nor upon its rents or shares; the sums of money which it may be necessary to remit abroad for the purchase of materials needed for the operation and repair of the road after it is built, as well as for the payment of interest and dividends, shall be exempt from export duty, with the obligation of satisfying the federal government, when it may require it, that the appropriation of the amounts for which it may obtain free exportation is lawful.

The enterprise may sell coal from its own stores to vessels in transit that may need it, in case of urgency. The company shall be exempt from all dues on the tow-boats that it may make use of for the service of the railway, and it can charge the owners of the vessels which it may tow conventional or agreed upon rates.

ART. 11. Eads or the company is authorized to collect tolls from each vessel transported over said railway, provided that the maximum toll on each vessel does not exceed a sum equal to $5 per cubic meter for each meter contained in a parallelopipedon of which the dimensions shall be the greatest length and the greatest breadth of the vessel, measured at the surface of the water, and her greatest immersed depth. In the application of this tariff, fractions of cubic meters shall be considered as complete cubic meters.

For each passenger carried across in a vessel a sum not exceeding $15 may be charged.

Silver in bars, or coined; gold in bars, in dust, or coined; jewels and precious stones shall pay, as a maximum rate, 1 per cent. of their value.

If any captain of a vessel, or owner, or conductor of said property shall fail to declare that it is being carried to the agent of Eads or of the company, said Eads or said company shall have the right to exact 10 per cent. of the value of the property, and to seize and detain the vessel, or the property in question, until payment of said 10 per cent. be made.

Eads or the company may also collect wharfage dues and tonnage dues, provided that said dues do not exceed $1 per registered ton, and that the vessels from which these dues be claimed use the ports, wharves, or other hydraulic works of the company; and this sum may be charged for each period of twenty days, or less if the vessel be there only that time, on the condition that the delay be not caused by the enterprise.

These last dues may be collected by said Eads or said company without prejudice to the port charges which the government collects in those ports, as in all others of the republic, on ships not in transit by the isthmus. Eads or the company may collect fees that do not exceed $1 per registered ton on those vessels that draw more than 16 feet and cross the bar at the mouth of the river Coatzacoalcos, or that enter any of the harbors deepened by the enterprise in the Pacific Ocean. The vessels that go in transit by the isthmus will not pay the last-mentioned dues.

ART. 12. The tariff of charges for telegrams shall be: For a message of ten words, not counting date, direction, and signature, sent to a distance not exceeding 100 kilometers, 15 cents; for each additional kilometer, 1 cent additional; for each additional word, a sum not in excess of a twentieth part of that exacted for the ten first words of the message sent the same distance.

ART. 13. The enterprise shall publish and send annually to the department of public works the schedules of tolls adopted by it, and it shall neither reduce nor increase such tolls without previous notice to the public, which notice shall be published fifteen days beforehand in case of a reduction and two months beforehand in case of an increase. All the tolls specified in the aforesaid schedules shall be payable in gold, excepting those payable on Mexican vessels and passengers, which shall be paid in silver dollars of the national mintage, in order that they may enjoy a reduction equivalent to the amount of the exchange on Mexican gold or silver.

ART. 14. For the use of the marine ways which may be constructed said Eads or said company shall have the right to collect such amounts as may be agreed upon between them and the owners of the vessels which may be taken there to be hauled out or repaired. The government can make use of these ways for hauling out and repairing its vessels without any remuneration whatever. This use shall be subject to such rules as may be established by the company and as may be approved by the department of public works.

ART. 15. Said Eads or said company agrees to carry gratuitously, to and from any of the stations of the railway, written and printed matter dispatched from the government offices, also to transport without charge the troops, employés in public service, vessels, and all things belonging to the Mexican Government, in accordance with the orders and regulations that may be issued by the respective departments of state.

There also shall be sent free of charge by the telegraph of the company all telegrams relating to official affairs of the Government of the Mexican Republic.

On the passage of colonists authorized by the department of public works a rebate of one-fourth will be made in the rate of the tariff.

ART. 16. Passage over the railway shall be open for all the vessels of all the nations not at war with Mexico, and the government of the republic binds itself not to close to ocean commerce, during the time of the concession, either of the two terminal ports of the interoceanic ship-railway, one in the Gulf, the other in the Pacific, except in case of war.

The treasury department shall make the regulations which must be observed in reference to the transportation of effects and merchandise over the railway, so as to prevent fraud or abuse which might be committed during their transit through Mexican territory, but these formalities or precautions shall be such as to not tend to delay or embarrass the punctual and rapid dispatch of trains and merchandise, passengers and baggage, yet all without prejudice to the right which the executive reserves to detain vessels in case of fraud.

The passage of ships shall be subject to precisely the following conditions:

1. The passage shall be open at all times to the merchant marine of the world, and for the ships of war and the property and appurtenances of the Mexican Government.

2. The company will not be allowed to transport war vessels, war materials, or troops of any foreign nation without the previous constitutional permission of the Mexican Government.

3. If the company shall voluntarily or maliciously transport arms or munitions of war belonging to any foreign nation, without proper permission from the Government of Mexico, it shall be liable to a fine of from two to ten thousand dollars, and shall, moreover, be responsible for such damages and injuries as may be occasioned by this act, if, by reason thereof, the neutrality laws shall be violated.

ART. 17. The directors, agents, employés, and workmen of the company shall be exempt, during the whole time of the concession, from all military or civil service, and considered as invested with all the exemptions and privileges granted to the employés and workmen of other railways in the Mexican Republic.

ART. 18. The company which, for the objects mentioned in this contract, may be organized by Eads, shall exercise all the rights, powers, and privileges in relation to the issue of bonds or other guarantees, and in every way, that may be granted by any concession which it may obtain in Mexico or elsewhere, provided that it be not in conflict with the provisions of this contract or with the laws of the Mexican United States.

The company may sell and in any manner dispose of and transfer its shares, bonds, and other obligations. The creditors of the company shall have action against its property only, and the bondholders, directors, and employés of the enterprise, shall be exempt from all personal responsibility on account of the debts of the company, except in case of fraud, deception, or bribery.

ART. 19. The concessions contained in the present contract, and the railway, telegraphs, stations, ports, lands, and, in short, all works constructed by virtue of the present contract, can in no wise be sold, mortgaged, or alienated to any foreign government or governments, under penalty of the immediate nullification of the present concession.

ART. 20. Work on the railway shall commence within two years from May 1, 1881, and shall be finished within fourteen years from the same date.

ART. 21. Eads or the company is authorized to build, on the land conceded as a right of way, a railway, broad or narrow gauge, to be operated for the service of the ship-railway, and for the carriage of passengers and freight. Its tariff for these purposes shall be that of other railways of its class in the republic, and for it the government shall pay no subvention whatever. In case that only this auxiliary railway be constructed, and the ship-railway not built, said auxiliary railway shall be in every way subject to those regulations established for the railway actually being built in Tehuantepec, except as regards the enjoyment of a subvention.

ART. 22. Except as regards property in the public lands treated of in article 9 (a concession which is perfect and complete), all the other privileges and concessions spoken of in the present contract shall be enjoyed by Eads or the company, only for the term of ninety-nine years from the date of the promulgation of this contract; this period passed, the Mexican Government may take possession of said railway, with all its works, building equipments, and accessories, each party appointing an expert and these two a third, who shall proceed to make a just valuation of all belonging to the company. The railway, with its works, buildings, material, equipment, and accessories, may be taken by the government for two-thirds of its value payable with the net products of operating, the company being paid interest at 6 per cent. annually on the amount due until payment be made. The improvements in the ports, such as wharves, docks, locks, and light-houses, shall, at the expiration of ninety-nine years, become the property of the nation, no compensation being paid therefor.

ART. 23. The Mexican Government pledges itself to protect Eads or the company during the construction of the works mentioned and in the enjoyment of them when constructed, and to this end shall furnish the proper force by land or sea without any charge to the company.

ART. 24. The obligations contracted by Eads or the company concerning the time of beginning and completing construction fixed by this contract shall be suspended in case of financial crisis, duly verified in the principal exchanges of England and of the United States of the North, and in all fortuitous cases or that of a superior force which may prevent the carrying out of these obligations. Suspension shall last only during the time the impediments last, and there must be presented to the federal executive notice and proofs of the occurrence of a fortuitous case, or one of the superior force of the character mentioned, within three months from the commencement of the impediment. So, also, there must be presented to the federal executive notice and proof that work was resumed immediately on the cessation of the impediment, or at least within two months after its cessation; said presentation of notice and proofs to be made within two months after the two already mentioned, only the time during which the impediment lasted, or at most two months more, shall be credited.

ART. 25. The concessions made by this contract shall be void for any of the following causes:

1. For not commencing or terminating the construction of the railway and its works according to the times fixed by article 20.

2. For alienating, transferring, or mortgaging this concession, or the rights derived from it, or the works executed, to some foreign state or government, or for admitting it as a partner, any stipulation to this effect being also null.

3. For the company, knowingly and intentionally, and not being constrained by superior force, transporting on the railway vessels of war or troops of any foreign nation, without the previous constitutional permission, officially communicated by the government to the enterprise.

The voidance shall be declared administratively by the executive as soon as the same may take place.

ART. 26. In cases of voidance, the company shall lose the concessions granted by this contract, but said company shall preserve its ownership in the edifices it may have constructed, that part of the railway and telegraph it may have built, the materials, machinery, and tools used for operating the same, and the lands it may have acquired. The government of the republic, or the individual or company to whom such right may be conceded, shall have the right to take it all, corresponding payment having been previously made according to the valuation made by experts appointed, one on either part; and they, before beginning to act, shall appoint a third to decide in case of a disagreement.

If the voidance should have been caused by alienation, mortgage, or transfer to a foreign government, or because of its becoming a partner, or because the company, knowingly and intentionally, and not being overcome by superior force, has transported vessels of war or troops belonging to any foreign nation without the previous constitutional consent of Mexico, in addition to the working or the nullity of the act or the voidance of the present contract, the nation shall enter at once into possession of the control of the road, its accessories, and lands, without the company having a right to indemnification of any kind.

ART. 27. The Government of Mexico pledges itself to furnish annually, as a loan which is to be repaid, the amount necessary to make up, as the sixth part of the annual gross proceeds of the entire income of the enterprise, for the working of its railways, telegraphs, and docks, the sum of $1,250,000.

This obligation shall be binding as soon as, after the completion of the ship-railway, it shall have been put in operation, and shall have transported across the isthmus, with entire safety, a vessel weighing, with its cargo, at least 3,000 tons.

The advance or loan which the Government of Mexico binds itself to furnish to the enterprise, in order thereby to guarantee the payment of interest to the capital therein invested, shall only extend to the first fifteen years of the operation of the ship-railway, which period shall be reckoned from the day on which the first vessel weighing at least 3,000 tons shall have been transported across the isthmus, according to the terms of the foregoing paragraph.

The Government of Mexico may, as it may elect, deliver, in cash or in special bonds issued by it and bearing interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum, the amount which it is annually to loan to the enterprise in virtue of the obligation contracted by it. The said bonds, if issued, shall be payable in twenty years from the date of their issue.

The enterprise assigns exclusively, for the purpose of repaying to the Government of Mexico the sums which that government shall have advanced to it in virtue of the provisions of this article, the sixth part of the excess that may at any time accrue in its net revenues from the operation of the ship-railway and of its telegraphs and docks over and above the sum of $3,750,000 in gold in one year.

ART. 28. Eads or the company may grant a reduction amounting to 25 per cent. of the rates authorized by article 11 to the merchandise, passengers, and merchant vessels of the nation, or foreign nations whose governments shall lend it their aid either by means of money or guarantee.

This reduction shall last for a term of thirty years, and in all cases Mexican merchandise and passengers and the national marine shall enjoy the same franchises. The enterprise is also authorized to grant the same reduction to the war marine of said nation or nations, but with the proviso that the transportation of vessels, troops, or munitions of war shall not be understood to have been consented to, in any case, without the express permission of the Government of Mexico officially communicated to the enterprise.

The government granting the aforesaid aid shall have the right to be represented in the board of directors of the company, without any power save that of being present at the examination of the accounts for the purpose of receiving the share of the profits that belongs to them by two-ninths of the whole number of its members, these representatives enjoying the same emoluments and prerogatives as the other directors.

In case that Eads or the company should fail in any of the stipulations contained in the preceding article contracted with any foreign government, that government can only enforce its rights before the Mexican courts of the capital of the republic, in accordance with the laws of Mexico; but in no case can the government which brings suit acquire the ownership of the works or the rights emanating therefrom.

ART. 29. When the advances made to the enterprise by the Government of Mexico and the other governments that aid it shall have been refunded, and the net earnings shall be sufficient to pay a sum equivalent to 10 per cent. in gold on the total indebtedness of the company, represented by the shares and bonds that it may have issued, the directors appointed by the Government of Mexico and by the other governments lending the aforesaid aid shall prepare a schedule of reduced prices, provided the reduction of income that may result will permit the payment of the said 10 per cent.; and if this new schedule shall be approved by the Government of Mexico and the other governments it shall remain in force thereafter, although it may be afterwards increased whenever the net earnings of the enterprise shall prove to be insufficient for the payment of the aforesaid 10 per cent., one-half of the total earnings shall, in all cases, be considered as net profits.

ART. 30. The transit duty mentioned in article 10 shall be collected in Mexican silver dollars, in the form and on the terms that the government shall direct by agreement with the enterprise; and this fund shall be appropriated, so far as may be necessary, to the amortization either of the main share of capital that shall be found chargeable to the government as a part of the deficit referred to in article 27, or of the interest on the bonds therein mentioned, without prejudice to such other means of payment as may be provided for this purpose in the federal budget.

ART. 31. The company may establish its board of directors in any city in the republic or in a foreign country, but, in the latter case, it shall be obliged to keep at this capital an attorney, instructed and paid, for the purpose of maintaining an understanding with the federal government and other authorities, in all matters relating to the execution of the present contract.

ART. 32. The company shall be Mexican, even though some or all of its shareholders be foreigners, and shall be subject exclusively to the jurisdictions of the tribunals of the republic in all matters of which the cause and action may take place within its territory. The company itself, as well as all foreigners and the successors taking part in the enterprise, whether as shareholders, employés, or in any character whatsoever, shall be considered as Mexicans in all things relating to the company, nor can they even allege, with regard to title to property and other matters connected with the company, rights as foreigners, under any pretext whatsoever. They shall have those rights and the means of making them valid which the laws of the republic confer on Mexicans, and consequently not subject to interference on the part of foreign diplomatic agents.

ART. 33. The executive will be represented in the board of directors of the company by two-thirds of the whole number of the directors of the company, those whom it shall appoint in compliance with this provision having the same emoluments and prerogatives as those of the company which the enterprise will pay.

ART. 34. The enterprise shall communicate to the Government of Mexico the text of any contracts that it may conclude with foreign governments.

LUCY A. WASHBURN.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2218) for the relief of Lucy A. Washburn, which were, in line 3, after the word "pension-roll," to insert the words "subject to the limitations and provisions of the pension laws;" and in lines 3 and 4 to strike out the words "at the rate of $12 a month."

The amendments were concurred in.

RICHARD B. RIANS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2519) granting an increase of pension to Richard B. Rians, which was, in line 5, before the word "dollars," to strike out "fifty" and insert "twenty-five."

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move that the Senate non-concur in that amendment, and ask for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part on the Senate; and Mr. SAWYER, Mr. BLAIR, and Mr. WILSON of Iowa were appointed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (H. R. 5345) for the relief of Mary J. Gilbert;
A bill (H. R. 6188) for the relief of John A. Fagg;
A bill (H. R. 6732) for the relief of General Speed S. Fry;
A bill (H. R. 7971) granting a pension to Mary Wood;
A bill (H. R. 8469) granting a pension to John Moran;
A bill (H. R. 8486) granting a pension to Rebecca Morris;
A bill (H. R. 10021) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary Lathrop;
A bill (H. R. 10473) granting a pension to William Reddick; and
A bill (H. R. 10795) granting a pension to Elenor C. Ransom.

FLORIDA LAND GRANT.

Mr. CALL. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts to allow me to move the reference of a joint resolution on the table to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. HOAR. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. CALL. I move that the joint resolution (S. R. 99) in relation to the land grant approved May 17, 1856, granting lands to the State of Florida for railroad purposes, be taken from the table and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

NATIONAL ACADEMY OF DENTAL SCIENCE.

Mr. CALL. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts if he will not withdraw his motion to allow me to have a vote of the Senate on the bill (S. 2051) to incorporate the National Academy of Dental Science. I will merely state that this is not an association of any kind involving money or property interests, but simply an association of scientists who desire to have an incorporation here in the District of Columbia for the purpose of convenient conference with scientists of the dental profession in all parts of the world, and for the purpose of receiving contributions for the encouragement of their art or profession.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Florida appeals to the Senator from Massachusetts to withdraw his motion to adjourn with a view to allow him to have a certain bill passed.

Mr. HOAR. I think that after Senators have left their seats with the understanding that a motion to adjourn was pending and merely withdrawn for the sake of routine business I hardly ought to yield. I hope the Senator from Florida will defer action on that bill until Monday.

Mr. CALL. Certainly, if the Senator desires.

Mr. HOAR. I understand that it created a good deal of opposition the other day when it came up.

Mr. CALL. I think not. I think but one member of the Senate raised objection to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 3 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, February 7, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, February 5, 1887.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Rev. Dr. BULLOCK, of Washington, D. C.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

VETO MESSAGE—CUDBERT STONE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I hereby return, without approval, House bill 927, entitled "An act granting a pension to Cudbert Stone."

The report of the committee of the House of Representatives to whom this bill was referred states that the claimant enlisted October 3, 1861, in Company H, Fourteenth Kentucky Volunteers, and was honorably discharged on the 31st day of January, 1865.

That he filed his claim for pension July 20, 1881, more than sixteen years thereafter, alleging that he contracted piles while in the service, from exposure while in the line of duty, and that his claim was rejected in October, 1884, on the ground that the allegation of the claimant shows that his disability originated while undergoing the sentence of a court-martial, and therefore not in the line of duty.

The report of the committee closes with the statement that "in view of the long and faithful service and high character of the claimant, and the well-established facts that claimant was a stout and able-bodied man, free from any and all disease when he enlisted, and that by reason of his faithful service to his country, and the great suffering and hardship through which he passed while in said service, his health was permanently destroyed, the committee earnestly recommend the passage of the bill."

The records of the War Department show that the claimant enlisted October 25, 1861, and that on the muster-in roll of his company, dated December 10, 1861, he is reported as present; that on the roll dated December 31, 1861, he is reported as absent without leave; that on the roll for January and February, 1862, he is reported as deserted; that he is not borne on subsequent rolls until that for November, 1864, when he is reported as gained from desertion. He was mustered out with his company January 31, 1865, and the records offered no evidence of disability; that in his claim for pension, filed in 1881, he alleges that he contracted piles in the winter of 1863.

In a subsequent statement he alleges that this date is erroneous, and that his disability was contracted in October, 1864, and that he believes it was the result of his having diarrhea for about twelve months prior to that date, contracted while he was being carried from place to place as a prisoner, he having been tried by a court-martial in May, 1862, for desertion, and sentenced to imprisonment until the expiration of his term of enlistment.

Thus it quite plainly appears that this claimant spent the most of his term of enlistment in desertion, or in imprisonment as a punishment of that offense. And thus is exhibited the "long and faithful service and the high character of the claimant" mentioned as entitling him to consideration by the committee who reported favorably upon this bill.

I withhold my assent from this bill, because if the facts before me, derived from the Army records and the statements of the claimant, are true the allowance of this claim would, in my opinion, be a travesty upon our whole scheme of pensions and an insult to every decent veteran soldier.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, February 4, 1887.

On motion of Mr. TAULBEE, the message was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

VETO MESSAGE—ABRAHAM P. GRIGGS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HAMMOND in the chair) also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I herewith return, without approval, House bill 8834, entitled "An act granting a pension to Abraham P. Griggs."

The claimant mentioned in this bill enlisted in a New Jersey regiment August 14, 1861, and was discharged for disability November 17, 1863.

He entered hospital January 2, 1863, and was transferred to general hospital at Newark, N. J., March 28, 1863, with "debility."

He was discharged from that hospital and from the service in November, 1863, as above-stated, and the following statement from his certificate of discharge, if trustworthy, sheds some light upon the kind of debility with which he was afflicted:

"This man has been in this hospital for the past eight months. We do not believe him sick, or that he has been sick, but completely worthless. He is obese and a malingerer to such an extent that he is almost an imbecile—worthlessness, obesity, and imbecility and laziness. He is totally unfit for the Invalid Corps or for any other military duty."

I do not regard it all strange that this claimant, encouraged by the ease with which special acts are passed, seeks relief through such means, after his application, filed in the Pension Bureau nearly twenty years after his discharge, had been rejected.

Of the four comrades who make affidavit in support of his claim, two of them are recorded as deserters.

His claim is predicated upon rheumatism. He alleges that after his discharge from his enlistment he was drafted and served in the Third New York Cavalry, but the Adjutant-General reports that his name does not appear on the rolls of the company to which he says he was attached.

The board of United States examining surgeons at Trenton, N. J., report, as the result of an examination as late as May 27, 1885, that they found "no disease of heart or lungs, no thickening or wasting of any of the joints of the body, no evidence of any rheumatic diathesis, no rupture or hemorrhoids, no disease of his spleen or kidney; hands are hard and indicate an ability to work."

I can not think that the official statements referred to, and which militate so strongly against the merits of the claimant, should be impeached or set aside by any of the other testimony which has been brought to my attention.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, February 4, 1887.

On motion of Mr. TAULBEE the message was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

VETO MESSAGE—FRANKLIN SWEET.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I hereby return, without approval, House bill 7540, entitled "An act to increase the pension of Franklin Sweet."

This soldier was pensioned in 1863 as sergeant, though before that time he had been acting as captain, and was in command of his company when he was wounded. He is entitled in equity, and, I think, upon the theory of an act very recently approved, in law, to be treated in regard to his pension as a captain; and the Pension Bureau has, within the last few days, ordered a certificate for pension to issue to him as captain as of the date of his discharge.

I fully approve this action of the bureau, and as this is much more favorable to a deserving soldier than his remedy under this bill, I am not willing that the action so lately and so justly taken in his behalf under the general law, should be superseded by the approval of this act.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 4, 1887.

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the message be laid on the table.

Mr. MILLS. Let it be referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. SPRINGER. It should be referred. That is the proper course.

Mr. TAULBEE. I do not think anybody will attempt to press the consideration of the bill in view of the facts stated by the President.

Mr. SPRINGER. No; but the law requires it to be acted upon by a yea-and-nay vote in the House.

Mr. MILLS. It would not be respectful to lay it on the table.

Mr. TAULBEE. Then I ask its reference to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection the message will be printed and referred as indicated.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

VETO MESSAGE—JESSE CAMPBELL.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith, without approval, House bill 8150, entitled "An act granting a pension to Jesse Campbell."

The claim for a pension made by the beneficiary named in this bill to the Pension Bureau, and rejected in 1881, was reopened upon further proof in January, 1887, and the claimant was ordered before a board of examining surgeons, upon which a report has not yet been made.

Inasmuch as the only ground for the rejection of his claim was the non-existence of pensionable disability from the cause he alleged, and in view of the fact that he now alleges a different disability, which the new evidence seems to support, there is no doubt that justice will be done the claimant under the general law.

This bill, if passed, would only place the name of the beneficiary upon the pension-roll, "subject to the restrictions and limitations of the pension laws." Whether any sum was allowed him or not would still depend upon the existence of a disability; and if this is found upon the examination lately ordered, he will undoubtedly be put upon the pension-roll, under existing law, in accordance with his supplementary claim.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, February 4, 1887.

On motion of Mr. TAULBEE, the message was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

VETO MESSAGE—ROBERT K. BENNETT.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read:

To the House of Representatives:

I hereby return, without approval, House bill 7698, entitled "An act granting a pension to Robert K. Bennett."

The beneficiary named in this bill enlisted in September, 1862, and it appears that very soon after that he was detailed to the cook-shop. This seems to be the only military service he rendered; and on February 7, 1863, five months after enlistment, he was received into the marine hospital at New Orleans for varicocele. He was discharged from the service February 22, 1863, and the cause of discharge is stated to be "varicocele, to which he was subject four years before enlistment."

Seventeen years thereafter, and in June, 1880, this claimant filed an application for pension in the Pension Bureau, alleging that about the 10th day of February, 1863, in unloading a barrel it fell upon him, producing a hernia, shortly after which he was affected by piles.

It will be seen that he fixes this injury as occurring three days after his admission to the hospital, but he might well be honestly mistaken as to this date. If the injury, however, was such as he stated, it is difficult to see why no mention was made of it in the hospital records.

He persisted at all times, as I understand the case, until the rejection of his claim in 1883, that his disability arose from hernia and piles. The reason of this rejection is stated to be that varicocele existed prior to enlistment and that there was no evidence of the existence of piles in the service or at discharge. From a medical examination made in December, 1882, it appears that there was "no evidence or symptoms of disability resulting from piles or hernia."

Subsequent to the rejection of this claim some proof was filed tending to show that the disability was in the right leg, but it is of such a nature in the light of the claimant's own previous allegations that I think the Pension Bureau did entirely right in informing his attorney that the additional evidence did not change the status of the case.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, February 4, 1887.

On motion of Mr. TAULBEE, the message was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

VETO MESSAGE—MRS. CATHARINE SATTLER.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read:

To the House of Representatives:

I hereby return, without approval, House bill numbered 6832, entitled "An act granting a pension to Mrs. Catharine Sattler."

The beneficiary named in this bill claims a pension as the surviving widow of Julius Sattler, who enlisted in Company A, Seventh New York Volunteers, and was in the service from March 10, 1864, to March 22, 1865, when he was discharged because of the amputation of his left forearm in consequence of a wound received in the battle of Deep Bottom, Virginia, on the 14th day of August, 1864. He was pensioned in 1865, at the rate of $8 per month, which was afterwards increased to $15 per month, dating from June 6, 1866.

In October, 1867, he was employed as a watchman in the United States bonded warehouse in the city of New York, and on the 31st day of that month he received his monthly pay of $50. He disappeared on that day, and on the 13th day of November, 1867, his body was found in the North River, at the foot of West Thirteenth street, in the city of New York, without his hat, coat, watch, or money.

These facts, with the further statement that he was a strong and healthy man at the time of his death, constitute the case on the part of the widow, who filed her application for a pension July 8, 1884, nearly seventeen years after her husband's death, alleging that she was married to the deceased in 1865, after the amputation of his arm.

Her claim was rejected in November, 1884, upon the ground that the soldier's death was not due to his military service.

This rejection was clearly right, unless the Government is to be held as an insurer against every fatal casualty incurred by those who have served in the Army, without regard to the manner of its occurrence.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, February 4, 1887.

On motion of Mr. TAULBEE, the message was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

VETO MESSAGE—JAMES R. BAYLOR.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the following message; which was read:

To the House of Representatives:

I herewith return, without approval, House bill 6825, entitled "An act granting a pension to James R. Baylor." The claim of the beneficiary named in this bill is based upon an injury to his left ankle in 1862.

A medical examination in 1877 showed no appearance of there ever having been a fracture of the left ankle, as alleged by the claimant, and it was determined that there was no disability. A later examination in the same year was had with the same result. Still another medical examination was had in June, 1884, which, although nearly agreeing with the previous ones, and giving rise to some suspicion that the claimant was inclined to exaggerate and prevent a free and fair examination, still does not absolutely exclude a very slight disability.

Upon the report of this last examination the case has been reopened for further proof of disability since discharge, which if found will entitle the claimant to a pension under general laws. On the question to be determined he would have no advantage under a special act, inasmuch as there must be a ratable disability to entitle him to any payment in pursuance of its provisions.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, February 4, 1887.

On motion of Mr. TAULBEE, the message was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. REED. Are these messages being referred to the committee that seems to be indicted by them?

Mr. TAULBEE. The committee is not complaining.

DEFICIENCY IN DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting estimates from the Attorney-General of deficiencies in the appropriation for contingent expenses of that Department for the fiscal years 1885 and 1886; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an account of the expenditures of the Coast and Geodetic Survey for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1886; which was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department, and ordered to be printed.

UNITED STATES MILITIA FORCE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting an abstract of the militia force of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on the Militia, and ordered to be printed.

STURGEON BAY AND LAKE MICHIGAN SHIP-CANAL.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a resolution of the board of managers of the Lake Carriers' Association of Buffalo, N. Y., favoring the acquisition by the United States of the Sturgeon Bay and Lake Michigan Ship-canal; which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

REPORT OF COMMISSIONER OF PATENTS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the annual report of the Commissioner of Patents; which was referred to the Committee on Patents, and ordered to be printed.

DIRECT-TAX ACT OF 1861.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the bill (S. 995) to credit and pay to the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia all moneys collected under the direct-tax levied by the act of Congress approved August 5, 1861; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. MILLS. That bill properly goes to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. HEARD. I ask its reference to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MILLS. It belongs to the Committee on Ways and Means. It deals with taxation.

Mr. HEARD. I suggest that, as I understand, a bill of the same import, or substantially the same, is now being considered by the Committee on the Judiciary. I therefore move that this bill be referred to that committee.

Mr. MORRISON. Is not this a tax bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is.

Mr. MORRISON. I move, then, that it be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, unless on motion the House shall direct the reference to another committee. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HEARD], that the bill be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MILLS. That bill properly belongs to the Committee on Ways and Means and should not be taken from it.

The question being taken on Mr. HEARD'S motion, there were—ayes 46, noes 49.

Mr. GROSVENOR. No quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A quorum not having voted, the Chair appoints as tellers the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HEARD] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON].

Before the count by the tellers was completed,

Mr. MORRISON said: I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BURROWS. As I understand, the question is whether the bill shall be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary or the Committee on Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The pending motion is to refer the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary; and on this the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 134, nays 93, not voting 91; as follows:

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the bill (H. R. 9116) to provide for holding terms of the United States courts at Texarkana, Ark., and for other purposes, with the amendment of the Senate thereto.

The motion was agreed to.

RIGHT OF WAY THROUGH INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take up and consider at this time the bill (H. R. 2407) to grant the Fort Worth and Denver City Railway Company a right of way through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes. I have been unable to attend the sessions of the House very regularly on account of sickness, and I would regard it as a great favor if the House would allow me to have this bill taken up and considered now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be read subject to objection.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. BUCHANAN (before the reading was completed). Mr. Speaker, I shall most certainly object to the passage of that bill this morning; but before I object I would suggest to the gentleman from Texas that the bill be printed in the RECORD in order that members may have an opportunity to see it. I must object to the passage of the bill this morning, though I do not know that I shall object hereafter.

Mr. WELLBORN. This bill conforms to other such bills that have been passed by the House.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I know that; but many of those bills never would have been passed if they had been considered on the merits.

I suggest that by unanimous consent the bill be printed in the RECORD and that the gentleman call it up at some time hereafter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If objection is made to the present consideration of the bill it is not before the House.

Several members called for the regular order.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. In accordance with the suggestion of the gentleman from New Jersey, I ask that the bill be printed in the RECORD, so that it may be called up on Monday morning.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Not on Monday morning.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to printing the bill in the RECORD?. The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The bill is as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6393) to authorize the Fort Worth and Denver City Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Fort Worth and Denver City Railway Company, a corporation created under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Texas, be, and the same is hereby, invested and empowered with the right of locating, constructing, owning, equipping, operating, using, and maintaining a railway and telegraph and telephone line through the Indian Territory, beginning at a point to be selected by said railway company on Red River, between the mouth of Big Beaver Creek and the mouth of the North Fork of Red River, and running thence by the most practicable route through the Indian Territory to a point on the southern boundary of Kansas, with the right to construct, use, and maintain such tracks, turnouts, branches, sidings, and extensions as said company may deem it to their interest to construct along and upon the right of way and depot grounds herein provided for.

SEC. 2. That said corporation is authorized to take and use for all purposes of a railway, and for no other purpose, a right of way 100 feet in width through said Indian Territory, and to take and use a strip of land 200 feet in width, with a length of 3,000 feet, in addition to right of way, for stations, for every 10 miles of road, with the right to use such additional ground where there are heavy cuts or fills as may be necessary for the construction and maintenance of the road-bed, not exceeding 100 feet in width on each side of said right of way, or as much thereof as may be included in said cut or fill: Provided, That no more than said addition of land shall be taken for any one station: Provided further, That no part of the lands herein authorized to be taken shall be leased or sold by the company, and they shall not be used except in such manner and for such purposes only as shall be necessary for the construction and convenient operation of said railroad, telegraph, and telephone lines; and when any portion thereof shall cease to be so used, such portion shall revert to the nation or tribe of Indians from which the same shall have been taken.

SEC. 3. That before said railway shall be constructed through any lands held by individual occupants according to the laws, customs, and usages of any of the Indian nations or tribes through which it may be constructed, full compensation shall be made to such occupants for all property to be taken or damage done by reason of the construction of such railway. In case of failure to make amicable settlement with any occupant, such compensation shall be determined by the appraisement of three disinterested referees, to be appointed one (who shall act as chairman) by the President, one by the chief of the nation to which said occupant belongs, and one by said railroad company, who, before entering upon the duties of their appointment, shall take and subscribe, before a district judge, clerk of a district court, or United States commissioner, an oath that they will faithfully and impartially discharge the duties of their appointment, which oath, duly certified, shall be returned with their award to and filed with the Secretary of the Interior within sixty days from the completion thereof; and a majority of said referees shall be competent to act in case of the absence of a member, after due notice. And upon the failure of either party to make such appointment within thirty days after the appointment made by the President the vacancy shall be filled by the district judge of the court held at Wichita, Kans., or the district court for the northern district of Texas, upon the application of the other party. The chairman of said board shall appoint the time and place for all hearings, within the nation to which such occupant belongs. Each of said referees shall receive for his services the sum of $4 per day for each day they are engaged in the trial of any case submitted to them under this act, with mileage at 5 cents per mile. Witnesses shall receive the usual fees allowed by the courts of said nations. Costs, including compensation of the referees, shall be made a part of the award, and be paid by such railroad company. In case the referees can not agree, then any two of them are authorized to make the award. Either party being dissatisfied with the finding of the referees shall have the right, within ninety days after the making of the award and notice of the same, to appeal by original petition to the district court held at Wichita, Kans., or the district court for the northern district of Texas, which court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the subject-matter of said petition, according to the laws of the State in which the same shall be heard provided for determining the damage when property is taken for railroad purposes. If upon the hearing of said appeal the judgment of the court shall be for a larger sum than the award of the referees, the costs of said appeal shall be adjudged against the railroad company. If the judgment of the court shall be for the same sum as the award of the referees, then the costs shall be adjudged against the appellant. If the judgment of the court shall be for a smaller sum than the award of the referees, then the costs shall be adjudged against the party claiming damages. When proceedings have been commenced in court, the railway company shall pay double the amount of the award into court to abide the judgment thereof, and then have the right to enter upon the property sought to be condemned and proceed with the construction of the railroad.

SEC. 4. That said railroad company shall not charge the inhabitants of said Territory a greater rate of freight than the rate authorized by the laws of the State of Texas for services or transportation of the same kind: Provided, That passenger rates on said railway shall not exceed 3 cents per mile. Congress hereby reserves the right to regulate the charges for freight and passengers on said railway, and messages on said telegraph and telephone lines, until a State government or governments shall exist in said Territory within the limits of which said railway, or a part thereof, shall be located; and then such State government or governments shall be authorized to fix and regulate the cost of transportation of persons and freights within their respective limits by said railway; but Congress expressly reserves the right to fix and regulate at all times the cost of such transportation by said railway or said company whenever such transportation shall extend from one State into another, or shall extend into more than one State: Provided, however, That the rate of such transportation of passengers, local or interstate, shall not exceed the rate above expressed: And provided further, That said railway company shall carry the mail at such prices as Congress may by law provide; and until such rate is fixed by law the Postmaster-General may fix the rate of compensation.

SEC. 5. That said railway company shall pay to the Secretary of the Interior, for the benefit of the particular nations or tribes through whose lands said line may be located, the sum of $50, in addition to compensation provided for in this act for property taken and damages done to individual occupants by the construction of the railway, for each mile of railway that it may construct in said Territory, said payments to be made in installments of $500 as each ten miles of road is graded: Provided, That if the general council of either of the nations or tribes through whose lands said railway may be located shall, within four months after the filing of maps of definite location as set forth in section six of this act, dissent from the allowances provided for in this section, and shall certify the same to the Secretary of the Interior, then all compensation to be paid to such dissenting nation or tribe under the provisions of this act shall be determined as provided in section three for the determination of the compensation to be paid to the individual occupant of lands, with the right of appeal to the courts upon the same terms, conditions, and requirements as therein provided: Provided further, That the amount awarded or adjudged to be paid by said railway company for said dissenting nation or tribe shall be in lieu of the compensation that said nation or tribe would be entitled to receive under the foregoing provision. Said company shall also pay, so long as said Territory is owned and occupied by the Indians, to the Secretary of the Interior, the sum of $15 per annum for each mile of railway it shall construct in the said Territory. The money paid to the Secretary of the Interior under the provisions of this act shall be apportioned by him, in accordance with the laws and treaties now in force among the different nations and tribes, according to the number of miles of railway that may be constructed by said railway company through their lands: Provided, That Congress shall have the right, so long as said lands are occupied and possessed by said nations and tribes, to impose such additional taxes upon said railroad as it may deem just and proper for their benefit; and any Territory or State hereafter formed through which said railway shall have been established may exercise the like power as to such part of said railway as may lie within its limits. Said railway company shall have the right to survey and locate its railway immediately after the passage of this act.

SEC. 6. That said company shall cause maps showing the route of its located line through said Territory to be filed in the office of the Secretary of the Interior, and also to be filed in the office of the principal chief of each of the nations or tribes through whose lands said railway may be located; and after the filing of said maps no claim for a subsequent settlement and improvement upon the right of way shown by said maps shall be valid as against said company: Pro- vided, That when a map showing any portion of said railway company's located line is filed as herein provided for, said company shall commence grading said located line within six months thereafter, or such location shall be void; and said location shall be approved by the Secretary of the Interior in sections of 25 miles before construction of any such section shall be begun.

SEC. 7. That the officers, servants, and employés of said company necessary to the construction and management of said road shall be allowed to reside, while so engaged, upon such right of way, but subject to the provisions of the Indian intercourse laws, and such rules and regulations as may be established by the Secretary of the Interior in accordance with said intercourse laws.

SEC. 8. That the United States circuit and district courts for the northern district of Texas and the western district of Arkansas, and such other courts as may be authorized by Congress, shall have, without reference to the amount in controversy, concurrent jurisdiction over all controversies arising between said Fort Worth and Denver City Railway Company and the nations and tribes through whose territory said railway shall be constructed. Said courts shall have like jurisdiction, without reference to the amount in controversy, over all controversies arising between the inhabitants of said nations or tribes and said railway company; and the civil jurisdiction of said courts is hereby extended within the limits of said Indian Territory, without distinction as to citizenship of the parties, so far as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 9. That said railway company shall build at least 50 miles of its railway in said Territory within three years after the passage of this act, or the rights herein granted shall be forfeited as to that portion not built; that said railroad company shall construct and maintain continually all road and highway crossings and necessary bridges over said railway wherever said roads and highways do now or may hereafter cross said railway's right of way, or may be by the proper authorities laid out across the same.

SEC. 10. That the said Fort Worth and Denver City Railway Company shall accept this right of way upon the express condition, binding upon itself, its successors and assigns, that they will neither aid, advise, nor assist in any effort looking towards the changing or extinguishing the present tenure of the Indians in their land, and will not attempt to secure from the Indian nations any further grant of land, or its occupancy, than is hereinbefore provided: Provided, That any violation of the condition mentioned in this section shall operate as a forfeiture of all the rights and privileges of said railway company under this act.

SEC. 11. That all mortgages executed by said railway company conveying any portion of its railroad, with its franchises, that may be constructed in said Indian Territory, shall be recorded in the Department of the Interior, and the record thereof shall be evidence and notice of their execution, and shall convey all rights and property of said company as therein expressed.

SEC. 12. That Congress may at any time amend, add to, alter, or repeal this act; and the right of way herein and hereby granted shall not be assigned or transferred in any form whatever prior to the construction and completion of the road, except mortgages or other liens that may be given or secured thereon to aid in the construction thereof.

WAR CLAIMS.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I now call up the special order, being the bill (H. R. 10666) for the allowance of certain claims reported by the accounting officers of the United States Treasury Department. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and that it be considered in the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair that request is unnecessary, the bill having been taken out of the Committee of the Whole by the action of the House making it a special order.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the claims recited in the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the various claims recited in this bill. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Is it proposed to dispense entirely with the reading of the bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair stated to the House the request to dispense with the reading of the claims recited in the bill; there was no objection. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] has the floor.

Mr. EDEN. I desire to ask the gentleman before he proceeds whether this bill embraces any claims except those which have been favorably acted on by the accounting officers of the Treasury Department.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, this bill includes simply claims which have been allowed by the accounting officers of the Treasury Department. These claims are first examined in the locality where the property was taken, by special agents appointed for that purpose by the Quartermaster-General. They are then examined by the Quartermaster-General in person. Afterward they are further examined by the Third Auditor, and again by the Second Comptroller. So that before being reported here, these claims receive several examinations by the different accounting officers. There is not in the bill a single claim to which that remark does not apply. These are all claims for quartermaster stores, and have been properly examined and audited by the proper officers of the Treasury Department.

Mr. SPRINGER. What is the aggregate amount appropriated by the bill?

Mr. MILLS. I desire to ask when these claims were filed, whether they were all filed before the expiration of the time limited by law?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will endeavor to answer all these questions satisfactorily.

Of these claims 3 are from the District of Columbia, 1 from the State of Illinois, 7 from the State of Pennsylvania, 15 from Indiana, 56 from the State of Maryland, 36 from West Virginia, 115 from Missouri, 64 from Ohio, 129 from Kentucky, and a small number from Tennessee.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. The gentleman does not state the number of claims from Tennessee. I see there are 567.

Mr. EDEN. What is the amount of the claim coming from Illinois?

Mr. RICHARDSON. The amount of these claims in the aggregate is $181,732.57. For a number of years it was usual to pay these claims after they were audited in the Treasury Department without bringing them before Congress. Such, I understand, was the practice until 1875. Since that time they have been transmitted annually at the beginning of each session of Congress by the Secretary of the Treasury to the Speaker of the House, who lays them before Congress; and an appropriation has always been made for these claims after their examination by the Committee on War Claims of the House and the Committee on Claims of the Senate.

Mr. MILLS. Can the gentleman inform us how many more of these claims are now pending in the Department for examination?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I can not; but I can say to the gentleman that according to my information they are being reduced very rapidly.

Mr. GEDDES. They have been reduced to about thirty-five hundred.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] asked me awhile ago when these claims were filed. They were all filed very early after the war, and many of them have been pending in the Department for twenty years. No interest is allowed in any case upon any of these claims.

Mr. EDEN. I observe that there has been inserted in the bill by way of amendment this language, after the clause authorizing and requiring the Secretary of the Treasury to make payment:

> Upon the requisition of the Secretary of War, without further audit, allowance or restatement of the claims by the accounting officers.

I would like to know why that amendment has been put in.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The amendment to which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. EDEN] calls my attention was inserted upon the recommendation of the Comptroller himself. He drew the amendment and requested the committee to insert it, so that after the appropriation shall have been made by Congress in pursuance of the recommendations of the accounting officers of the Treasury Department, it will not be necessary that the claims be reaudited and re-examined in the Department, which would be merely a repetition of the work it has already done.

The next amendment, which appears in the eighth and ninth lines of the bill, simply directs payment to be made to the legal representatives of the claimant in the event that the claimant has died since the allowance of the claim by the accounting officers. The other amendments are purely clerical. The last one, embraced in section 2 of the bill, is simply to correct an error in the provision made in the bill passed at the last session, to pay the claim of George K. Shearman, of the State of Indiana. In that bill the appropriation read:

> To George K. Shearman, of Harrison County, Indiana, three hundred and fifty-three and five cents, leaving out, as will be seen, the word "dollars" altogether. This amendment simply adds the word "dollars" to that appropriation.

Those are the only amendments the committee have proposed.

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to ask the gentleman from Tennessee, with reference to the first amendment to which he has alluded, whether or not in the event it should appear after the passage of this bill that there was any fraud in connection with the auditing or allowance of any of the claims reported in the bill, it would then be possible to suspend their payment until further investigation could be had?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I imagine that if there was any fraud in connection with any of the claims the Third Auditor would not recommend the payment if his attention was called to it.

But I will state to the gentleman from Georgia that it would be simply a repetition if they were to go back to the same clerks, to the same officers who audited them in the first instance, and have the work gone over again.

Mr. GEDDES. The universal practice is, in cases of fraud, not to pay.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Of course, if fraud is discovered they will not be paid.

Mr. BLOUNT. Why is it they should go back after being allowed? Is it not a fact that these claims are first audited, passed upon in the Department, and after that work is done the claims are referred to Congress for appropriation?

Mr. RICHARDSON. That is the case.

Mr. BLOUNT. Then I do not see any occasion for that provision.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I am informed by the Comptroller who drew the amendment that it has been the universal custom to reaudit all claims after they have been passed upon by Congress.

Mr. BLOUNT. And this amendment is simply to avoid that practice in reference to these claims?

Mr. RICHARDSON. That is all.

Mr. WILSON. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Certainly.

Mr. WILSON. The gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. Speaker, has explained the various offices through which the claims have to pass before they are transmitted to Congress; but as I understand his statement, the allowance of one of these claims, after all, depends entirely upon the report made by the special agent of the Quartermaster's Department who may have been selected to take testimony in regard to the claim.

Mr. GEDDES. Not at all.

Mr. RICHARDSON. No, I do not want to be understood that way; because the special agent of the Quartermaster's Department who is sent to the locality where a claim originated frequently makes a favorable report upon that claim which is not allowed in full, and sometimes not at all, by the Quartermaster-General. I know of one instance in which the agent allowed the claim, that is to say reported upon it favorably, and the Department cut down the allowance of the agent; and in some cases they have rejected the allowance.

Mr. WILSON. But the allowance of such claim, after all, depends upon the report of the special agent sent out by the Quartermaster's Department to the locality in which it arose. Now, I would like to ask a further question: Whether the committee in considering these claims has ever given attention to the character of the agents sent out by that Department? And the reason I ask is that I think it will be the experience of every member here who represents districts of country from which these claims come that many claims of that class have been allowed against the Government, where, if the test of loyalty was applied, they would not be entitled to relief, upon a report of an agent of the Quartermaster's Department; while, on the other hand, there are a large number of claims recognized in the locality from which they arise as of the highest merit that have been turned down that never would have been turned down except upon the report of the special agent.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. They ought to go into the courts for relief.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Of course the committee could not vouch for the honesty and integrity of the special agents. They must depend upon the judgment of the Department. There were formerly twenty-five of them, but the number has been reduced until now but ten are employed in the field, and, as the Quartermaster-General states to me, and I have no doubt it is true, these ten are selected from the list of agents who have made the best record in the Department.

Mr. SOWDEN. I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee a question, with his permission.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Certainly.

Mr. SOWDEN. If, as the gentleman states, it is only a question of the appropriation of moneys to pay these claims, why is not this matter referred at once to the proper Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I can not answer why the House has taken this course in referring the claims as it has done. But it has been the universal practice to refer them to the Committee on War Claims, for the reason, I presume, that they are war claims.

Mr. GEDDES. Will the gentleman from Tennessee allow me to make a statement on that point?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I yield with pleasure to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. GEDDES. In the investigation of this class of claims before the Committee on War Claims I am free to say that there has existed some diversity of judgment as to the duty devolving upon the committee, some members of the committee feeling that all we had to do was to take four or five or six hundred claims as they appeared before the committee in bulk, report them to the House, and turn them over for appropriation. That has never been my individual judgment. My construction of that act and the law under which we operate has been that a duty devolved upon the Committee on War Claims to investigate, reconsider, and pass upon the merits of these claims, and if, as stated by the gentleman from Virginia, we discovered that the proof was insufficient on the question of loyalty the committee would feel at liberty to exclude that claim.

Mr. BLOUNT. May I ask the gentleman a question in this connection?

Mr. GEDDES. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to know if under the law the action of the Auditor and the Comptroller making an investigation of these claims is not conclusive, even upon the Secretary?

Mr. GEDDES. That is precisely what I am endeavoring to state as being the judgment of some members of the committee. I have never concurred in that opinion myself, and do not believe that even the Committee on War Claims is concluded by these accounting officers.

Mr. BLOUNT. My object was not to question the opinion of my friend, for which I have great respect, but to ascertain whether or not that is the law, or if it is not true that the Secretary himself can not set aside the conclusions of the Auditor and Comptroller with reference to such claims.

Mr. GEDDES. I do not believe that is the law; and we have not accepted that as the law in our committee.

Now, as a matter of practice, in order that members of the House may understand that these cases come here fully and fairly considered, and that they are not dumped in upon you here and your judgments asked without full consideration in committee, let me say that these claims are first presented to the Quartermaster-General. He sends his agents into the field, who thoroughly investigate them in the locality in which they occur and report for or against a claim. But the Quartermaster-General is not in any way bound by his report, as is shown in the cases before us, which we have gone through again and again. He then passes upon them. If his opinion is adverse to a claim that is the end of it. If his judgment is in favor of a claim it goes to the Third Auditor. He passes upon it. It then goes to the Second Comptroller. He passes upon it. If it passes through all their hands and receives the favorable judgment of each and all, then under this law it comes to the War Claims Committee.

Ordinarily it may be urged with great force that having received the concurrent judgment of all these men, the committee ought to be satisfied with their work and report a bill and dump it in upon the House. But I have said no; we will open these bags; we will take out all these cases, and with the clerical force given us we will go over them. We have done so.

As a matter of practice in the Forty-eighth Congress, when I had the pleasure of being associated with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROWELL], who was on the subcommittee, we traveled over these cases and we found—as the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WILSON] has stated his fears on that subject—we found, I think, seven in number whose claims, comparatively speaking, having reference to the class embodied in this bill, aggregated eight or ten thousand dollars—we found in that number of cases we thought proof wholly insufficient on the question of loyalty. My own judgment was that the proof as it was presented clearly established disloyalty, and we excluded them. Our report was approved, and the committee reported to the House the bill with those claims out. They are still out. We traveled over these cases presented in this bill in the same manner and with the same care.

Mr. LONG. All of them or only a part?

Mr. GEDDES. I may say all of them in this sense: There would be a great many cases involving small amounts—$10 or $50. We would not spend much time on a $10 case, but when it came to an $800 or a $1,000 claim we would take time in going over it in order to get at the way in which the investigation had been conducted by the accounting officers of the Department.

Now, this is the situation in regard to this bill. I found one case which on my own individual judgment if I had been the accounting officer, or as a member of the Committee on War Claims, I would have laid it aside. I did not see sufficient proof before me in that case of the loyalty of the party, but I was willing to pass that one claim. I found this action caused great improvement in the bill presented in the Forty-eighth Congress. I think the action of the committee in the preceding Congress in excluding those eight or ten thousand dollar claims had a good effect on the investigation of the accounting officers; and these claims come to us purified by that action of the committee.

Mr. SOWDEN. What was the amount of the claim about which the committee had some doubt as to the loyalty of the claimant?

Mr. GEDDES. I think it amounted to about $1,000. It may have been only $800.

Mr. SOWDEN. Does the gentleman remember the name of the case?

Mr. GEDDES. I do not, but if we should now take that single case out of this class and try to investigate it here we would find doubtless diversity of judgment, great difference of opinion, whether the proof is sufficient as to the question of loyalty. Therefore I am not disposed to resist further to any extent the passage of this bill, and I hope it will pass without amendment.

Mr. FELTON. As I understand, the committee has examined the claims and believes they ought to be paid?

Mr. GEDDES. Yes, sir. We think they ought to be.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR].

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. I desire to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] yield for that purpose?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not agree to the amendment, but I have yielded that it might be read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No more amendments than those now pending can be entertained under the rule except by unanimous consent. Is there objection to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR] offering his amendment?

Mr. EDEN. I object.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] yield to me for a moment?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire at the proper time to offer the following amendment to the first section of this bill—to insert after the words "accounting officers," in the tenth line, these words:

The warrants to be delivered to the payees thereof in person or through the mail.

The object of this amendment is to require the warrants to be delivered to the persons entitled to them or sent to them through the mail. I want to give an instance that occurred two years ago in reference to one of the provisions in the bill similar to this. A constituent of mine was allowed $1,200 in a similar bill. The warrant for that amount was delivered to his attorney in this city. That attorney declined to deliver the warrant to the person entitled to the payment unless he would give him the sum of $500. After I had written to the Treasury Department and insisted that the claimant was entitled to the warrant, one of the officers in that Department informed me it was the practice of the Department to deliver the warrant to the attorney, and they declined to deliver it to the person entitled to it; and the attorney went West and extorted $500 out of the $1,200 appropriated to my constituent by the bill. I think that is an imposition which Congress should prevent for the future; and with the view of preventing such impositions I shall ask to have these words inserted in the bill.

Mr. GOFF. Was there any contract by which the amount of the fee was determined?

Mr. SPRINGER. There was no contract. This attorney extorted $500 out of the $1,200 before he would deliver the warrant, and the Department declined to interfere. On my request to give the warrant to the claimant the Department declined to do it, and gave it to the attorney.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUK].

Mr. HOUK. I wish to ask my colleague [Mr. RICHARDSON] if it is in order to accept the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER]. It is eminently right.

Mr. SPRINGER. I send it to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Amendments are not now in order, except by unanimous consent.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask unanimous consent to offer it now, that it may be considered as pending.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I agree that it may be considered as pending when the previous question is ordered.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. I object unless I am permitted to offer my amendment.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I am willing the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR] should offer his amendment on the same terms as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] offers his.

Mr. EDEN. I object to the amendment being considered as pending until I shall hear it read.

Mr. HOUK. While I have the floor I wish to make two or three remarks in reply to questions which have come from various sources in regard to the method of the investigation of these claims and in reference to the character of these special agents. I know those who have been on duty in my State, and know them to be men of character and, capacity. The only objection either I or my constituents have ever found to them is that they all come from the North, and we fear sometimes they are prejudiced even against Union men living in the South. But there are a dozen gentlemen on this floor who know the agents who have investigated the claims from Tennessee. I will name Mr. Peter Malindy, once marshal, occupying a high position in that State. I name also another gentleman from Iowa, Captain Putnam. Another, who I undertake to say is one of the best men and of the largest capacity in public life almost anywhere, is Hon. G. J. Saunders, from Iowa, whom half-a-dozen gentlemen here well know. So with others. The method of investigation, instead of always taking everything for granted in favor of the claimant, has been to resolve every doubt in favor of the Government. That has been their habit. And gentlemen on this floor who know these men will guarantee their character and reputation.

I think when a claim has run the gauntlet of their investigation, the Quartermaster's investigation, the investigation of the Third Auditor and Comptroller, and has afterward gone through the War Claims Committee, having at its head my distinguished friend from Ohio [Mr. GEDDES], who is the greatest stickler for loyalty when a claim comes up that I ever saw—when a claim has run this gauntlet I think it ought to be allowed by this Congress. I agree with the suggestion of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT], as I understand it, that under the law as a matter of fact the duty of the War Claims Committee is simply to prepare an appropriation bill for these claims. Still, we have to accept that which they have resolved to do in reversing this law and assuming to decide on the question of the claims themselves; and, as we have been told by the chairman, some of them have been thrown out. After the claims have passed all this investigation I hope the bill will pass.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, in regard to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER], I want to say this: If I understand its effect it would be to send the check or draft directly to the claimant. Now, in nearly every case, as I am informed, the claimant has employed an attorney who has done the work, or has done a great deal of work, in preparing and pressing the claim, and, as I understand, the pratice of the Department is this: while the warrant is delivered to the attorney, yet in every solitary case it is made payable to the claimant and never to the attorney, so that the attorney can not collect the money without the consent of the claimant. This being so, I see no necessity for the amendment proposed.

Mr. SPRINGER. In the case to which I have referred the attorney informed the claimant that he had the warrant and that he intended to hold on to it until the payee indorsed it; and that attorney actually compelled the claimant to indorse it or else to go without his money.

Mr. ROWELL. Why did you not arrest him for extortion?

Mr. SPRINGER. Because I was not in the detective business.

Mr. ROWELL. As I understand you, this attorney went to Illinois and made that statement.

Mr. SPRINGER. He did.

Mr. ROWELL. And therefore made himself liable to arrest and imprisonment in that State.

Mr. SPRINGER. He went there, and he got the money, too.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to propose an amendment to the amendment and let it be pending. I propose to add these words: "Except in cases where specific contracts have been made with attorneys."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has already stated that there are several amendments pending.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I want to make this additional suggestion: There are a number of cases reported from the Court of Claims for quartermaster's stores. These cases have been referred to the Committee on War Claims, and the committee has reported them favorably to the House, and they are now on the Calendar. Our committee did not feel willing to put upon this bill any claim other than those that had been allowed by the accounting officers of the Treasury, and therefore no other kind of claim is in this bill; but the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR] desires to offer an amendment putting those other claims upon the bill, and if the House sees fit to adopt such an amendment I have no objection. I therefore yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR] to offer his amendment, simply to test the sense of the House upon that question.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then does the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR] withdraw his objection to my amendment?

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. Yes, sir.

Mr. McCOMAS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McCOMAS. At what stage of this proceeding can I, of my right, offer an amendment?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There are several amendments pending which must first be disposed of. Under the rule only two amendments can be pending at a time. The committee has reported quite a number of amendments which must be disposed of, after which other amendments well be taken in their order. The question is upon the first amendment proposed by the committee. Is there a desire that all the amendments of the committee be voted upon separately?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I ask unanimous consent that the committee amendments be voted upon together.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The amendments reported from the committee were adopted.

Mr. SPRINGER. Now, Mr. Speaker, I propose to amend the first section of the bill by the amendment which I have sent up.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "officers," in line 9, insert "the warrants to be delivered to the payee thereof in person or through the mails."

To which it is proposed by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] to add the following:

"Except in cases where specific contracts have been made with attorneys."

Mr. SPRINGER. I object to the amendment proposed by the chairman of the committee [Mr. RICHARDSON], because the difficulty now is that the attorneys compel the claimants to make contracts to allow the attorneys to draw the money, and such an amendment would annul the provision which I propose to insert.

Mr. TAULBEE. I suggest, as a matter of compromise, that the amendment be modified so as to allow the accounting officers of the Treasury to pay the attorneys a reasonable fee not to exceed 10 per cent.

Mr. SPRINGER. I have no objection to allowing them 10 per cent., but I am satisfied that the accounting officers of the Department would protect the attorneys sufficiently in any case. The amendment I have offered is in exact accordance, I think, with the ruling of the Department at this time, to which ruling the attorneys are objecting, and I want to give that ruling the sanction of law. I think the dealings between the claimant and the attorney can be settled very well by themselves, and certainly it is not the business of Congress to settle disputes between them. Let us give the claimant his money and then let him settle with his attorney himself.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Suppose the man makes a contract for a percentage to be paid to the attorney, and agrees that the attorney shall draw the money, is it the duty of Congress to step in and make a new contract?

Mr. SPRINGER. Suppose that contract calls for 50 per cent.?

Mr. TAULBEE. They usually do call for 40 per cent.

Mr. SPRINGER. Well, suppose the contract calls for 50 per cent., does my friend [Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana] suppose that Congress should stand by and let these poor claimants (for they are nearly all poor) be compelled to pay out half their claim simply because an exacting claim agent has obtained such a contract from them?

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Is the claimant obliged to employ the attorney?

Mr. SPRINGER. Oh, my friend could continue that line of argu ment a long time, but I think it is a mere matter of justice to protect these poor claimants.

Mr. LONG. There is no reason why you should insure the attorney.

Mr. SPRINGER. No.

Mr. RICHARDSON. My objection to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, as he puts it, is really made in the interest of the claimant himself. Many of these claimants are insolvent, and most of them are poor. Now, if the warrant goes into the hands of the claimants, the attorneys will, of course, seek to get their fees, and the result may be endless litigation; whereas I think we protect both parties when we allow the attorney to take the warrant, but have it made payable directly to the claimant. In that way both parties have a chance to get justice done them, and I really think we had better leave it as it is now under the practice of the Department.

Mr. TAULBEE. If the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] will allow me a moment. I am unable to see the difference between the attorneys' fee in this class of cases, and the attorneys' fee in pension cases. Now, there is a law by which the Pension Bureau can adjust the attorney's fee to an amount not to exceed $25 in any one pension case, and that amount only when the contract is for so much, and I think it would be right and fair, as between these claimants and their attorneys, that the drafts should be severed. Where there is a contract between the claimant and the attorney, and that contract calls for 10 per cent. to be paid to the attorney, I would allow the accounting officers of the Treasury to issue a draft to the attorney for his fee—of course not to exceed a reasonable amount, and in no case to exceed 10 per cent. of the amount allowed the claimant.

I think that would be fair and proper and right. It would be a great hardship for the attorneys who prosecute these claims to completion to be driven to the necessity of going all over the country to collect the fees which they have earned from claimants who in many cases may be insolvent. If the attorneys were required to do that they would frequently be unable to obtain compensation for their services.

On the other hand I believe that if some such amendment as that offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] be not adopted, the greatest hardship may be experienced by claimants. I have in my possession a letter from a claimant in my part of the country who says that the claim agent in Washington retained his check until he was compelled to indorse it to the agent, who paid him only 60 per cent. of the amount allowed by the Government. I think such a thing as that is a perfect outrage. I have talked to the accounting officers of the Treasury and to the Second Comptroller, who tells me that he has no power whatever to prevent the attorney from collecting the amount stipulated by contract, even 40 per cent. if he chooses to exact that much. I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois will be adopted in some shape; but I would like to see a provision inserted allowing the Department to pay the attorney a reasonable compensation. I believe that would be fair to the attorney.

Mr. LONG. What right has the Government to distribute the money which it says belongs to a claimant?

Mr. TAULBEE. The same right which it exercises in cases of invalid pensions.

Mr. LONG. When the Government has declared that a certain amount of money belongs to the claimant what right has it to step in and say "so much of this shall go to the claimant and so much to the attorney?"

Mr. TAULBEE. I believe that the Government in its administrative capacity has the same right to compel a man who seeks redress at its hands to be just as a court of equity has.

Mr. SPRINGER. One word in reference to the justice of the claim presented on behalf of these attorneys. These cases are adjudicated by the accounting officers of the Department, not in a court. The Government of the United States prosecutes all these cases at its own expense. The agents of the Government go into the different localities and hunt up the proof. In no case do these attorneys render any substantial service to the claimant. Residing here in Washington, they simply go to the Treasury Department, get the warrant, and hold on to it until the claimant is compelled to send them so much money before they will relinquish the warrant.

Mr. TAULBEE. That is measurably true.

Mr. SPRINGER. The experience of every member who hears me has shown it to be true.

I now ask a vote on my amendment. I do not accept the amendment to the amendment, but it can be voted on separately.

Mr. WOLFORD. Mr. Speaker, before the vote is taken on this question, I wish to say only a few words in relation to what seems to me to be one of the most important principles connected with our Government. The long practice of Congress—a reprehensible practice in my judgment—has been to treat the American freeman, whether a soldier or a claimant, not as a freeman but as a ward. It has been assumed that Congress must step in and protect the man who is able to protect himself. Why should it be assumed that the American freeman is not able to protect himself in making his contract with a lawyer or a claim agent? I have no word to say in favor of lawyers or claim agents; but I speak in behalf of the manhood of the American soldier, and the American citizen, and in behalf of the rights of the freemen who govern Congress, who govern the President, who govern every officer in this nation. We profess to believe in the doctrine that the people are the rulers, and that the officers of Government are their servants. But what do we say in practice? Having been for ages in the habit of treating the Indians as wards, and not as freemen, we have gradually extended that idea till we are disposed to treat every American citizen in the same way.

We undertake to say to the soldier who defended the country, who helped to save the life of the nation, "You had sense enough to fight, you had sense enough to do everything necessary to maintain the independence of the country; but now that the war is over, you have lost your manhood, you have lost your capacity to take care of yourself; you sink into insignificance before a powerful usurpation which undertakes to treat you as a ward." I oppose any such idea. The man who furnishes the material for your army, who constitutes the defense of the country in time of war, has certainly sense enough to make a contract for himself. The time will come when the Government of the United States will be ashamed of this departure from principle, of this insult to the manhood of the citizen, by saying, "We will treat the citizen and the soldier as our ward, not as capable of taking care of himself."

Why should you undertake to say to a man perfectly capable of making his own contracts that he shall not employ a lawyer or an agent except on certain terms? The Government has been slow, very slow, in making provision to pay for the necessaries furnished to the Army during the war; and now when it comes to make payment it proposes to say to the claimants, "You shall not do as you please in regard to the employment of a lawyer to urge your claim; you have not the power to make a proper contract in that regard."

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RICHARDSON. I hope now we shall have a vote upon the amendments.

The question recurred on the amendment to the amendment of Mr. RICHARDSON, and being put, it was rejected.

The question then recurred on the amendment of Mr. SPRINGER.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. Is that debatable?

Mr. SPRINGER. Has not the previous question been ordered?

Mr. TAULBEE. No, the previous question has not been ordered, and I will yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I think perhaps I ought to add to what I said at a previous stage of the discussion of this matter a word in reference to the agencies through which the original information on which these claims are allowed or disallowed is obtained by the Government, especially in view of some remarks that have since been made. I care not how careful the accounting may be or how many officers these claims pass through, the allowance or disallowance of these claims is after all determined by the report made by the agents sent out by the Quartermaster-General's Department.

As the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GEDDES] has said, the committee has reversed the action of some of these agents where claims have been allowed, but he has not given a single instance, nor have I ever heard of a single instance, where the Department or the committee has reversed the report of those agents where a claim has been disallowed.

If there is any function which requires a fair mind and judicial temper it is the function of one sent out to inquire first into the merit of these claims. The great mass of claims disallowed by the report of the agents of the Department have never been reconsidered, and the claimants have no recourse.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I know nothing about agents of the Departments of late years. I refer particularly to those sent out just after the war, full of political prejudice, full of sectional prejudice, and at whose hands many honest and meritorious claimants lost all means of redress against the Government.

I wish simply to add I heard last summer in passing through a remote section of my district that an agent of the Quartermaster-General's Department, traveling in that country no doubt at the expense of the Government, settled down at a pleasant summer house and sent across the mountain to a poor claimant who had filed a claim for a horse to come across the mountain and bring his witnesses before this agent for examination. That was a mockery of justice, for the claimant was as able to travel to Washington as across the mountain.

In these cases no fair and open trial, but often secret inquisition, was had as to the loyalty of claimants, and parties have been reported against without their knowing why they were reported against, or upon whose testimony, by men who had the instinct and methods of detectives, not of honest searchers after facts. They were reported against without opportunity for trial, which every claimant against the Government ought to have.

Mr. SPRINGER. I demand the previous question on my amendment.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof Mr. SPRINGER'S amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TAULBEE. I now yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR].

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. I move the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BRAGG. I make the point of order against that amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MCCREARY). The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. BRAGG. My point of order is this: that the amendment, in the first place, is not germane to the bill; and the reason upon which I base it is that this is a bill reported to pay the claims allowed by the accounting officers of the Treasury under what is known as the 4th of July act. Certain specific claims that are authorized by that act to be audited by certain specific officers are embodied in this bill. This amendment is a proposition to incorporate in the bill another class of cases that are not within the provisions of that act, and are not reported by the accounting officers of the Treasury.

Second, another point of order. These are cases reported from the Court of Claims and referred to the Committee on War Claims for their consideration, to be reported back by bill to this House, and are still in that committee under consideration.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to add to the point of order suggested by the gentleman from Wisconsin that the claims covered by this amendment have not yet been considered in Committee of the Whole; and they are of course subject to that point of order. For, waiving the point of order as to the original bill, the bringing of that bill before the House for consideration would not waive the point as to the other matter brought in and offered as an addition to the bill.

And further, there is no authority of law for this appropriation, while there is for the appropriation covered by the pending bill.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, the point of order of the gentleman from Indiana I will state does not apply here. It was by special agreement provided that the amendment should be offered as though it had been considered in Committee of the Whole.

The other point made by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] is that these cases are not germane to the pending bill. What are the facts?

The claims in the bill are for stores and supplies used by the military authorities. Those cases covered by the amendment are also for stores and supplies used for the same purpose. The point that they have been referred to the Court of Claims and reported back makes no difference whatever. That would have been pertinent under the rules of the last House, but can not be entertained as an objection to the amendment under the present rules. You can add to a bill pending other bills pending on the Calendar, provided that the subjects are germane to each other and of a kindred nature.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. Yes, sir.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. If it is not a fact that this amount is covered by separate bills now pending in this House?

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. That is true; but to speak of reaching separate bills on the Calendar, when it is known to be impossible, and that it can not be done, is a denial of justice to the claimants.

Besides, that rule, as far as it prevented the introduction of pending bills by way of an amendment, is no longer in force.

Mr. SPRINGER. Upon the point of order I wish to be heard for a moment, merely to call the attention of the House to the fact that these cases have been reported to the House under the Bowman act. That act does not enter a judgment or find any sum due to the claimants, but simply certifies the facts to Congress. We do not know what character of claims are certified or what the certification is or what recommendation is made with reference to them for the reason that they come to the House under an entirely different rule.

This bill relates to the payment of claims audited under the act of July 4, 1864, claims which have been allowed by the accounting officers of the Treasury Department. This amendment presents a new class of claims of which we know nothing, claims which the Court of Claims have reported upon, and, so far as we are presumed to know, may have reported against them. This bill relates to those certified as due by the accounting officers of the Treasury. The Bowman act gives no authority to the Court of Claims except to report the facts.

Mr. ROWELL. And findings of fact.

Mr. SPRINGER. And findings of fact; and if we examine the findings it may appear that the court held that they ought not to pass at all. They have no place here, and ought not to be permitted to come into this bill.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. I would like to know whether I have the floor or the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. SPRINGER. I was speaking to the point of order.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. You were discussing the merits of the bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. No; but simply referring to the point of order, and to show that these claims should not go into the pending bill.

Mr. MCCOMAS. If the gentleman from Illinois has concluded I wish to be permitted to say a word upon the point of order.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. I will yield to the gentleman, retaining the floor in my own right.

Mr. MCCOMAS. The only objection that has been really made to the proposition being in order is that it is not germane to the pending bill. It relates to the same subject-matter. This is a bill to pay certain persons money for property taken and used by the Government of the United States, and the amendment is to pay certain additional parties additional sums for other property taken and used by the Government. It has been done heretofore. I desire to refer to the case of Julia Nutt, a case pending in the Senate in the last Congress, where a claim of a similar character, being a finding of the Southern Claims Commission for $80,000, was, upon the motion of a Senator, incorporated into this bill, at the end of the bill, and the only thing done thereafter was what I now propose to do, and what I presume the gentleman from Tennessee who offered the amendment will do, that is, to amend the title of the bill covering the scope of this amendment.

There is no essential or proper difference in this case, which is simply providing to pay a number of people for property taken and used by the Government; and the amendment proposed is to pay certain other people for certain other property taken and used by the Government. The only difference is—and it is not a material difference—that the accounting officers of the Treasury report the claims embodied in the bill, while those covered by the amendment come with a higher sanction, under an act of this Congress sending these claims to the Court of Claims, and there six or seven judges, after a trial of the matter of fact, where the Government is represented by able counsel, examine the claims and have referred the facts to the Committee on War Claims, which now report them to the House and ask that they be paid.

It comes, therefore, with a sanction from the same committee. As the gentlman in charge of this bill has said, as I understood him, the preference of the committee was that the House should decide whether or not these claims should be added. They are war claims of the same character, having exactly the same incidents throughout except as regards the names of the persons and the amounts, and the amendment is therefore germane.

It is not an objection that these claims have been reported by the Committee on War Claims as entitled to be paid. That is no objection under the existing rules of this House. It commends them in fact to the favor of members of this House, and under the rule the point of order can not be made now that the substance of a pending bill shall not be offered as an amendment as in this case, where the amendment is germane in every respect.

Mr. BRAGG. I desire to say a word or two in reply to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MCCOMAS]. First, as regards his precedent from the Senate of the United States, there was no point of order made in that case; and if there had been a point of order made in the Senate of the United States its action upon it is no precedent for a ruling here in the consideration of bills under our rules.

The gentleman from Maryland omits to consider the question of order, it seems to me, as it ought to present itself to his mind. This bill is reported under a law not to pay war claims, but under a law to pay claims that have been specifically audited by officers named in the act. Therefore it is a bill for a specific purpose, for the payment of claims audited by specific auditing officers, and no others.

The fact that the claims there asked to be paid are for supplies and these also are for supplies is not pertinent, because the claims for supplies that you seek to add to this bill have never been authorized by anybody authorized by law to audit them. The Court of Claims is not included in the 4th of July act, and the Court of Claims has no authority to audit. But under the act which gave jurisdiction to the Court of Claims the special authority for consideration was reserved to this House when the court reported the facts after they are found, and its report comes back simply as an affidavit, or stronger than an affidavit, a certificate of the court, and the claim then stands upon the Calendar precisely as all other claims stand, to be determined upon the weight of evidence in support of the claim. Now if these claims have a right to go on this bill because they are for supplies, then every bill reported from the Committee on War Claims has to be added to the bill, for they are all for supplies; they are for wood, for bacon, for the use of farms, for damage done by tramping down strawberry-beds by troops marching over them. And this bill, instead of being a bill as its title defines, strictly within the act, a bill for the payment of claims audited by officers of the Treasury under a certain act of Congress, would be a general bill for taking from the Calendar of the House every claims bill reported by the Committee on War Claims to the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MCCREARY). The Chair is prepared to rule on the point of order. As the Chair understands it, this bill is for a specific purpose. It is for the allowance of certain claims reported by the accounting officers of the United States Treasury Department under the act of July 4, 1864. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR] seeks by his amendment to attach to the bill claims which have not been reported by the accounting officers of the United States Treasury Department under the act of the 4th of July, 1864. The Chair, therefore, sustains the point of order made by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the bill the following:

"The Secretary of the Treasury shall in all cases where a contract is shown to exist between the claimant and the attorney issue to the attorney a warrant for the amount of his fee, and to the claimant a warrant for the remainder of the amount of the claim."

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest to the gentleman from Kentucky that he add to his amendment, after the word "fee," the words "not exceeding, however, 10 per cent. of the amount allowed."

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. I am willing the gentleman from Indiana should offer that as an amendment, but I am satisfied you can not adopt it without giving to the claimants more trouble in the way of litigation than they have had.

Already they have been kept out of this money twenty years. Now, the Congress of the United States proposes to pass a bill by which they can get the pittances allowed them by the accounting officers. Now, if you put on an amendment saying these attorneys who made a contract for one-third of the amount shall only have 10 per cent. of the amount, you at once get the attorney and the claimant into trouble again.

I believe that the adoption of the amendment I have offered—indeed I know it from my own experience with these claimants—will enhance and advance the interests of the claimants. Only yesterday I received from a citizen of the district that I have the honor to represent a power of attorney granted to an attorney here to sign his name to the warrant by which he could draw the money which was allowed that man under a bill passed in the last session of Congress. He believed the one-third, the amount he had contracted to pay the attorney, was too much; but the attorney had the contract in his hand, and he said, "you will never get any of the money until I get the power of attorney to collect this money."

You can not put on this the amendment requiring that they shall have only 10 per cent. without violating contracts already made in writing between the attorneys and the claimants, and this amendment which I offer is the best solution of the whole question.

Mr. LONG. Why should we want to enforce the attorneys' contracts at all?

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. It seems to me that under the present ruling, by which the warrants are put into the hands of the attorney, he is able to enforce his demands against the claimant by keeping him out of his money, sometimes for months and months, until the demands of the attorney are met.

Mr. LONG. We have just adopted an amendment covering that point.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. I am aware of the amendment that has been adopted, saying that the Secretary of the Treasury shall allow the attorney a reasonable fee.

Mr. LONG. No; that the warrant shall be sent directly to the claimant.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. Then if you send it directly to the claimant, you do the attorney injustice, because he has a right to some fee for his services in these cases.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let him look to his client.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. My amendment will give the attorney his fee, and will give the claimant his money, and the whole matter will be adjusted within a short time after the bill is passed; but unless you adopt such an amendment you will get these claimants into trouble through some proceeding which will be originated by the attorneys by which the claimants will be kept out of their money indefinitely. If you want to benefit these people, you will adopt some measure by which a warrant will go directly from the Treasury to the claimant without any sort of incumbrance upon it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I now move the previous question upon the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. MCCOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I asked leave awhile ago to proffer my amendment, and I have been trying ever since to get an opportunity to do so.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will yield in order that the amendment may be read.

Mr. MCCOMAS. I propose this amendment:

In line 16, after the words "eighty six," insert "or reported to Congress under the Bowman act by the Court of Claims, and favorably reported to the House by the Committee on War Claims."

Mr. BRAGG. I make the same point of order against that that I made against the other.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] has not yielded for the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understood the gentleman from Tennessee to yield.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I yielded to have the amendment read.

Mr. MCCOMAS. I certainly thought I had a distinct understanding with the Chair for some time past that I was to have an opportunity to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It will make no practical difference, because if the amendment were received the Chair would sustain the point of order.

Mr. MCCOMAS. I did not hear the announcement of the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair said it would make no practical difference, because the Chair would rule the amendment out on the point of order made by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG].

Mr. RICHARDSON. I now demand the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. MCCOMAS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MCCOMAS. With all due deference to the Chair, I understood the Chair to say that I could send my amendment to the desk in order that it might be read, but now when I am about to send it to the desk I understand the Chair to rule that it is to be ruled out on a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair made no ruling. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] has stated that he did not yield to the gentleman from Maryland to offer his amendment, but merely to have it read. Before that statement, however, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] had raised the point of order, supposing the amendment to be pending; and the Chair simply remarked, by way of cutting off the controversy, that practically it would make no difference, and the Chair understood the gentleman from Maryland to accede to that.

Mr. MCCOMAS. I did not; and now I desire to ask a further question: When does my right arise to offer the amendment?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It will not arise now at all, because the previous question has been ordered.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I have no desire, Mr. Speaker, to cut off the amendment if it is in order, but I understand the Chair to hold that it is not in order. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is upon the amendment which the Clerk will now report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of the Treasury shall, in all cases where a contract is shown to exist between the claimant and the attorney, issue to the attorney a warrant for the amount of his fee, and to the claimant a warrant for the remainder of the amount claimed.

Mr. SPRINGER. And a small remainder, too. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The question being taken on agreeing to the amendment, there were—ayes 60, noes 64.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. No quorum.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. RICHARDSON and Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, were appointed.

Before the count by tellers was concluded—

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, said: Mr. Speaker, it seems that the interests of the claimants are not to be considered in this matter. I withdraw the point that there is no quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point being withdrawn, the amendment is rejected. The question is now on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. MCCOMAS. I wish to move to recommit the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That motion is not yet in order.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is now on the passage of the bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I demand the previous question.

Mr. McCOMAS. I move to recommit the bill with instructions to amend it so as to include the claims reported to Congress under the "Bowman act" by the Court of Claims and favorably reported by the Committee on War Claims to the House.

Mr. BRAGG. I make a point of order on that motion.

Mr. McCOMAS. I believe I have the floor.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. I wish to offer an amendment.

Mr. BRAGG. I make the point of order that this motion to recommit is not debatable.

Mr. McCOMAS. My motion is debatable.

Mr. BRAGG. I have made a point of order.

Mr. McCOMAS. I desire to be heard on the point of order, because I apprehend that the Chair, by reason of my not distinctly getting his attention during the confusion awhile ago, thought that the amendment had been withdrawn. I submit that I am entitled to be heard upon the point of order made against my proposition.

Mr. SPRINGER. But the gentleman from Wisconsin has made the point of order that the question is not debatable.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I demanded the previous question.

Mr. SPRINGER. Pending that demand, debate is not in order upon the point of order.

Mr. McCOMAS. I desire to be heard on the point of order raised upon my motion to recommit. If the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] would allow me half a minute for every two hours that he consumes I think the Chair would understand my point.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will yield the gentleman all the time I have.

Mr. REED (to Mr. McCOMAS). All right. He yields you all his time. That is unlimited. Now go on. [Laughter.]

Mr. McCOMAS. My proposition is that it is in order to move to recommit this bill, so as to include in it other claims which under existing law are required to be referred to us from Congress to Congress until acted upon. A number of those claims are now on the Calendar, having been certified by the Court of Claims and approved by the Committee on War Claims. They are germane to this bill, standing in the same class with these claims. Hence my motion to recommit, so that these other claims which have thus been reported may be included in the bill. They have been pending just as long; they involve the same subject-matter; they are germane to this bill; they are entitled to equal justice with other claims which have no greater priority and are not presented to the House with so thorough a commendation. I ask that this bill be recommitted with instructions to amend it so as to include those claims which have come to this House from the Court of Claims and have been reported by the Committee on War Claims. I submit that my motion to reconsider is in order. I ask the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. BRAGG. I will now state my point of order, after the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McCOMAS] has argued it. [Laughter.] If the amendment proposed to be added to this bill by way of recommitment would be out of order if offered as an amendment in the House, the motion to recommit with instructions to incorporate such an amendment in the bill is not in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks the point of order well taken.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I demand the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was ordered; there being—ayes 93, noes 5; and under the operation thereof the bill was passed.

Mr. RICHARDSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SPRINGER. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

Mr. BELMONT. In view of the lateness of the hour, I ask unanimous consent that gentlemen who have reports to make from committees may hand them to the Clerk without formal presentation in the House, my object being to call up as soon as possible the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to dispense with the formal call of committees for reports and to allow gentlemen having reports to hand them to the Clerk. Is there objection? The Chair hears none; and it is so ordered.

The following reports were submitted under the foregoing order:

PUNISHMENT OF CRUELTY TO ANIMALS.

Mr. COLLINS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 10139) for the prevention of and punishment of cruelty to animals; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

RECOVERY OF INTERNAL-REVENUE TAXES.

Mr. COLLINS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, also reported back favorably the joint resolution (H. Res. 224) to provide for the recovery of internal-revenue taxes and penalties erroneously assessed and paid in certain cases; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

DESTRUCTION OF OYSTERS.

Mr. CLARDY, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 10436) directing the prosecution of inquiries by the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries in respect to the destruction of oysters in the natural oyster-beds lying within the waters and jurisdiction of the United States by star-fish, &c., and making an appropriation for such purpose; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PRIVATE LIGHTS AND BUOYS.

Mr. CLARDY, from the Committee on Commerce, also reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 995) prohibiting the establishment of private lights and private buoys, and for other purposes; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORT.

Mr. CLARDY, from the Committee on Commerce, also reported back adversely the bill (H. R. 1144) prohibiting the establishment of private lights and buoys, and authorizing the temporary establishment of lights and buoys, and for other purposes; which was laid upon the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

J. A. PALMER, LATE INDEX CLERK HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. TRIGG, from the Committee on Claims, reported a bill (H. R. 11039) to reimburse John A. Palmer, late index clerk of the House of Representatives; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BELMONT. I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. BLOUNT in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills. The Clerk will report the title of the first bill in order.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10396) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes.

Mr. BELMONT. I move to dispense with the first reading of the bill for information.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. BELMONT. Mr. Chairman, in presenting this bill to the House the Committee on Foreign Affairs has considered it to be its duty to incorporate certain changes in the consular service deemed absolutely necessary, but the committee would not have made these recommendations had it not believed them to be in accordance with the rules of the House.

They are very simple, consisting mainly in transferring certain consuls from one grade to another, and thereby increasing their salaries in accordance with earnest recommendations of the State Department, also by transferring from the feed list of consuls to the salaried list certain other consuls regarded and recommended by the Department and the President as an important reform to be effected.

The House, of course, is informed already as to the provision of law by which consuls who receive a salary of $1,000 and those consuls or other officers who receive fees amounting to $1,000 or less are all entitled to engage in trade. This practice certainly is not beneficial to the service. Secretaries of State one after another have recommended to Congress the abolition of the trading class of consuls.

The Committee on Foreign Affairs has accomplished this result by omitting to appropriate for the seventh or trading class and transferring such consuls to other classes. It will hardly be necessary for me at this time to discuss the point of order which may be raised against such a proceeding. But I will say now that in my judgment the change proposed is undoubtedly within the rule of the House, because the transfer can be made without any change of existing law, there being no law fixing the number of consuls of each class.

The only distinctly organizing law unrepealed we know of is that of 1856, which made an approximate classification of our consular service. The classification, however, was more thoroughly carried out in 1874 on an appropriation bill. Each class was therein designated by the amount of salary received, but no limit as to the number of consulates in any class was fixed. Therefore, if we increase the number in any one class by a transfer we do not change existing law.

Last year the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill appropriated:

For salaries of diplomatic officers and contingent and miscellaneous expenses of foreign intercourse	$595,245
For salaries, contingent and miscellaneous expenses of consular service (not including compensation, rent, and contingent expenses of officers paid by fees)	760,820
	1,356,065

This year the bill appropriates—

For salaries of diplomatic officers and contingent and miscellaneous expenses of foreign intercourse	$645,745
For salaries and contingent and miscellaneous expenses of consular service (including appropriations for fixed salaries, office-rent, and contingent expenses of officers now paid by fees)	1,035,700

The apparent increase of this bill over last year amounts to about $325,000. Now, if the House will examine the bill it will at once see that while we increase the salaries of consuls to the extent of $125,000, we turn into the Treasury an amount of fees equaling, if not exceeding, that sum. The transfer of the seventy fee-consuls by this bill to places on the salaried list carries along with it an appropriation of $125,000 for their salaries. By the report of the Fifth Auditor there is returned to the Treasury $153,000 in fees by these officers, of which they retain as compensation at least $120,000. So that the House, in adopting this principle, will not actually increase the amount taken out of the Treasury, but will simply establish a new and better system of Treasury book-keeping.

Moreover, it can not be doubted that this transfer will carry with it a direct increase of revenue to the Treasury in the shape of a closer collection of duties. The State Department has placed this advantage, upon the lowest possible estimate, at $150,000; one estimate laid before the committee putting it considerably higher.

I will illustrate by stating one case: A merchant in Russia had endeavored to obtain from the salaried consul at Odessa an undervaluation of an invoice of wool, and the salaried consul refused to certify the invoice. But a neighboring feed consular officer did certify the invoice, and there was a loss to the Treasury of $20,000 on that one shipment.

The House will perceive, by this illustration alone, how great is the advantage to the Treasury of putting these officials upon salaries. You thereby remove the temptation which undoubtedly exists to-day to favor certain merchants in the matter of invoices, and which, as I have said, is estimated to cost the Treasury at least $150,000 a year.

I think I can say here on behalf of the committee that it has been actuated throughout by a spirit of economy, while at the same time it has had no hesitation in recommending to the House the absolutely necessary increases which have been recommended not only by Secretary Bayard but by numerous other Secretaries of State.

There are changes in the bill with reference to the diplomatic service. There is an increase in the salary of our minister to China. This has more than once before been brought prominently to the attention of Congress. Our relations with China are most important in their nature, certainly quite as much so as our relations with Russia or Germany.

Some gentleman may feel it incumbent upon him to raise the point of order against this proposition to increase the salary of the minister to China, but he will find it difficult, it seems to me, to discover what is existing law upon this question. The only law which has attempted to fix the salaries of diplomatic officials, under a systematic organization, was the law of 1856. If we go back to that law we will discover that the minister to Berlin was paid a salary of $12,000, and not $17,500, as now; so that, if the point of order lies against the increase of the salary of the minister to China, it would lie equally against the recommendation which we have repeated here in regard to the mission to Berlin, and so also as to Russia.

But the fact is, Mr. Chairman, that upon an examination of this bill the House will perceive that it can be easily disposed of within a legislative day, and although it is rather later in the day than I had hoped to bring it before the House, yet, unless I find more disposition to debate the bill than there appears to be at present, I will ask that the committee rise for the purpose of limiting the discussion.

Mr. McCREARY. I am a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and desire to submit some remarks to this House. I am not in favor of the increase of salaries recommended by the bill, and hope that debate will not be limited at this time.

This is a very important bill. It has some sweeping increases in it. It doubles the salary of a number of consuls and increases the salaries of some of our foreign ministers. It proposes an increase of the salaries of a number of consuls from $3,000 to $4,000.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York yield the floor?

Mr. BELMONT. I was somewhat surprised by the gentleman from Kentucky, a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and I did not yield. Of course, if he desires to oppose the bill I shall see that full time be given to him.

Mr. McCREARY. I do not desire—if the gentleman will allow me to correct him—I do not desire to oppose a diplomatic and consular appropriation bill. But I shall oppose the sweeping increase of salaries of this bill.

Mr. BAYNE. I desire to inquire whether or not all points of order have been reserved?

Mr. BELMONT. They have been.

I regret very much, Mr. Chairman, that my colleague on the committee should consider these changes to be, as he terms them, sweeping, and that he should seek to convey the impression that the salaries of some of the consuls had been doubled, if by that he means that the compensation has been doubled. But the House will certainly sustain the committee when it perceives that the compensation has not been doubled. Where a consul has hitherto received a thousand-dollar salary and has engaged in trade and has obtained by virtue of that privilege compensation of which this Government can obtain no knowledge—when he is put upon a salary of $2,000, as in this bill, and is thereby prohibited by a standing provision of law from engaging in trade, I admit that his salary is doubled, but the amount of compensation he receives by virtue of his position is not doubled.

On the contrary I have no doubt it has been the experience of many members upon the floor, as it has been my own, that the changes proposed in this bill have resulted in correspondence showing that the consuls are not satisfied, for they feel themselves somewhat cut down in many instances; and it is true that the committee has not followed out a very natural impulse, which would have been to compensate these officials completely for whatever may be taken away from them by transferring them from one class to another.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question? Do these consuls receive the compensation of which you speak by engaging in a legitimate business or by taking fees?

Mr. BELMONT. Both. There is a class of consuls, called the seventh class, who receive $1,000 salary. Receiving only that amount, they are therefore enabled, under the law, to engage in trade. What pecuniary advantage they may obtain in this way need not be illegitimate; and as to the amount, it can not be well estimated. But the practice is detrimental to the interests of the Government, and there is no difference of opinion as to that fact.

Mr. MILLIKEN. That is just the question I was about to ask; whether it was detrimental to the interests of the Government.

Mr. BELMONT. It is; and as to the feed consuls, those receiving fees up to the amount of $1,000 are also authorized to engage in trade. The last appropriation act provided that all feed consuls receiving over $1,000 should be estimated for by the Department upon the salaried list. That has been done. The result is before the House. The salaries provided are so adjusted as to as nearly as possible compensate the feed consuls by salaries in amount corresponding to the fees which they have hitherto been enabled to retain.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will the gentleman permit me a question?

Mr. BELMONT. Yes, sir.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York if there are not some consuls who receive almost no fees at all and take the position for the advantage it gives them in the way of trade; and if the salaries of those consuls are raised so that they shall not take fees any longer?

Mr. BELMONT. Those consuls are placed on the salaried list for the purpose named by the gentleman; that is to say, in order to prevent them from engaging in trade.

Mr. MILLIKEN. That is done in this bill?

Mr. BELMONT. It is done in this bill. And in answer to my colleague, I would only have to repeat what I have already stated to the House, that where we appropriate $125,000 in salaries there is returned to the Treasury $120,000, besides the indirect advantage of placing men in a position where they will not be tempted to undervalue merchandise; because the man upon fees, if he happens to be one of a group of consuls, for instance, all but himself receiving salaries, the man receiving the fees will certainly obtain the custom of merchants who desire to undervalue.

I do not mean to cast any discredit upon our consular service, because that service is entitled to the respect of the House. But we are compelled to take notice of facts within the knowledge of the Department of State and communicated to us upon this subject.

As to the increase in the diplomatic service of which my colleague on the committee spoke, I will say that as to salaries there are but two propositions for an increase; one being the increase of the salary for our minister to China, and the other for the increase of the salary to our minister to the Argentine Republic; and the last named is only a restoration of the salary established in 1856.

Of course if the House chooses to strike out that proposition on a point of order it has the power to do so, though I think some argument may be made to resist it. But as to the changes in the consular service, I do not think that any gentleman can successfully show that these transfers are properly subject to a point of order.

Mr. RYAN. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. BELMONT. Yes, sir.

Mr. RYAN. I see you have taken from the fifth class and restored to the fourth class Crefeld, Leipsic, and Nuremberg. Why did you not also restore from the fifth to the fourth class Sonneberg?

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. I suggest that those matters will come up when the bill is being considered by paragraphs.

Mr. RYAN. I simply wanted to ask why the same was not done by Sonneberg as was done in reference to the other places I have named.

Mr. BELMONT. I will say, in answer to the gentleman from Kansas, he will remember that in this reorganization we have taken a very large number of consuls; we have examined each case carefully, separately, and no recommendation has been made in the bill not contained in the estimates which must be in the hands of the gentleman himself. And to take up these questions at this stage of the bill it seems to me would be impracticable, because there are many other cases of a similar nature to those which the gentleman now mentions; and there are even amendments which I myself desire to propose. I would, therefore, prefer that any gentleman having such questions to propound to the committee should reserve them until we reach the respective classes in the reading of the bill.

I will say now that I know of several gentlemen who, actuated by the communications they have received from certain of these officials, desire to offer amendments. It seems to me more in order that we should consider these matters of detail when they are reached. If the House desires to enter into a general discussion on the bill, such a discussion should have a limit, and I therefore renew my motion that the committee rise for the purpose of limiting debate.

Mr. REED. How can we limit debate until we know what the nature of it is?

The question being taken on the motion that the committee rise, there were—ayes 31.

Before the negavite vote was taken—

Mr. BELMONT said: I think in view of the disposition shown by the House it may be as well to let the debate run on during the rest of this day.

The CHAIRMAN [Mr. BLOUNT]. Does the gentleman withdraw his motion?

Mr. BELMONT. I do. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. McCREARY. Mr. Chairman, "public office is a public trust," and I believe that every member of this House should, after a fair and candid examination of every question, follow his own convictions. I regret that I have not been able to agree with a majority of the distinguished gentlemen upon the Committee on Foreign Affairs, as regards this bill, but, following my convictions, I am compelled to dissent from them in so far as they increase salaries and expenses.

The total amount appropriated for the diplomatic and consular service for the last year was $1,356,065. The total amount appropriated by this bill is $1,681,445, a net increase of $325,380. If the same rate of increase of salaries and of expenditures was applied to the twelve other general appropriation bills which must be passed this session, there would be an increase of not less than $60,000,000 in the appropriations this year. I submit in this connection a table showing the amounts appropriated by the consular and diplomatic appropriation acts for the fiscal years 1877 to 1887 inclusive:

1877, Democratic House	$1,188,797 50
1878, Democratic House	1,146,747 50
1879, Democratic House	1,087,535 00
1880, Democratic House	1,097,735 00
1881, Democratic Congress	1,180,335 00
1882, Democratic Congress	1,191,435 00
1883, Republican Congress	1,256,655 00
1884, Republican Congress	1,296,255 00
1885, Democratic House	1,225,140 00
1886, Democratic House	1,242,925 00
1887, Democratic House	1,364,065 00

The bill under consideration seeks to appropriate the largest amount ever appropriated to pay the expenses proper for one year of our diplomatic and consular service.

Among the pledges made by the Democratic party two years ago was the pledge to restore economy and reduce expenditures. That party has been in power now for nearly two years, and we can point with pride to the fact that last year expenditures were decreased $17,000,000.

Mr. REED. Where?

Mr. McCREARY. I do not desire to be interrupted.

Mr. REED. I only wanted to know where those seventeen millions came in.

Mr. McCREARY. We can point to the fact that last year our increase in the revenues was $12,000,000 and that we paid nearly $100,000,000 on the public debt. But, sir, to-day we are confronted with an appropriation bill increasing the expenditures for our diplomatic and consular service one-fourth more than they were last year, and that in the face of the good record made by this House as regards the other appropriation bills passed at this session. Compared with general appropriations made last year, the sundry civil bill decreases expenditures three and a half millions, the Indian appropriation bill decreases expenditures half a million, the agricultural appropriations bill decreases expenditures about $90,000, and the pension bill, the Army bill, and the Military Academy bill are about the same in amount as they were last year.

Mr. Chairman, this is not the proper time to increase the salaries of those who hold positions in our diplomatic and consular service. I have great respect for the gentlemen who are now serving this country as foreign ministers and consuls, and I will try to do them justice. From the days when Benjamin Franklin was a foreign minister many of our ministers abroad have performed distinguished service for our country, and I wish to say here and now that many of our consuls are good men. The necessity for rigid economy was never greater in the history of our country than now. Business in many places is depressed, enterprise is stagnant, thousands of laboring men are out of employment, and the products of agriculture are not yielding renumerative prices. Hard times are oppressing the people and pitiless poverty is pinching the poor.

In strange contrast with the times that surround us are the provisions of this bill. What does this bill do? I listened to my friend from New York [Mr. BELMONT] with interest, but he did not state all that is in this bill. The bill shows that the proposed increase for the diplomatic service for the next fiscal year is $50,500. I will show that it goes further than to simply increase the salaries of two ministers, as has been alleged in this debate.

It increases the salary of the minister to China $5,500; it increases the salary of the minister to the Argentine Republic $2,500; it furnishes secretaries of legation (they have never had them before) to the Argentine Republic, Belgium, Corea, the Netherlands, the Roumanian, Servian, and Greek mission, the Swedish and Norwegian mission, Switzerland and Venezuela—the increased expenditure amounting to $12,000; it increases the salary of the interpreter at the Turkish legation $500; it increases the salary of the interpreter at Siam $300; it furnishes a clerk to the London legation at $1,200; it allows $25,000 for the erection of a legation building in Japan; it allows $3,000 for repairs to the legation in Siam, and it increases the amount allowed as the reward for foreign vessels rescuing American seamen $500; making a total increase for the diplomatic service of $50,500.

The bill also shows that the salaries of the seven consul-generals are each increased one-fourth, although these consul-generals are now receiving $4,000 and $3,000 per annum.

It also doubles the salaries of twenty-three consuls, and increases the salaries of thirty-seven consuls from $2,000 per annum to from $2,500 to $3,000 per annum.

I will not weary the House by reading from the list of consuls whose salaries have been increased, but to support my statements I submit as part of my remarks the following table:

Consular service—increase.

Places.	Present salary.	Proposed salary.	Increase.
CONSULS-GENERAL.

The bill increases the salaries of about one-half of the salaried consuls now in office, and it creates seventy new salaried consuls. At these places consuls who have heretofore been paid by the fees collected by them will, if this bill be passed as reported, be paid out of the Treasury of the United States. I submit in this connection the following table:

Increased salaries of regular consuls	$56,000
New salaried consuls	125,000
Contingent expenses for new salaried consuls	50,000
Increase for clerks at consulates	16,080
Increase interpreters and marshals at consulates	5,000
Consular inspectors	18,000
Publication of consular reports, increase	5,000
Total	275,080

I ask members of the House to recollect that I have already shown that the salaries of the diplomatic service and amounts for legation buildings have been increased $50,500. If, then, the salaries of the consular service are increased $275,080, it makes an aggregate increase in round numbers of $325,000.

Mr. HITT. The gentleman does not mean that the whole of the $275,000 is for the increase of the consular salaries. Of course he understands that it includes the purchase of buildings.

Mr. McCREARY. The purchase of buildings is included, as the gentleman suggests. If the gentleman so desires I will read the items to which I refer.

Mr. HITT. Oh, no. I knew the gentleman wished to be correct in his statement, and I was fearful an erroneous impression might be created.

Mr. McCREARY. Mr. Chairman, I have not had time to examine carefully each proposed increase of salary; I have examined, however, seventeen of those, and to those I wish now to refer. Here are seventeen cases where it is proposed to increase the salaries of consuls. I have here a table, taken from the Fifth Auditor's report, showing the present salary, the proposed salary, the amount of increase, and the fees collected last year. This table shows that at Buenos Ayres the present salary of our consul is $2,500. It is proposed by the committee to increase it to $3,500—an increase of $1,000. Yet the whole amount of fees collected there last year amounted to only $1,863.50. At Cape Town, Africa, the present salary of our consul is $1,500. It is proposed in this bill to double that salary, making it $3,000. Yet there was collected there last year by our consul in fees only the pitiful sum of $325. At Cardiff the present salary is $2,000. It is proposed to increase it to the extent of $500. The amount of fees collected there last year was only $288.

At Odessa—and I am glad now to come to Odessa—the present salary is $2,000. It is proposed by the bill under consideration to increase it to $2,500. The whole amount of fees collected there last year, according to the report of the Fifth Auditor, was only $185. As I understood the remarks of the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. BELMONT] he said that a large amount of money was to be saved at Odessa by the change he proposes in this bill.

Mr. BELMONT. Will the gentleman permit me a moment?

Mr. McCREARY. Yes, sir.

Mr. BELMONT. I think it would be a mistake to suppose that the smallness of the fees at any consulate is an indication that the office is not important. There are important consular positions where the fees are very small.

Mr. McCREARY. I do not yield for a speech. I yield for a question.

Mr. BELMONT. Then if the gentleman from Kentucky will permit me I will ask him this question: Does he know that the case which I mentioned of Odessa, where I spoke of the saving to the Treasury, was a case where a consul received fees, possibly small in amount, but because he received fees he undertook to undervalue a shipment to the extent of $20,000, his neighboring American consuls who received salaries having refused to make that undervaluation? I say that by putting a consul in the neighborhood of this consul at Rustchuk, upon a salary, you remove the temptation to undervaluation.

Mr. CURTIN. The cure for that is to get an honest man in the office.

Mr. McCREARY. It appears that this consul at Odessa was receiving part of the fees collected, and according to the statement of my friend, acted badly if not dishonestly. That man, if he acted badly or dishonestly as a feed consul, would do the same if he were a salaried consul, or would be a little more liable to misbehave in that way. Therefore the remedy is to put in a new consul——

Mr. BELMONT. That has been done.

Mr. McCREARY. And a Democrat, if there is not one there now.

Mr. Chairman, I wish also to refer, in this connection, to the proposed increase of the salary of the consul at Gaboon. The present salary is $1,000. It is proposed to double that salary, making it $2,000. Yet the whole amount of fees collected at Gaboon last year was $7.50. At Levuka the present salary is $1,000. It is proposed to double the salary. Yet the whole amount of fees collected at Levuka last year was $2.50. At Talcahuano, in Chili, the present salary is $1,000. The committee proposes to double the salary. Yet the whole amount of fees collected there last year, according to the report of the Fifth Auditor, was $29.50.

At Bombay last year the salary was $1,000. It is proposed here to double it, and pay $2,000; and yet the whole amount collected at Bombay last year was $390. At Gaspé Basin, under the present compensation, the salary of the consul is fixed at $1,000, and it is proposed to double it here, while the amount last year collected was $57. At Sierra Leone the present salary of the consul is $1,000, proposed salary is $2,000, and the fees collected by our consul last year was $97.50.

Mr. REED. Let me ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. McCREARY. Yes, sir.

Mr. REED. At whose recommendation were these changes made?

Mr. McCREARY. The majority of the Committee on Foreign Affairs reported this bill.

Mr. REED. Did they have any recommendation from the Secretary of State; or if not, from whom?

Mr. McCREARY. They had some estimates furnished by the Secretary of State.

Mr. SINGLETON. In almost every case.

Mr. REED. Are these changes made in conformity to the estimates?

Mr. McCREARY. I think some of them are; I do not know about all of them. I know the committee did not comply entirely with the recommendations of the Secretary of State.

Mr. REED. I think if you will give us the benefit of the Secretary's recommendations wherever you know them, it would be a favor to the House.

Mr. McCREARY. There is a Book of Estimates to which I would most respectfully refer the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. REED. I should like to have them in connection with your remarks.

Mr. BELMONT. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. McCREARY. Certainly.

Mr. BELMONT. Does not my colleague on the committee know that all of these recommendations were made at the State Department—not only by the present State Department, but by previous State Departments? And does he not also know that the purpose of increasing the salary of these consuls, say for instance, at Gaboon, where the sum was formally $1,000, was not to make up any difference to the consul in the fees of which he is deprived if this bill becomes a law—for he receives a very small amount of fees—but, coming within the $1,000 class, he thereby is enabled to engage in trade? And does not my friend know further, that the reason of the increase is to withdraw him from the $1,000 class, otherwise known as the "trading class?"

Mr. McCREARY. Mr. Chairman, I know that there are many good and well-equipped men who are seeking these places at the present salary, who are willing to take them as they are now paid; and therefore I see no necessity for a change.

Mr. Chairman, I shall not weary this House by reading this list any further. I have a number of other places to which I had intended to refer, where the consuls are receiving but $1,000 per annum, and where it is proposed by this bill to double the salaries, although they are collecting in fees less than $500 per annum, or I may say from $500 down to $2.50 per annum. I present a table to support my statements as regards proposed salaries and fees collected:

Place.	Present salary.	Proposed salary.	Increase.	Fees collected in 1886, as shown by Fifth Auditor's Report.
Buenos Ayres, Argentine Republic	$2,500	$3,500	$1,000	$1,863 50
Pernambuco, Brazil	2,000	3,000	1,000	973 50

Odessa, Russia	2,000	2,500	500	185 00
Gaboon, Africa	1,000	2,000	1,000	7 50
Levuka, Fiji	1,000	2,000	1,000	2 50
Talcahuana, Chili	1,000	2,000	1,000	29 50
Bombay, India	1,000	2,000	1,000	390 00
Gaspé Basin, Canada	1,000	2,000	1,000	57 00
Sierra Leone, Africa	1,000	2,000	1,000	97 50
Santiago, Cape Verde Islands	1,000	2,000	1,000	248 00
Nantes, France	1,000	2,000	1,000	566 50
Venice, Italy	1,000	2,000	1,000	570 50
Algiers, France	1,000	2,000	1,000	467 75
Total	24,000	40,000	16,000	6,307 00

The table shows that we are paying our consuls at the seventeen places named $24,000 per annum, and yet it is now proposed to increase their compensation to $40,000, although the whole amount of money collected for the Government by them in only $6,307. If the bill passes and becomes a law they will receive six times as much in salaries as they now collect.

Mr. Chairman, I understood the distinguished gentleman from New York to say that the substitution of salaried consuls for officials heretofore paid by fees would put into the Treasury $150,000 more than is put in under the present system. I hold in my hand a carefully prepared table, showing the proposed salaries of these new consuls, and the amounts they collected in the way of fees during the last fiscal year. I shall not weary the House by reading it all over, but submit it as a part of my remarks, and it will be printed in the RECORD.

It shows that fifty-one salaried consuls are proposed in this bill in lieu of officials now compensated by fees. It shows also that nineteen salaried consulates are proposed at places where there are now simply consular agents, making in all seventy, and adding up the proposed salaries and all the fees collected, we find that the proposed salaries for the seventy new consuls amount to $125,000. The fees collected last year by these consuls amounted to $140,841. Therefore the fees collected last year only exceed the proposed salaries about $15,000, and if we leave out of this calculation the fees collected at St. Galle, $7,910, and Annaberg, $7,952, there is substantially no difference between the proposed salaries and the fees collected.

Salaried consuls proposed in lieu of certain ones now compensated by fees.

I believe whenever you say to those men who are now being paid by fees that they are to receive fixed annual salaries they will become careless about the fees. That is the history of all such officers. Whenever you say to them you shall draw a salary twice as high as you received before, there is danger that they will then become careless and indifferent as regards the amount collected by fees, and the amount received from the seventy consuls will not probably equal what it was at the end of the last fiscal year. We have been going on for many years under the present system. There is no pressing demand for the substitution of salaried consuls for feed consuls, and I do not believe the change will add to the wisdom or efficiency of our consular service.

Mr. BELMONT. Will my friend allow me a question?

Mr. McCREARY. Yes, sir.

Mr. BELMONT. Does the gentleman suppose when he says that by putting feed consuls upon the salaried list no benefit will accrue to the service? Does he suppose that his experience upon that is better than that of every Secretary of State since Monroe? And does he imagine that the House will retrograde in this matter because from year to year consuls have been transferred from the feed to the salaried list? And what the committee now proposes to do is to take a longer step in advance. That is all. It is nothing new.

Mr. McCREARY. I do not propose to put my knowledge against the views of the various Secretaries of State to whom my friend from New York refers. But I am willing to stand with all the members of Congress since Monroe's time who have universally refused to do it.

Mr. LONG. Can you show what connection there is between the salary of the consul and the amount of fees he collects?

Mr. McCREARY. As a general rule if there is much business done there will be good fees. If there is no business of any consequence done the fees will be insignificant, amounting as they do in one case cited to $2.50 per annum.

Mr. Chairman, I am compelled to dissent to one statement made in the report filed by a majority of the committee, and I only refer to it because I fear that some of my colleagues might be misled by it. Near the close of the report is this statement in reference to the change from the fee system to the salaried system:

Estimated gain to Treasury from increased collections, $150,000.

I do not believe any member of this House or of the committee can show that the gain to the Treasury, if this bill becomes a law, will amount to $150,000.

I have carefully made an estimate, and if you leave out St. Galle and Annaberg the fees amount to about the same as the salaries. I do not see how there can be a gain to the Treasury from increased collections amounting to $150,000 as stated in the report.

Mr. BELMONT. As the gentleman from Kentucky has called for explanations and challenges any member of the committee to give them, it seems to me only proper that at this time an answer should be made. I think my friend is mistaken as to the meaning of that phrase. He clearly is. The Department has made this estimate most carefully, not as to the amount of fees returned or anything of the kind; it is simply an estimated gain to the Treasury by reason of honest invoices. That is what it means.

Mr. McCREARY. The majority report says:

Estimated gain to Treasury, $150,000.

When the gentleman comes to occupy the rest of his time I will be glad if he will show this House in what particulars the gain of $150,000 is made. It would be just as easy to say $300,000.

Mr. BELMONT. Will not my friend be kind enough to read what is said there? It does not say——

Mr. McCREARY. I have read it in full—

Estimated gain to the Treasury from increased collections——

Mr. BELMONT. "Increased collections;" that is to say——

Mr. McCREARY. When the gentleman from New York comes to occupy the rest of his time I want him to show how there will be an increase of collections amounting to $150,000, and give the particular cases.

Mr. BELMONT. If the gentleman will permit me to do so now, I will.

Mr. McCREARY. If the gentleman can give me the particular cases I will hear him now.

Mr. BELMONT. The question only proves——

Mr. McCREARY. I do not want any general answer. I want the places where the increase will occur.

Mr. BELMONT. The question of my friend only proves, I am sorry to say, that he does not understand what this means.

Mr. McCREARY. Mr. Chairman, I decline to be interrupted any further. I shall not go to the distinguished gentleman from New York for information after the speech he made to-day in regard to the pending bill; for I think my friend does not understand it himself.

Mr. BELMONT. I am very sorry——

Mr. McCREARY. I decline to be interrupted any further.

Mr. BELMONT. Very well.

Mr. McCREARY. Mr. Chairman, commerce does not depend on consuls. Our diplomatic and consular system amounts to but little in regard to improving our commerce—only a bubble in the great movement of commerce. What we need in order to make commerce and revive shipping in this country is a fair revenue law. Taxes should be removed from the articles used in the construction of our ships, so as to make it to the interest of our people not to invest alone in untaxed bonds, but to invest also in ocean sailing vessels, which ought to be built as cheap in this country as in any other country in the world.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. BELMONT], in the course of his remarks, said that the increase of the salaries of consuls was made because of a section in the diplomatic and consular bill passed last session. I will read that section, because that is an important point. In the last diplomatic and consular bill, passed at the first session of the Forty-ninth Congress, is the following language:

And in the estimates for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, there shall be estimated for specifically, under classified consulates, all consulates and commercial agencies where the fees collected or compensation allowed for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, exceeds $1,000.

That clause only refers to the estimates for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, but it does not require the substitution of salaried consuls for officers heretofore paid by fees. For the benefit of my friend from New York, who I fear has never seen it, I will read him the law which now regulates the pay of our consuls in the United States, and then he will see that the bill under consideration contains new legislation.

Here is the law under which we pay our consuls and which regulates our consular service so far as payment is concerned. I read from the supplement to the Revised Statutes of the United States, page 401.

And the salaries provided in this act for the officers within named respectively shall be in full of the annual salaries thereof from and after the 1st day of July, 1879, and all laws and parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is that the act of 1879?

Mr. McCREARY. Yes, the act approved January 27, 1879. That is the law to-day, and any attempt to change that law in this appropriation bill is in violation of the rules of this House.

Mr. Chairman, I see no necessity for the increase of salaries as provided in this bill. I see no necessity for the change that is sought to be made so as to substitute salaried consuls for officials heretofore paid by fees. Where does the demand come from? I hear of no demand coming from those who take an interest in the improvement of our diplomatic and consular service beyond our committee and the Secretary of State. Is it necessary to increase the salaries and make the change in order to find men who will take diplomatic and consular positions? Sir, if I am correctly informed, not less than ten—probably from ten to fifty—patriots are to-day anxious to take each of these places as consuls and consuls-general.

There is probably no member on this floor who can not furnish an intelligent, patriotic, well-equipped gentleman to take any one of these places at the present salary. I hear members on all sides respond that they have constituents who are anxious to accept the places at the present salaries. [Laughter.]

But will any evil consequence follow from not passing the bill as it is reported by the committee? Will any of these consuls who have been feasting and fattening, many of them for years, in good offices resign? That would be a great calamity, Mr. Chairman—to them, if not to the country. But I do not believe they will resign. If they do, however, there will spring up in every part of this great Republic good and worthy men ready to take the places at the salaries now paid.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Or at a liberal discount.

Mr. McCREARY. But, Mr. Chairman, while I am on this subject I may as well read something about the class of gentlemen who have in days gone by represented us so well in the consular service. There was a time only a few years ago when the House of Representatives and the Senate passed a bill which authorized the appointment of two consular inspectors to make the grand circuit and visit all our consuls in Asia, Egypt, South America, and in other countries.

Many gentlemen present are probably well acquainted with one of the gentlemen appointed for that purpose, and will recognize the name of Mr. De B. Randolph Keim. He was appointed by President Grant under an act of Congress to visit the consulates, and he made a report, which I hold in my hand. I may remark in passing that the bill also authorized the appointment of another inspector, and an able and distinguished gentleman of this city, known, I believe, as Dr. Newman, was appointed, and he, too, made the grand march around among our consulates and came back, but, so far as the world knows, he has never yet made a report to tell the country what he discovered.

Mr. CALDWELL. But he got there all the same.

Mr. McCREARY. He certainly had the enjoyment of a trip around the world.

Mr. Chairman, I hold in my hand, as I have said, the only report that was made by these visitors, and that was made by Mr. Keim. I will not weary the House by reading the whole report, but will read simply the concluding remarks of the distinguished gentleman, Mr. Keim, after he had traveled 43,000 miles, and had drawn his salary, amounting to over $5,000.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. How many pages are there of the report?

Mr. McCREARY. Four hundred and forty-one.

Mr. McCREARY. The concluding passage of the report is as follows:

I have endeavored to point out concisely some of the irregularities and abuses which have made the consular service of the United States so notorious throughout the world. It will have been seen that there was not a single consulate at which a complete set of record-books from the beginning, as required by regulations, was to be found.

The officers, as a rule, at the time of my visit had been obliged to open their books anew, or had had it done by a subordinate. Almost every consulate had some defects in its history, owing to the incompetency, low habits, and vulgarity of some of it officers during the endless round of evils incident to official rotation.

Abuses had been committed in the collection of fees; in the exercise of judicial powers; in the adjustment of the business affairs of American citizens; in the settlement, where permitted, of the estates of intestate American citizens dying abroad; in selling the American flag; in "running out" ships; in discharging seamen; in affording relief or medical attendance to destitute or sick American seamen; in establishing American settlements abroad; in issuing illegal passports; in countenancing shipping-masters; in taxing Chinese emigrants. Indeed, the most important feature of my investigation was the ingenuity displayed by consular officers since the act of 1856, particularly in defrauding the Government and grasping gains from various outside sources besides. If all could be told of the consular service of the United States, as illustrated in the conduct of its officials, the excess of bad over good would be so great that the most cold and indifferent citizen would blush for the name of his country.

Mr. SINGLETON. If such be the state of things, does not the gentleman think it is time we should endeavor to remedy it?

Mr. McCREARY. I do.

Mr. SINGLETON. That is just what we are trying to do.

Mr. McCREARY. But I do not think the proper remedy is to increase the salaries of the men who have been acting in that way.

Mr. SINGLETON. You say that they have acted badly; that they have been driven to resort to all sorts of means to make a living——

Mr. McCREARY. But I do not wish to increase their salaries.

Mr. SINGLETON. We need to get honest men for the offices, and then pay them properly for their services.

Mr. McCREARY. So I think.

Mr. SPRINGER. What is the date of the report to which the gentleman referred?

Mr. McCREARY. The date is 1872.

Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to say anything improper about our foreign ministers and consuls. As I said before, among them are a great many good men—intelligent, accomplished, able men, who are a benefit to our country, and who are discharging their duties faithfully and properly, and whose accounts come up to the Fifth Auditor in proper shape. But it is well known that among our consuls are some men who are more ornamental than useful. I believe it was a very appreciative poet who said on one occasion—

The violet loves a sunny bank,
The cowslip loves the leas,
A minister loves a glittering rank,
And a consul loves his ease.

Several MEMBERS. His fees! [Laughter.]

Mr. McCREARY. Some points have been referred to by my distinguished friend from New York, to which I desire now to allude specifically. This bill proposes certain specific things which I wish to discuss. In the first place it increases the salary of our minister to China $5,500. There is to-day no greater necessity for the increase of the salary of the minister to China than for the increase of the salary of the minister to Mexico. To-day there are but five hundred or six hundred American citizens in all the Chinese empire. In Mexico there are thousands of American citizens, and we have much trade and business with the citizens of our neighboring republic. Why, then, should we increase the salary of the minister to China and not increase the salary of the minister to Mexico? I do not believe there is any necessity for increasing the salary of our minister to China, and I am opposed to it. As this country has progressed our ministers to the Argentine Republic, to Belgium, to the Netherlands, and to other places named in the bill have gotten along very well without secretaries of legation. They have clerks, and that is enough. Yet this bill allows for secretaries of legation at the places named—an increase of $12,000.

Besides, the bill allows $25,000 for the erection of a legation building in Japan. Shall we now commence to erect gorgeous legation buildings in all foreign countries to which our ministers are sent? If we are to do this, if that is the wisdom of this country, if that is the way to get a wise and efficient diplomatic service, and this House says it shall be done, then, though I oppose it, I would bow my head and submit. Whenever you appropriate $25,000 to erect legation buildings at Japan, you open the door to the erection of legation buildings in every country to which we send a minister. I see no reason why to-day we should commence the erection of a building in Japan to be used as a legation building. We have not in all this world a legation building except, I believe, a common kind of a house at Siam which was given to us; and if I had been here at the time I should have opposed the acceptance of that gift.

This great country, with its millions of population and millions of wealth and millions of surplus in the Treasury, should not be dependent upon the bounty of the Emperor of Japan or the King of Siam for a little ground or a small house as headquarters for our ministers. And now they come to ask us to accept ground from Japan and to appropriate $25,000 to erect a building on that ground. I am opposed to the appropriation of money for the erection of legation buildings abroad for the entertainment of our ministers.

Mr. HOPKINS. Will the gentleman give us the reasons for his opposition?

Mr. McCREARY. For a hundred years distinguished ministers, from Benjamin Franklin to the present, have represented us abroad with ability and credit. It has not been necessary, in carrying out our republican simplicity, to ape the customs of effete aristocracy of any country.

Mr. HOPKINS. Is that the only reason the gentleman can give?

Mr. McCREARY. I think that is sufficient.

Mr. HOPKINS. Then you would have had President Cleveland inaugurated with the same simplicity that attended the inauguration of Jefferson, and would have him receive the same salary?

Several MEMBERS. Yes.

Mr. McCREARY. If Mr. Cleveland had been inaugurated with the same simplicity as was Mr. Jefferson, I should have made no objection.

Mr. HOPKINS. You are dodging the question.

Mr. McCREARY. After the Democratic party had been out of power for twenty-five years and elected a Democratic President, I can see no reason why they should not come here and rejoice that they had driven the Republican party out of power and put a Democratic President in the White House.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to refer to another item in this bill. The item with regard to consular inspectors. I have already adverted to Mr. Keim and Dr. Newman, who were appointed consular inspectors, one of whom made a report and the other did not.

This bill proposes to appropriate $18,000 to pay two other consular inspectors. It authorizes them to make a tour around the earth to visit all our consuls.

Mr. Chairman, I have read with interest Humboldt's Cosmos. In my reading I followed General Grant in his tour around the world with great delight. Last summer I listened to an evangelist and missionary with pleasure as he detailed how he had preached and praised the Lord all over the globe. But these consular inspectors will have to visit more places than were visited by either of the gentlemen to whom I have referred. They will have to leave this country and journey toward the rising sun. They will, perhaps, have to visit the sunny scenes of Italy and the lowlands of Scotland. They will probably pass over the vine-clad valleys of the Rhine. They will visit the republics of Central and South America, whose representative men we are so anxious to have come and meet us in this beautiful Capital city. [Applause.] They will visit hundreds of consuls and listen to the music of many languages. They will hobnob with sovereigns, and perhaps be humbugged by tradesmen. They will, doubtless, ride with titled noblemen, dine with dignified dames, and dance with Persian princesses. [Great laughter.]

They will go, Mr. Chairman, in the discharge of their duty from the ice-clad altitudes of Chimborazo down to the equatorial line, and from the heights of the Andes, near where the yawning chasms of the Cordilleras sparkle with gems and jewels, all round to the smiling vales found in other parts of this world. But at last they will return, realizing, no doubt, as we all realize, that beyond all lands they have visited this great Republic is the grandest and the dearest. [Applause.] And, Mr. Chairman, they are to get for that journey all over the globe $4,000 per annum and expenses paid. [Laughter.] Now, in the light of what has happened in the past, in the light of what is contained in Mr. Keim's report, and what we know about Mr. Newman's grand tour round the world, where is the necessity for appointing two such inspectors at $4,000 a year as recommended by a majority of the committee?

I for one, Mr. Chairman, think the time has come when, instead of increasing appropriations, as this bill does, we should turn our attention to more important matters. We should, in my judgment, give our attention to complying fully and completely with the pledges we made to the people. We should restore economy. We should see that expenses are reduced. We should look to the rebuilding of an adequate and efficient navy. We should foster and encourage labor. We should especially provide for the restoration of our commerce to what it ought to be. And in that view we should begin the long-deferred reform of our tariff legislation.

Those are the questions, Mr. Chairman, we should turn our attention to now, instead of increasing salaries of our diplomatic and consular officers. [Applause.]

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with interest to my esteemed friend from Kentucky [Mr. McCREARY], and when discussing a subject with which he is thoroughly informed it would gratify me to follow him. I dislike to differ with him on this bill, but he will pardon me for seeking the most reliable information on so important a matter. When gentlemen were engaged during the past year in canvassing among their constituents they can not claim to be as familiar with our diplomatic and consular service as the able and distinguished Secretary who worthily fills the Department of State, and his corps of assistants, some of whom have devoted the greater part of their lives to this service. I therefore repeat I prefer to look to the State Department for information on the matters now before the committee rather than to the gentleman from Kentucky. I appreciate the force of his eloquence on a constituency not familiar with the duties and responsibilities of our foreign service, and even fear its effects upon this House were we not to be controled by facts rather than appeals to prejudice.

But we are called on to treat of great and important public questions—a branch of the service that relieves the toiling masses of this country from direct taxation, and through import and other duties fills the redundant coffers of an overflowing Treasury. Our diplomatic representatives reside at foreign courts; strictly watch over our relations with other governments, and protect and guard the rights of American citizens who may visit those countries for traffic or pleasure. They are the means of often averting foreign wars as well as giving to our nation valuable information which could not otherwise be secured.

The consular corps of the United States is divided by law into different classes. There are consuls who invariably receive salaries, and others who are paid by fees. Then there are consular agents who receive salaries, while others without exception are compensated by fees, while the vice-consuls receive no fixed salaries, and receive no compensation except in the absence of the chief.

The committee has made no recommendation in regard to the diplomatic service other than as to the minister to China and to the Argentine Republic. The increase of salaries recommended in these instances, in my opinion, must upon a brief examination be made manifest to all.

Some thirty years ago England and France were bombarding the ports of China for the purposes of conquest and to secure commercial intercourse. Up to this time these people had closed their ports and held comparatively little intercourse with the outside world.

Since that time no nation has made greater progress in arts and arms and commerce than these people. Her imports in 1884 amounted in round numbers to about $75,000,000. Her imports of cotton goods alone were about $22,000,000, not including $1,800,000 for raw cotton, besides $4,000,000 for woolen goods. Her exports were chiefly tea, silk, &c. I regret to find that her commerce with this country was not as great as our resources entitled us to expect. Still, it is improving.

China has a population ranging from four hundred to four hundred and fifty million, while her territory embraces about one-ninth of the habitable globe. The expense of getting to that country and the cost of living when once there are to be taken into consideration in fixing salaries.

A consular officer who for many years lived in China says, substantially, the Chinese are a people punctillious in all that relates to official etiquette and prone to judge of a people by the tone of her representatives. Foreigners have not been slow to appreciate these Oriental characteristics, and by organizing their services on a lavish scale have secured for themselves protection and development for which we ask in vain.

The Chinese soldier, who was once content to confront his enemy with the beating of gongs and the parade of elephants, under the discipline of the finest European officers, has been transformed into a dangerous adversary, as the French learned to their cost in the Tonquin war. This nation, quick to appreciate and apply the missiles of destruction of her more enlightened neighbor, has now the most approved small-arms, with the largest guns frowning from her forts, while her war vessels have not been neglected.

The immigration of large numbers of Chinese to this country, with our efforts to exclude them by force and by treaty, as well as the treatment of our missionaries and traders in that country, have presented some of the most delicate and difficult political questions in our diplomatic intercourse. In our treaties with that nation we have been met with a generous and liberal spirit. We have been prompted by no spirit of aggrandizement, and hence they have felt confident of our disposition to deal fairly by them. It is insisted that it is not unreasonable on the part of this committee to recommend that we should send to China a first-class minister as we do to four of the leading powers upon the continent of Europe.

In regard to the recommendation to increase the salary of the minister to the Argentine Republic my opinion is not so decided. She is one of the sister republics of South America, who, being near our doors, it behooves us to cultivate the most intimate relations with, as well as with all South American republics, and also with Brazil. Her imports amounted in 1884, in round numbers, to $94,000,000, and consisted of foods and drinks, textiles and clothing, wearing apparel, and furniture. Her imports from the United States amounted to only $7,500,000. Indeed, when we see the limited amount of commerce carried on between this country and our South American neighbors we are forcibly impressed by the advantage to be derived from closer social, political, and commercial relations.

The annual trade of the whole South American states amounts to about $1,500,000,000 per annum, from which the United States imports about $85,000,000 and exports not one-third of the amount in return. It is not singular, therefore, that there should be depression at home when our manufactures are accumulating without a market and our grain and food products are confined virtually at home. I therefore do not consider that the committee has been extravagant in recommending an increase of the salary of the minister to the Argentine Republic, which is annually becoming more and more commercially allied to the United States than any other of her neighboring sisters.

One of the most important auxiliaries to our foreign commerce is our consular service. As is stated in Executive Document No. 121, Forty-eighth Congress, first session, "other countries commenced, as we did, by appointing merchants as consuls, generally leaving the nomination for the position to the most prominent merchants where the office was to be established." This system has to a large extent been abandoned by all countries, and entirely by many. Paid consuls have been appointed in their places, who are selected by the governments which appoint them. They should be appointed not only when our country has already established its trade, but a wise and statesmanlike policy would dictate that when there is a prospect of opening our trade they should be sent forward to compete with others by attempting to secure it for their country.

The gentleman has read from a report made to this Government by inspectors appointed under the administration of General Grant, in which one of the inspectors reports the service to be in a most demoralized and deplorable condition, and yet he resists the appointment of inspectors provided for by this bill. If our consuls are to be free from such supervision, what is the remedy for the evils he would have us believe exist?

Mr. McCREARY. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. With pleasure.

Mr. McCREARY. My remedy is to turn out bad men and put in good men.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. Who shall judge whether they are good or bad men?

Mr. McCREARY. I am not willing to leave it to you.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. No, I would not be willing to assume the responsibility myself.

Mr. McCREARY. It is a rule of law that no man should be a judge in a case in which he is interested.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. The gentleman from Kentucky has said he would apply the remedy by turning out bad men and putting good men in office. That is the evil that makes calamity of such long life. Who can say whether a man is a good or bad man when appointed? Shall it be the politician that recommends the appointment, or accommodating neighbors and friends who indorse for him? Experience would teach me to say, the character of the indorsement is not an invariable test of merit. There are motives underneath which need not always be bad.

But if only good men were appointed what is the disadvantage of having them inspected? Temptation might induce even such to occasionally step aside. "Deliver us from temptation" is one of the most wholesome as well as comprehensive invocations that can be offered up. Every branch of the Government at home has its inspector, and experience has shown the necessity for and the wisdom for such appointments. It is true that these duties are presumed to be performed by the consuls-general. But they are often unsatisfactory and ineffective, while the inspectors would be accountable directly to the Secretary of State. Our consuls are distributed all over the civilized world. While exposed to temptations they are without the restraints which the eyes of neighbors at home impose upon those among us.

How long could a man go astray in this country without the detective eye of a newspaper reporter finding it out? Why, then, should my distinguished friend while arraigning our consular service for inefficiency and neglect withhold from the Department the most effective means of detecting and correcting abuses? While I have great respect for the opinion of the gentleman from Kentucky, he will pardon me when I declare I have far more confidence in the recommendations of the distinguished Secretary of State on matters of international polity than I have for those of any one Representative on this floor.

Mr. McCREARY. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. Certainly.

Mr. McCREARY. Have you any confidence in the action of Congress for many years which refused to change the system or increase the salaries?

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. In reply to the gentleman's question I answer that these recommendations have not been made for a great number of years. It is well known to members that this side of the House was not in political accord with the State Department for quite a long time, with the exception of the Forty-seventh Congress. If it had been I have no doubt some of these reforms would have been adopted. From the Forty-fourth Congress up to the beginning of this Congress a rule of the House forbid the increase of salaries, and yet we know changes were made in various instances.

Mr. McCREARY. Why did your committee fail to make the changes last year?

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. We did bring in a bill covering the points, but were unable to get it considered.

Mr. McCREARY. The committee reported a diplomatic and consular bill last year, but they did not make these increases of salaries or adopt the changes which are recommended here in this present bill.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. They made substantial changes and reported a separate bill which they were unable to get considered. Let me call the gentleman's attention to a recommendation on this subject made by Secretary of State Frelinghuysen, which may be found in Executive Document No. 121, Forty-eighth Congress, first session. In speaking of the salary as opposed to the fee system, on page 7, he says:

> In the opinion of the Department the present system of compensation by fees, either official or unofficial, should be abolished. Whatever money comes into the consul's hands should be turned into the Treasury of the United States, and he should depend for his support entirely upon the salary allowed by Congress.
> A consular officer of high grade and much experience in Germany and Russia, in alluding to this branch of the subject, says:
> "I think that all consuls should receive a liberal provision, and should be forbidden to increase their income by notarial work or perquisites of any kind. Every fee collected by a consul should be credited to the Government."
> A consul of some twenty years' experience in Europe recommends a liberal but exactly defined salary and the entire abolition of unofficial fees; every fee to be official and returned to the Treasury.

The old system of requiring the officers of the criminal courts in the States to be dependent upon the fees collected from the criminal has been generally abandoned as being unjust and oppressive, unjust to the officers and oppressive to the litigant, and the same policy will be abandoned when the United States district attorneys and marshals bill can be reached in this House. I welcome this proposition as a measure calculated to ameliorate our consular system in the interest of commercial interchange, and the establishment of those relations that should exist between this Government and her commercial sisters. I can not, therefore, appreciate a policy which would pay its officers a salary at home and make them depend upon fees when serving abroad.

The gentleman from Kentucky has had a great deal to say about the luxury and style in which the representatives of this country abroad indulge. The gentleman does not mean that seriously, and does not expect that it will influence any member who may hear him. That may do from the hustings when it is insisted that a member of Congress subsists magnificently and luxuriously upon his $5,000 per annum; that he rolls in fine carriages and dresses in fine linen, whereas many were seeking to eke out their salaries a few days ago by the employment of a clerk at the expense of the Government! No! Tell it not in Gath; proclaim it not in the streets of Askalon, that this debate has produced no better argument in opposition to the measure proposed by the committee than the one here employed.

For really and in truth, there is no Department of the Government whose officers have fewer advocates on this floor than our poorly-paid consular service. There are exceptions, it is true, but they are such as only prove the rule. The reason is plain. One appointed to go abroad can no longer manipulate primaries and promote the interests of his friends. Out of sight, out of mind, is an old and true adage. A letter from across the water has not near the magnetism of the touch of the elbow.

It is not my purpose, Mr. Chairman, to follow the gentleman in the discussion of the details of this bill. That will be more appropriate when we consider it by sections under the five-minute rule. It may be sufficient to say, generally, that the value of a consul to his government is not to be estimated by the fees he may collect at his office.

At one port a large number of goods may be shipped in small packages, on each of which he collects a fee, while at another goods of twenty times the value may be shipped in bulk, on which but few fees are collected. Not only this, in some of the countries consuls are invested with judicial power, through extraterritorial jurisdiction, and are really clothed with power to try men for capital felonies. Suppose here, at such a place, his fees were but small? Would you regulate his salary in proportion to the amount received? Would you esteem the life and liberty of a citizen of so little value? Most assuredly not.

Now my friend goes on and speaks of our building a house in Japan. He thinks that is a great departure from our usual policy. Why, sir, it is merely a matter of dollars and cents which my friend is so much concerned about; and as he wants to see the expenses reduced, let us see what is said by the Secretary of State in regard to it. The Secretary says:

> The offer by Japan to the United States of a commodious plat of ground for building a legation thereon has been repeatedly brought to the attention of Congress. The scarcity of habitable dwellings or premises for a legation in Japan subjects our Government to the necessity of renting from but one owner, upon such terms as he may dictate.

Now my friend would allow one man to dictate what we should pay.

> Rent has been paid for the past ten years at the rate of $3,400 per annum. Argumentation seems, therefore, unnecessary to prove that the true interests of economy, as well as dignity and convenience, would be subserved by granting the appropriation asked for.

Four per cent. on $25,000 would be $1,000, whereas we now pay a yearly rent of $3,400. That is the gentleman's economy.

Mr. McCREARY. Will the gentleman from North Carolina allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. Yes, sir.

Mr. McCREARY. If we build legation quarters in Japan, why should we not erect legation quarters in France, England, Russia, Spain, and everywhere else?

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. I am surprised that my friend asks that question, which is one so easy to be answered. It is because we can rent in these countries buildings suitable for legation purposes at a moderate rate.

Mr. McCREARY. What is the rent in England?

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. Not very much.

Mr. McCREARY. I think it is fully as large as it is in Japan.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. There is no necessity for it in those countries. France and England and Russia have accepted similar plats of ground from Japan and erected buildings thereon, and the gentleman from Kentucky, familiar as he is with our diplomatic service, knows that the condition of things in Oriental countries is totally different from what it is in the countries mentioned. In Japan they have a distinct class of dwellings, different from what we are accustomed to, and their grouping differs from ours, and the same is true as to some other Eastern countries.

Mr. SPRINGER. If the gentleman from North Carolina will permit me I will say also that in those countries of the East portions of territory are set apart for residences of foreign legations, and they are compelled to build their own houses or have no place to live in at all.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. That is quite true. Now in regard to China, the gentleman finds a great trouble there. I do not see any. I think the recommendation is a very proper one.

We must keep abreast with the progress of the times. We must look at what is going on in other countries and not stand here and be content to declare we represent the greatest nation under the sun, but do nothing to advance its interests. We need enterprise and intelligence to regulate and systematize our foreign policy, as well as our Government at home. No man appreciates the advantages we enjoy more than myself, but I do not want these advantages to be lost by narrowness and neglect.

The gentleman talks about the Democratic party keeping pledges. We must cut down salaries and reduce expenses. What else did we promise to do? We said:

> Unnecessary taxation is unjust taxation. A surplus taxation of more than $100,000,000 has yearly been collected from a suffering people. We denounce the Republican party for having failed to relieve the people from crushing war taxes which have paralyzed business, crippled industry, and deprived labor of employment and of just reward.

Mr. REED. That declaration sounds a little funny now.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. It sounds very funny after the speech of my friend. It sounds funny to the other side. But the fun will be on our side when the people understand who are responsible for the delay in carrying out this needed reform.

Mr. REED. Will they understand it when you pass this bill?

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. This bill will not affect that. We have other bills before the House which, if you will give us your assistance, will do it.

I say, then, Mr. Chairman, when we look abroad and see the exports of this country reaching nearly $800,000,000 and the imports over $700,000,000, and see the industries in this country crippled and fettered by a narrow, contracted policy, it becomes incumbent upon us to seek new markets and new fields for this great country. In order to do so, we ought to have capable and first-class representatives to aid in this work.

We should remember, furthermore, that while we are finding fault here with the appropriations recommended for the diplomatic service, the responsibility devolves upon us, and I am satisfied that our friends upon the other side are willing that we shall make such provision, within reasonable bounds, as proper for that service. I certainly want nothing more; the committee have recommended nothing more. This bill has received their careful and painful examination and consideration. We desire to rise equal to the necessities of the service without resorting to any appeals to people on the outside for economy sake. Gentlemen of intelligence understand the difference between economy and frugality and parsimony. We have tried not to be parsimonious nor particularly frugal, but we do desire to be economical in its appropriate sense in the administration of the affairs of this Department.

The appropriations are such as the necessities of the service demand. It is very easy to excite prejudice against our foreign service. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. McCREARY] says he can find plenty of men willing to fill these places. No doubt of that. No place can be named that you can not find plenty of men who will undertake to fill it. But that is not the question. We desire to apply the old Jeffersonian test of capacity and honesty, and in order to secure the services of such men you must allow them a compensation which will enable them to live.

When I want information on the subject of our foreign relations I seek it at the fountain. I go to the State Department.

Mr. McCREARY. Did the gentleman follow the recommendations of the State Department in the preparation of the bill now under consideration?

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. I followed them as far as the light before me permitted, but not blindly.

Mr. McCREARY. Is it not a fact that a good many recommendations made by the State Department were not indorsed by the committee and were left out of the bill?

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. Unquestionably; and that is the case with every appropriation bill. But I do not say that the bill is any better on that account. Our hesitation sustains my position, that the committee have been careful in examining the recommendations that have been made, and probably they would have gone further but for the difficulties that arise under our rules. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe in a narrow, paring system in regard to the compensation of our public officers. I think they ought to be allowed to live, and I know that the American people do not desire that inadequate salaries shall be paid to faithful public servants. The recommendations here made were really less than the State Department thought necessary. The Department recommended about $1,600,000, and we have, in round numbers, about $1,300,000.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not know that it is necessary for me to protract this debate; but I do think that after the State Department has carefully considered all these matters and submitted them to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and after that committee has given them their careful consideration, they are entitled to the respectful consideration of this House and am confident they will receive it.

Mr. LONG. Will the gentleman from North Carolina permit a suggestion?

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. Yes, sir.

Mr. LONG. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. McCREARY] insisted very much upon the fact that there was a proposition to pay $2,000 to consuls in some places where the fees were very small. I wish the gentleman from North Carolina would enlarge somewhat upon a question which must have occurred to the committee—the question of the relation between the importance of the consulship and the amount of the fees. I take it there are many places where there are practically no fees, yet where it is exceedingly important to have competent, intelligent, honest officials, so that the amount of fees is not always a fair test of the importance of the office.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG] probably did not hear what I said on that subject. I spoke of it, and I remarked that in some places the consuls were invested with the power to try men for their lives; and the fees are no test at all.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will ask the gentleman whether it is not true that in the law as it now stands, and in this bill also, the consuls at points in the East where we are compelled to give them judicial powers are now receiving salaries ranging from $3,500 to $5,000 a year? That being so, the argument that it is necessary now to increase the salary of any consul because he has judicial powers does not apply here.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. I merely used that by way of illustration of the importance of a consul who might collect but few fees. There are other responsible duties which the consuls may have to perform in places where the fees are no adequate test of the importance of the consulate.

Mr. SPRINGER. I agree with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG] that the amount of the fees is not always a correct test. In many cases it is, but it certainly fails as a test at those points in the Eastern countries where, from the necessities of the case, our consuls are invested with judicial powers.

There the fees would be no measure whatever of the consular duties or of the responsibility or importance of the office.

Mr. BELMONT. Nor would they be where the consul has diplomatic duties, which is the case, not only in eastern countries, but elsewhere—in Ecuador, for instance.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. I will illustrate by St. Helena. The consul must travel 8,000 miles at a cost of $300 for himself alone. It is a most disagreeable place to live at. Yet the fees are few; but he must look after the interest of our seamen engaged in whale fishing.

Furthermore, Mr. Chairman, the policy of this bill is to Americanize our consular service. That is a very important matter. The effect of doing away with the system of compensation by fees and putting these officers upon salaries will enable us to put Americans in places now filled by foreign merchants who often have no interest in common with our people and country, and therefore are not proper representatives of it.

There is another thing to which I wish to call the attention of the committee. Where one officer is drawing a salary as consul and another adjacent officer is charging fees, it is sometimes the case that the man who has goods to ship will pass by the consul who is receiving a salary and have his goods inspected by the man who is receiving fees, because the latter gives better terms. The invoices are not always honest, and the trader does not expect them to be. That is the reason he prefers the services of this officer who is paid by fees.

Our service should be uniform. All our consuls, so far as practicable, ought to be put on salaries.

In regard to the number of officers to be affected by the change, we propose to put on the salaried list forty consuls whose fees exceed the proposed salaries I believe.

Mr. MCCREARY. Fifty-one.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. Those are the gentleman's figures, but they do not accord with my recollection. I believe there are forty consulates where the fees now amount to a larger sum than a salary would; and there are thirty others where the pay would not come up to the same standard.

Mr. MCCREARY. Will the gentleman allow me to correct him? I have examined this matter with a good deal of care. There are seventy of these offices in all——

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. Seventy in all.

Mr. MCCREARY. There are fifty-one salaried consuls proposed in lieu of certain officers now compensated by fees, and there are nineteen salaried consuls proposed at places where now there are salaried agents.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. There is a difference between the gentleman's figures and mine. My recollection accords with the statement I have made.

But, sir, it is conceded that for a person engaged in trade to be made a consul of the United States is worth ordinarily at least $1,000. Such an appointment gives a foreign merchant a great advantage over his rival at the same place—

Mr. LONG. Who may be an American.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. Who may be an American; and the merchant occupying the consulate position may delay the inspecting or invoicing of his rival's goods or may not make a true inspection or invoice, to his great disadvantage. There are many other reasons in favor of this provision of the bill.

Mr. JAMES. There is great difficulty on that score.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. It is one of the greatest sources of difficulty to the Treasury Department.

Mr. JAMES. And also to the merchants.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. Yes, and to the merchants.

In one case which has been referred to by my friend from New York, the chairman of the committee, there was a false certification involving I believe about $20,000. And such things may often occur.

From whom does this recommendation come? From the Committee on Foreign Affairs alone? No; from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, aided and assisted by those who are familiar with our foreign service. Are we to go into our districts throughout the country and ask the people what shall be done with the foreign service when they have sent us here to act intelligently for them, or shall we make beautiful speeches upon the "reforms" we have accomplished by cutting down appropriations recommended by our committees, and tell them how we have decorated our foreign service with all the flaring insignias, the only effect of which would be to mislead?

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman will allow me to ask whether there is any provision in the bill requiring our consuls to cover into the Treasury all fees received by them, whether official fees, so called, or extra-official fees?

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. There is no such provision in regard to unofficial fees.

Mr. SPRINGER. We now require the official fees to be returned; why was not a provision inserted requiring the return also of the unofficial fees?

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. That is a difficulty we have been trying to overcome.

Mr. BELMONT. By reason of the fact of being placed on the salaried list, the consuls who are now paid by fees would return their fees to the Treasury. The law would so provide.

Mr. SPRINGER. But certain fees, not regarded as official fees, are incident to the office; for instance, fees for the acknowledgment of deeds or the taking of depositions. Those fees the consul usually pockets, declining to account for them to the United States. I think if these officers are placed on salaries it would be proper to require them to turn over to the Treasury of the United States all fees, from whatever source received.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. I think so myself; I agree with my friend on that point. But this question of unofficial fees has been a very troublesome one. The question has presented itself to the committee in this way: The unofficial fees are for the acknowledgment of deeds and papers to be used in the courts of law——

Mr. SPRINGER. And the taking of depositions.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. Yes, and the taking of depositions. Now, if the consul is allowed to charge for such service he attends to those duties. They are not compulsory duties at all. Probably the refusal of the consul to attend to them would put suitors to great inconvenience. They might prefer to pay those unofficial fees rather than not have the service performed. I would myself prefer that fees of every character, if we can reach them, should be turned into the Treasury. I agree with my friend from Illinois that a public officer, whether at home or abroad, should rely upon his salary alone as compensation for his services. That is the reason I object to the present system under which men engaged in trade get the offices and use them as much for their private benefit as for the advantage of the public.

Mr. Chairman, how much time have I?

The CHAIRMAN. Thirty-four minutes.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. Reserving the residue of my time, I will not further occupy the attention of the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CANNON obtained the floor but yielded to

Mr. BELMONT, who moved that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. HAMMOND having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. BLOUNT reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the bill (H. R. 10396) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

RETURN OF A BILL.

Mr. MORRILL, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate be requested to return to the House the bill (S. 2479) granting a pension to Mrs. Adaline P. Loy.

MRS. JULIA A. SLUDER.

On motion of Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina, by unanimous consent, the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 10178) for the relief of Mrs. Julia A. Sluder, executrix of E. Sluder, deceased.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay to Mrs. Julia A. Sluder, executrix of E. Sluder, deceased, $130 out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The report (by Mr. SHAW) was read, as follows:

A transcript from the books of and proceedings of the Treasury Department shows that there is due and owing from the United States to a certain F. M. Whiten for guarding United States prisoners confined in the jail of Buncombe County, in the western district of North Carolina, $130. It also further appears that Whiten assigned this claim to W. T. S. Deaver, who assigned it to E. Sluder (since deceased) for value. But said assignments not being in the prescribed form (Rev. Stat., sec. 3477), the Secretary of the Treasury very properly refused to recognize them; and the present whereabouts of the said Whiten not being known it is impossible to have them corrected.

The money was appropriated for the payment of this claim by the deficiency act of August 4, 1886.

The committee recommend that the bill do pass with the following amendments, namely:

"Strike out after the word 'dollars,' in lines 6 and 7, and add the words 'now standing to the credit of F. M. Whiten on the books of the Treasury Department:' Provided, That the said Julia A. Sluder shall first execute a bond with good and sufficient sureties, to be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, to indemnify the United States against all loss, cost, or damages in the premises."

The amendment of the committee was agreed to, and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

And then, on motion of Mr. EDEN (at 4 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

SENATE.

MONDAY, February 7, 1887.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

CREDENTIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented the credentials of FRANCIS B. STOCKBRIDGE, chosen by the Legislature of Michigan a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1887; which were read.

Mr. HOAR. Those credentials are somewhat unusual in their character, and as it is almost impossible from listening to them to see whether they comply with the usual custom, I move that they be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The motion was agreed to.

ABSTRACT OF MILITIA FORCE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in compliance with section 232 of the Revised Statutes, an abstract of the militia force of the United States; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a communication from the secretary of state of the State of Kansas, transmitting a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of Kansas; which was referred to the Committee on Territories, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF KANSAS, SECRETARY'S OFFICE,
Topeka, February 3, 1887.

DEAR SIR: I have the honor to herewith transmit a copy of house concurrent resolution No. 20, signed by the officers of both houses.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

E. B. ALLEN, Secretary of State.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE,
Washington, D. C.

(House Concurrent Resolution No. 20.)

House concurrent resolution No. 20, relating to the organization of the Territory of Oklahoma.

Resolved by the house of representatives of the State of Kansas (the senate concurring therein), That our Senators in Congress be, and they are hereby, instructed and our Representatives are requested to use their best efforts to secure the passage of the bill now pending in Congress, and providing for the organization of the Territory of Oklahoma.

Resolved further, That correct copies of this resolution be enrolled, signed by the president of the senate and the speaker of the house, and sent to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress, to the President of the United States, the Secretary of the Interior, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, the President of the United States Senate, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and that they are requested to lay the same before their respective bodies.

I hereby certify that the above resolution originated in the house January 21, 1887, and passed that body January 22, 1887.

A. W. SMITH, Speaker of House.

H. L. MILLARD, Chief Clerk of House.

Concurred in by the senate, February 1, 1887.

A. P. RIDDLE, President of Senate.

CLIFFORD C. BAKER,
Secretary of Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a communication from the secretary of state of Colorado, transmitting a memorial of the General Assembly of Colorado; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE OF COLORADO,
Denver, Colo., February 2, 1887.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a copy of a joint memorial passed by the Sixth General Assembly of the State of Colorado.

Respectfully, yours,

JAMES RICE, Secretary of State.

Hon. JOHN SHERMAN,
President pro tempore United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

House joint memorial No. 3.

To the Congress of the United States:

Your memorialists, the General Assembly of the State of Colorado, would respectfully represent that—

Whereas contagious pleuro-pneumonia is known to exist in several States of this Union, and the imminent danger of the spread of the same to the large and unprotected cattle herds of the West is viewed with alarm by our citizens, and if this as well as other contagious and infectious diseases among live-stock is not prevented by prompt legislation in Congress and protection given to this vast industry, it is liable to cause great destruction to the live-stock interests of this and adjoining States and Territories. And we further represent and state that owing to the vast area of the plains and our inability to fence and protect our ranges from daily incursions of cattle from one range to another renders it impossible to successfully quarantine against the spread of said disease: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Congress of the United States be, and is hereby, requested to pass such a law as will effectually extirpate all contagious diseases of the character mentioned by placing in the hands of competent agents of the General Government full and complete power to act in all matters relating thereto, and that a sufficient appropriation be made, of not less than $1,000,000, to pay all necessary expenses of the same.

T. B. STUART,
Speaker of the House of Representatives,
W. H. MELDRUM,
President of the Senate.
ALVA ADAMS,
Governor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a communication from the secretary of the Territory of New Mexico, transmitting a petition of the Legislative Assembly of that Territory, praying for legislation providing for the settlement of the Mexican and Spanish land grants in New Mexico and the adjoining Territories; which was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TERRITORY OF NEW MEXICO, SECRETARY'S OFFICE,
Santa Fé, February 2, 1887.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose copy of a memorial adopted by the Twenty-seventh Legislative Assembly, which I am directed to send you.

Very respectfully,

GEO. W. LANE, Secretary.

Hon. JOHN SHERMAN,
President of the United States Senate.

Twenty-seventh Legislative Assembly. Territory of New Mexico. Memorial No. 2.

In the council, by Mr. Burns; read twice and referred to committee on printing January 5. Returned by committee on printing and laid on table for one day, January 13. Read the third time, and passed by a vote of 11, one member absent, January 14.

House of Representatives; read first, second, and third times, and passed unanimously, January 18, 1887.

Memorial to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Your memoralists, the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of New Mexico, now in session, assembled in Santa Fé, most earnestly and respectfully memorialize your honorable bodies of the urgent necessity for immediate legislation in reference to the measures necessary for the proper settlement of Mexican and Spanish land grants in New Mexico and the adjoining Territories.

We can urge but little novel in this our memorial beyond that which has been frequently set forth in numerous memorials to your honorable bodies, emanating from the Legislative Assemblies of the Territory during the last twenty-five years. We reiterate the statements made in the memorial of this Assembly of its session of 1871-'72, and can only add that time has amply proved the correctness of the views expressed in that memorial.

Thirty years have elapsed since the ratification of the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, and yet its obligations have not been fulfilled. A mighty tide of emigration has passed over the broad plains and rich mountains of New Mexico, seeking more distant homes toward the setting sun, because of the unsettled state of the land titles of the Territory. Neither the grant-owner nor the settler can have that security in their possessions as would prompt them to that expenditure of labor and capital in improvements which would insure the development and prosperity of the country.

Both the pre-emptioner and the grant-owner make but one demand, which is the establishment of a proper commission or special tribunal for the speedy settlement of the titles in the Territory, under the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, the law of nations, uses and customs of the government from which the claims are derived, and the principles of equity.

We respectfully call your attention to the memorial of this Assembly of 1871-'72, and reiterate the propositions therein contained: Wherefore your memorialists very respectfully ask that an act be passed by this present Congress providing for the establishment of a commission to investigate and decide upon the land-grant matters in New Mexico and such parts of our adjoining Territories as are covered by Spanish and Mexican grants, with a direct appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, inasmuch as the Territorial courts are even now so overburdened with their ordinary jurisdiction that they could not dispose of the questions within any reasonable time.

And your memoralists, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

Resolved by the senate of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of New Mexico (the house of representatives concurring therein), That the honorable secretary of the Territory be, and is hereby, required to have 500 certified copies of this memorial printed, and that he send one copy to His Excellency the President of the United States, to the honorable the Secretary of the Interior, to honorable the Commissioner of the General Land Office, to the President of the Senate, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, to the chairman of the Committee on the Territories, Private Land Claims, Mines, Manufacturing, and Judiciary of the Senate and House of Representatives, and to each and every member of both Houses of Congress, and to the Hon. A. JOSEPH, our Delegate in Congress.

TERRITORY OF NEW MEXICO, Office of the Secretary:

I, Geo. W. Lane, secretary of the Territory of New Mexico, do hereby certify that I have compared the foregoing memorial of the twenty-seventh session of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of New Mexico with the enrolled original thereof, on file in my office, and that the same appears to be a true and correct copy thereof.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the Territory, this 1st day of February, 1887.

[SEAL.] GEO. W. LANE, Secretary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented resolutions adopted at a meeting of the Mahoning Valley Wool-Growers' Association, of Warren, Ohio, remonstrating against putting wool on the free-list, and in favor of the restoration of the tariff of 1867; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. GORMAN presented the petition of A. W. Wayman and other colored citizens, Freedman's Bank depositors of Baltimore, Md., praying for certain legislation for their relief; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PALMER presented a joint resolution of the senate and house of representatives of the State of Michigan, favoring legislation removing the arrears of pensions limit, and pensioning survivors of rebel prisons, and soldiers and sailors who are disabled and dependent, or who are sixty-two years of age; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of 226 women, residents of Detroit, Mich., praying for the enactment of such statutes as shall provide for the adequate punishment of crimes against women and girls, and to raise the age of consent; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. TELLER. I present two petitions of citizens of this city, praying for the passage of the bill granting a charter to the Washington Cable Company. I present these petitions because requested so to do, without expressing myself any opinion as to the merits of the bill referred to by the petitioners. I move that the petitions be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I present a petition of citizens of Virginia, praying for the passage of the Colquitt bill to regulate the granting of certain licenses in the District of Columbia. I desire to say in this connection that I have received quite a severe rebuke from what is called the Temperance Alliance of the State of Virginia, because the Colquitt bill, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia more than a year ago, has not been reported back to the Senate. I am not a member of that committee, and have not been for more than a year. It is a mere question as to whether the committee ought to hold the bill or whether they ought to report it back, in their own judgment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition will be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. HARRISON presented the petition of John W. Shewmaker and 54 other licensed officers of steam vessels in Indiana, praying for the passage of a bill refunding to them so much of the license fee exacted from them between 1869 and 1883 as was in excess of 50 cents per annum; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CAMERON presented a petition of the auxiliary committee for Pennsylvania of the Consolidated Cattle-Growers' Association of the United States, praying for the passage of the Miller bill for the suppression of pleuro-pneumonia; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented the petition of Albert Thalheiner and others, a committee appointed by the Ex-Prisoners of War Association, praying for the passage of the bill granting pensions to ex-prisoners of war; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of druggists of Harrisburg, Pa., and a petition of citizens of Philipsburg, Pa., praying for the repeal of the internal-revenue laws; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HOAR. I present a memorial of the National Board of Trade, signed by Frederick Fraley, president, and Hamilton A. Hill, secretary, which sets forth that there is an almost universal demand for the enactment of a general bankruptcy law from all parts of the United States, reinforced by the petitions and resolutions of nearly all the commercial organizations of the country; and that the memorialists are advised that the bankruptcy law of Great Britain, which went into effect January 1, 1883, has grown greatly in favor with both the creditor and debtor classes of that country, and many of its provisions are almost identical with the bill now pending, which has twice passed the Senate. They therefore pray that Congress may take such action as may secure the enactment of the present bill. As the bill has been reported and is on the Calendar, I move that the memorial lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. EVARTS presented the petition of the Oneida Historical Society of New York, praying Congress to carefully consider the question of publishing Mr. B. F. Stevens's Index to Historical Documents in Europe; which was referred to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. SAWYER presented a petition of 126 citizens of Washington, D. C., residents on Thirteenth street northwest, and a petition of 113 citizens of Washington, D C., residents on Twelfth street northwest, praying for the passage of the bill for the incorporation of the Washington Cable Railway Company; which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. CALL. I present a petition of J. O. Andrews, secretary of the Suwanee and Gulf Railroad Company, of Cedar Keys, Fla., praying that an appropriation be made for a survey of No. 4, or the northwestern channel, touching the north end of the island of Cedar Keys. The petition states the importance of the survey of this channel for the purpose of commerce with Central and South America. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS. I present certain petitions of citizens of Washington, D. C., which have been sent to me with the request that they might be presented and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, in favor of the Washington Cable Railway Company. I move the reference of the petitions to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

TERRITORY OF OKLAHOMA.

Mr. PLUMB. I present a memorial of the Legislature of Kansas relating to the organization of the Territory of Oklahoma, which I ask to have read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has this morning presented a similar memorial of the Legislature of Kansas, which has been ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. PLUMB. I wish to have this memorial read, as I desire to submit some remarks on the subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The memorial will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

(House Concurrent Resolution No. 20.)

House concurrent resolution No. 20, relating to the organization of the Territory of Oklahoma.

Resolved by the house of representatives of the State of Kansas (the senate concurring therein), That our Senators in Congress be, and they are hereby, instructed, and our Representatives are requested to use their best efforts to secure the passage of the bill now pending in Congress and providing for the organization of the Territory of Oklahoma.

Resolved further, That correct copies of this resolution be enrolled, signed by the president of the senate and the speaker of the house, and sent to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress, to the President of the United States, the Secretary of the Interior, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, the President of the United States Senate, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and that they are requested to lay the same before their respective bodies.

I hereby certify that the above resolution originated in the house January 21, 1887, and passed that body January 22, 1887.

A. W. SMITH, Speaker of the House.

H. L. MILLARD,
Chief Clerk of House.

Concurred in by the senate February 1, 1887.

A. P. RIDDLE, President of Senate.

CLIFFORD C. BAKER,
Secretary of Senate.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, the resolution which has been read calls for the enactment of legislation which, in my judgment, is in accordance with the highest public policy; but according to the repeated decisions not only of the Executive but of the Attorney-General, and practically of Congress as well, there remains in certain Indian tribes an interest in the lands which are sought to be opened to settlement by the bill which is referred to in the resolution, and which has been referred to in all similar resolutions, and before that interest can be gotten out of the way negotiations of some kind must take place.

In 1885, in the Indian appropriation act of that year, the following provision was inserted:

SEC. 8. That the President is hereby authorized to open negotiations with the Creeks, Seminoles, and Cherokees for the purpose of opening to settlement under the homestead laws the unassigned lands in said Indian Territory ceded by them respectively to the United States by the several treaties of August 11, 1866, March 21, 1866, and July 19, 1866; and for that purpose the sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated; his action hereunder to be reported to Congress.

The act was approved March 3, 1885, and one day later the present administration came into power, and the duty specified in that provision of law devolved upon the present President of the United States. In the following December the Secretary of the Interior reported to Congress in his annual report for the year 1885 the reasons which actuated the President in not carrying out that provision of law. So far as I know those reasons still continue to exist in the Presidential mind. I ask the Secretary to read an extract from the report of the Secretary of the Interior for 1885 in order that the question of responsibility for non-action with reference to the opening of those lands to settlement may be thoroughly understood.

By the third article of the treaty of August 16, 1886, (14 Stat., 766), it is stipulated that "in compliance with the desire of the United States to locate other Indians and freedmen thereon, the Seminoles cede to the United States their entire domain," consisting of 2,169,080 acres, at the rate of 15 cents per acre.

By the the third article of the treaty of August 11, 1886 (Ibid., 786), the Creeks, for the same purpose, ceded to the United States the west half of their entire domain, which cession passed 3,402,430 acres, at the rate of 30 cents per acre. The two cessions combined aggregated 5,571,410 acres. The Indians have been paid therefor according to agreement.

In pursuance of the purpose for which these lands were ceded to the United States, portions on the east and the west thereof have been from time to time set apart for and assigned to certain tribes and bands of friendly Indians for their use and occupancy.

That portion of the land remaining unappropriated to the trust provided for in the treaties lies very nearly in the center of the Indian Territory. It is this unappropriated tract that is commonly called the "Oklahoma country." No agent of the Government resides upon this land, and it is not occupied in any way by any person or persons for any purpose under any authority of this Department.

An organized movement by certain persons was begun and set on foot some years past for the forcible possession of and settlement upon these lands under the plea that they formed a part of the public domain and were subject to entry and settlement under the general land laws of the United States. To prevent such unlawful and unauthorized settlements it became necessary for the Executive to issue the proclamations of April 26, 1879, February 12, 1880, and July 1, 1884, defining the status of those lands, and warning all persons against any attempts to go or settle thereupon. It had also been made necessary to use a part of the military force of the United States to remove intruders who had succeeded in getting into that country.

When I assumed charge of this Department it was alleged that certain individuals, associations of persons, and corporations were in the unauthorized possession of portions of the "Oaklahoma country," and also that certain other persons and associations were preparing to enter, occupy, and settle upon said lands.

The matter was considered; and the President, on the 13th of March, 1885, issued his proclamation, warning all persons then upon the lands, and those intending, preparing, or threatening to enter and settle upon the same, that they would not be permitted to enter upon that territory or to remain thereon if already there.

The parties claiming the right to enter these lands, alleging them to be public lands, argue that the United States must have understood the treaty with the Seminoles and Creeks, while the meaning and intent thereof was freshly in their mind and knowledge, as restoring the lands to the public domain, since by act of Congress of July 27, 1866 (14 Stat., 294)—passed in the same month that the treaties were proclaimed—a right of way with a subsidy of land was granted the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company over a route described which passed through the "Oklahoma country." They claim that by authorizing the use of a portion of the land for railroad purposes the United States admitted that they could be used for other than Indian purposes, and that this must have been conceded by the Indians, who failed to object to its appropriation for railroad purposes.

This argument would hardly have been advanced if the advisers of these parties, or the parties themselves, had carefully read the concluding clause of section 2 of the granting act, which is as follows:

"The United States shall extinguish, as rapidly as may be consistent with public policy and the welfare of the Indians, and only by their voluntary cession, the Indian title to all lands falling under the operation of this act and acquired in the donation to the road named in the act."

For the purposes of this act the Indian title to that portion of the "Oklahoma country," through which the railroad was proposed to be run, has not been extinguished. The railroad has not been constructed upon or extended into that territory, and consequently it has not acquired possession nor the right of possession of any portion of those lands under that law.

In the case of the United States vs. D. L. Payne, tried in the district court of the United States for the western district of Arkansas, Judge Parker cited the decisions of the Supreme Court in the case of Wilcox vs. Jackson (13 Pet., 266), "wherein it is held that whenever a tract of land has been appropriated to the public use it is severed from the mass of the public domain, and subsequent laws of sale are not construed to embrace it, though they do not in terms except it." He also refers to the case of the Leavenworth, Lawrence and Galveston Road vs. The United States (2 Otto, 733), which affirms the doctrine in Wilcox vs. Jackson, and holds further that "this doctrine applies with more force to Indian than military reservations." Judge Parker then adds:

"I think, therefore, from the authorities I have cited, and from the language of this section, that there is no doubt that this act of Congress has not changed the land in controversy from the condition of a reservation."

Notwithstanding the rulings of the Interior Department, the proclamations of the Executive, and the solemn adjudications of a Federal court of competent jurisdiction over the parties and over the subject-matter, upon a clear statement of facts on both sides of the question, all holding that these lands are not a part of the public domain and are not subject to pre-emption and homestead entry under the general land laws of the United States, but on the contrary that they are a part of the Indian Territory, that they are not unappropriated lands, but lands dedicated to specific purposes, yet it is to be regretted that repeated attempts have been made to make forcible entry and possession upon said lands.

It has become generally known throughout this country that this large tract of land, fertile, well-watered, and with its mild climate, is unoccupied, and that it has continued in this idle condition since the treaties of 1866. It is, therefore, not surprising that a large class of hardy, industrious people, residing in more thickly settled States, are eager to acquire homesteads upon it.

The respectful petitions of many peaceable and law-abiding citizens from numerous localities throughout the country requesting that it be opened to settlement, no less than the threatened unlawful invasion of the land, have had the effect of inducing consideration of the subject by Congress, which, at its last session, enacted the following provision of law, namely:

"That the President is hereby authorized to open negotiations with the Creeks, Seminoles, and Cherokees for the purpose of opening to settlement under the homestead laws the unassigned lands in said Indian Territory ceded by them respectively to the United States by the several treaties of August 11, 1866, March 21, 1866, and July 19, 1866; and for that purpose the sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated; his action hereunder to be reported to Congress." (23 Stat., 384.)

This provision of law refers not only to the lands ceded by the Creeks and Seminoles referred to above, but also to lands ceded by the Cherokees, the status of which is considered herein under the title "The Cherokee Outlet."

The unlawful combinations above referred to have rendered it, in my judgment, unwise to appoint this commission. That which gives security to life and property is the spirit of law. Nothing is more dangerous, more fatal to rights of property and personal safety and public order, than a spirit of lawlessness. The manifestations of the latter danger should be checked at all times, until the rule of law becomes the daily rule of conduct for our people.

The lands reserved for the accommodation of the Indians are undoubtedly much larger in extent than is needed for their wants and accommodation. There can be no harm in recognizing the gradual current slowly tending in the direction of civilized occupation and use of the Indian Territory, as the Indians themselves become consolidated upon fewer residential points; but rapacity and lawlessness will not abide the gradual and gentle method of change, and seek by violence and forcible invasion to displace law and treaty and the sense of obligation to both, and ride roughshod into possession of the lands of the Indian reservations. Will it not be a lesson—valuable there and valuable elsewhere—to show to such transgressors that their way is hard, and that nothing will render the Indian occupation more permanent, or postpone the change in the use of these lands longer, than the attempts to invade and by force to obtain possession and enjoyment of them? The outlaws and depredators who imagine they can override the law and violate treaty obligations with the Indians will discover the impossibility of success when they find themselves confronted by the law of the land, strengthened by the civil and military arm, and backed by the moral sentiment of a just people.

Mr. PLUMB. It will be observed by looking at the statute as printed in the report of the Secretary of the Interior the law requiring the President to negotiate with the Indians for the cession of their interest in these lands is still in force, and I do not need to add that it is still disobeyed or rather unobeyed, and that whether the Congress acts first or acts last there can be no settlement according to the decision of the present President of the United States upon the lands mentioned, until after, by negotiation, the Indians have been induced to part with their interest. So finally we come back to the proposition that the President must first do what the law now commands him to do, no matter what else may be done, as a necessary prerequisite before there can ever be a valid and legal settlement made upon the surplus lands of the Indian Territory.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The memorial will be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. TELLER, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom the subject was referred, reported a bill (S. 3270) granting to the city of Colorado Springs, in the State of Colorado, certain lands therein described for water reservoirs; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. WALTHALL, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 871) for the forfeiture of the land granted to the State of Florida for the construction of certain lines of railroad in that State, submitted an adverse report thereon.

Mr. CALL. I ask that the bill be placed on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar with the adverse report of the committee.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. VEST (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3271) extending the charter of "The President and directors of the Firemen's Insurance Company of Washington and Georgetown," in the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. PALMER introduced a bill (S. 3272) for the relief of J. W. McMillan; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CALL introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 102) establishing a national quarantine station near Key West, Fla.; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. CALL. I desire in introducing the joint resolution to say that I introduce it at the request of the board of health of the city of Key West, Fla. I will further remark that it is a matter of very pressing importance that a quarantine station shall be established near Key West, which is now the resort of vessels from all parts of the world, having on board the most contagious forms of disease peculiar to the tropics and to Africa, and that they are now landed in dangerous proximity to the coast of the United States. The joint resolution provides for the establishment of a quarantine station at an island remote from Key West, where it will be entirely safe. I move that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Epidemic Diseases.

The motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. CALL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor bill, for a survey of the No. 4, or Northwest Channel, at Cedar Keys, Fla., and for the survey of bar and river at Anclote; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GIBSON, and Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon, submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the river and harbor bill; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MORGAN. At the request of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] I submit an amendment to the river and harbor bill. I move its reference to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

COMPILATION OF VOTES OF THANKS.

Mr. MANDERSON submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved, That the Senate Committee on Printing be, and hereby is, directed to have prepared a compilation of the votes of thanks by the Continental Congress and by the Congress of the United States for military, naval, and civil services, with abstracts of the resolutions, showing what prompted their passage, and to report the same in print before the 10th day of December next; and the expenses for compiling, copying, and indexing the same, not to exceed $500, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. MANDERSON. I ask that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Printing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The rule requires that such a resolution proposing to appropriate money from the contingent fund shall be referred to the Committee on Contingent Expenses.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But first the Committee on Printing ought to determine whether it is a good thing to do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

PRINTING OF NAMES OF PETITIONERS.

Mr. MANDERSON. I offer for adoption the following order:

Ordered, That when petitions and memorials are ordered printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the order shall be deemed to apply to the body of the petition only, and the names attached to said petition or memorial shall not be printed unless specially ordered by the Senate.

That is in the interest of shortening the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. It seems to me it is a matter that will commend itself to the Senate. Certainly there is no reason why long lists of names should be printed in the RECORD when they appear attached to a petition.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 10178) for the relief of Mrs. Julia A. Sluder, executrix of E. Sluder, deceased; and

A bill (H. R. 10666) for the allowance of certain claims reported allowed by the accounting officers of the United States Treasury Department.

The message also requested the return to the House of the bill (S. 2479) granting a pension to Mrs. Adaline P. Loy.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 129) authorizing the Secretary of War to adjust and settle the account for arms, ammunition, and accouterments between the Territory of Montana and the United States;

A bill (S. 269) for the relief of W. H. Powell;

A bill (S. 388) to grant the right of way through the Fort Bliss Military Reservation to the Rio Grande and El Paso Railroad Company;

A bill (S. 574) for the relief of Robert Strachan;

A bill (S. 1042) to pay B. S. James for transporting the United States mails;

A bill (S. 1368) for the relief of Richard H. Porter, surviving partner and assignee of the late firm of R. H. & James Porter;

A bill (S. 1536) for the purchase of suitable grounds in the city of Owensborough, in the State of Kentucky, and the erection thereon of a public building for the post-office, United States collector's office, United States commissioner's office, and for the use of other United States officers in said city, and appropriating money for said purposes;

A bill (S. 2477) making an appropriation for the establishment and erection of a military post near the city of Denver, in the State of Colorado; and

A bill (S. 2652) for the construction of a military telegraph line from Sanford, Fla., to Point Jupiter, Fla., and the establishment of a signal station.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF WASHINGTON TERRITORY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution submitted February 5 by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES], which comes over under objection.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Territories be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 6966) to change the time of the meeting of the Legislative Assembly of Washington Territory.

Mr. VOORHEES. The resolution may go over until to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be placed on the Calendar.

MRS. ADALINE P. LOY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the request of the House of Representatives for the return of the bill (S. 2479) granting a pension to Adaline P. Loy.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the request of the House of Representatives will be granted.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further resolutions, the Chair will ask to have read the special order for the day.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution adopted by the Senate February 3, as follows:

Resolved, That on and after Monday, the 7th instant, at the conclusion of the morning business for each day, unless upon motion the Senate shall at any time otherwise order, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of House bills and joint resolutions favorably reported on the Calendar, and continue such consideration until 2 o'clock, under the provisions of Rule VIII, as herein modified, until the Calendar of such bills and resolutions has been completed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first House bill on the Calendar will be announced.

Mr. HAWLEY. I move to set aside the order, so that the Senate may proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 662, coupling with it the consideration of the subsequent bill, S. 663, being the well-known bills relating to the manufacture of ordnance, armor, &c., for the Army and Navy, and for coast defenses. I gave notice several days ago that I would make this motion. I am stimulated, pushed forward by the Committee on Coast Defenses, the Military Committee, and the general sentiment, I am happy to believe, of the Senate, and I know of the country.

I am aware that the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] has obtained the adoption of a rule to proceed to the consideration of House bills upon the Calendar, and I am sorry to antagonize it, but I feel it to be my duty to make this motion, and if I shall be set aside or pushed off, I hope it will not be done without the definite ascertainment of some time soon enough when I may be heard.

Mr. HARRIS. I will ask the Senator to suggest any hour after 2 o'clock on any day.

Mr. HAWLEY. I will move to-day at 2 o'clock, then, if the Senate is willing——

Mr. EDMUNDS. Move now. We shall have the unfinished business at 2 o'clock.

Mr. SPOONER and others. Move now.

Mr. HAWLEY. That is the motion I have submitted, to proceed now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 662) to encourage the manufacture of steel for modern army ordnance, armor, and other army purposes, and to provide heavy ordnance adapted to modern army warfare.

Mr. HARRIS. I know that the motion is not debatable, but I ask the consent of the Senate to be allowed to consume about half a minute.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the Senator from Tennessee will proceed.

Mr. HARRIS. I simply desire to say that if the Senate will proceed, after the routine business of the morning, until 2 o'clock for two or three or three or four mornings at the outside, it can dispose in such manner as it may choose to dispose of the House bills now on the Calendar.

I very much hope that the Senate will take up and consider those bills and joint resolutions which have reached the last stage in legislation, to the exclusion of Senate bills, of which there would be very little hope of consideration in the other House even though they were passed to-day. That is all I care to say.

Mr. HAWLEY. Now, a word only in reply. The class of bills the Senator refers to are those which have passed the other House and have come over here and been favorably reported upon, and are upon the Calendar. I think there is nothing surer, except the adjournment of Congress, than that those bills will be passed before the 4th of March. We always do attend to them. Many of them are matters of mere concurrence, requiring nothing more than the reading to secure their passage. We can do that any morning or any evening.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator allow me to suggest to him the fact that in perhaps a third of the cases the Senate committees have reported amendments, verbal or otherwise, which will have to be acted upon, and wherever a House bill is amended of course it involves the necessity of its going back to the other House?

Mr. HAWLEY. Nevertheless, as a rule, having been passed by the other House and favorably reported by a Senate committee, they are almost certain of passage. But the bills the consideration of which I have moved being of the very highest importance in the judgment of the whole country, have waited long enough and too long. They ought to go to the other House for consideration there. I have the highest hopes that they may pass in some form. I have no doubt that if this Congress can ever be permitted in both Houses to vote directly and squarely on the subject, neither House can be restrained from something in the direction of patriotic and liberal and public-spirited action. I insist on my motion.

Mr. HOAR. I hope the Senator will also give notice that if the matter is not disposed of at 2 o'clock he will ask the Senate to go on after 2.

Mr. HAWLEY. I thank the Senator for the suggestion. I shall continue to press the consideration of the bills until they they are disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to proceed to the consideration of the bill referred to. [Putting the question.] The Chair is in doubt.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HALE (when Mr. FRYE'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. FRYE] has a general pair with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. DAWES. I am paired with the absent Senator from Texas [Mr. MAXEY].

The result was announced—yeas 32, nays 21; as follows:

STEEL FOR ORDNANCE, ETC.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 662) to encourage the manufacture of steel for modern army ordnance, armor, and other army purposes, and to provide heavy ordnance adapted to modern army warfare.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Coast Defenses with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, line 4, after the word "contracts," to insert "with responsible steel-manufacturers;" in line 5, after the word "advertisements," to strike out "with responsible steel-manufacturers," and insert "to continue not less than thirty days, in newspapers most likely to reach the manufacturers addressed;" in line 8, after the words "tempered steel," to strike out "for fabrication," and insert "in forms suitable for;" in line 10, after the word "steel," to insert "finished;" in line 12, after the word "specifications," to insert "subject to inspection and tests at each stage of manufacture;" in line 16, after the word "shall," to strike out "certify and guarantee" and insert "contract;" in line 17, after the word "plant," to insert "including the best modern appliances;" and after the word "contract," in line 25, at the end of the section, to add "and that all the forgings shall be manufactured in the United States;" so as to make the section read:

That the Secretary of War be, and hereby is, authorized to make contracts with responsible steel-manufacturers, after suitable advertisements, to continue not less than thirty days, in newspapers most likely to reach the manufacturers addressed, for the supply of rough-bored, rough-turned, and tempered steel in forms suitable for heavy ordnance adapted to modern warfare, and steel, finished, for armor and other army purposes, in quantity not to exceed 10,000 gross tons, in quality and dimensions conforming to specifications, subject to inspection and tests at each stage of manufacture, and including all the parts of each caliber specified: Provided, That no money shall be expended except for steel accepted and delivered; that each bidder shall contract to erect in the United States a suitable plant, including the best modern appliances, capable of making all the steel required, and of finishing it, in accordance with the contract, and agree in the case of an ordnance contract to deliver yearly a specified quantity of each caliber, the time of delivery of the smaller calibers to commence at the expiration of not more than eighteen months and that of the largest calibers at the expiration of not more than three years from the date of the acceptance of the contract; and that all the forgings shall be manufactured in the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 5, after the word "for," to strike out "the fabrication of" and insert "finishing and assembling;" in line 6, before the word "guns," to strike out "heaviest;" and in line 7, after the word "warfare," to insert "up to and including the largest approved sizes, and for;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War be, and hereby is, authorized to erect at the Watervliet arsenal, West Troy, N. Y., an army gun factory, in accordance with the report of the gun foundry board of December 20, 1884, for finishing and assembling the guns adapted to modern warfare, up to and including the largest approved sizes, and for the manufacture of gun-carriages and ordnance equipment for the Army, at a cost not to exceed $1,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to add as a new section the following:

SEC. 3. That for the purposes of this act the sum of $8,000,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be available during six years from January 1, 1887.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOLPH. By direction of the Committee on Coast Defenses, I offer the following amendment to the bill: In section 3, line 1, strike out the words "this act," and insert in lieu thereof the words "the foregoing sections;" so as to read:

That for the purposes of the foregoing sections, the sum of $8,000,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be available during six years from January 1, 1887.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOLPH. I now move to add the following as a new section:

SEC. 4. That for the purpose of the construction of fortifications and other works of coast defense, in accordance with the recommendations of the Board on Fortifications or other Defenses, appointed by the President of the United States under the provisions of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1885, $5,000,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I desire to ask the Senator in charge of this bill one question about the provision locating the gun factory at Watervliet. Why is it here?

Mr. HAWLEY. That as it stands in the bill was the general judgment of the gun-foundry board and I think of the fortifications board, the general judgment of Army and Navy officers and boards, &c., who considered this question, perhaps not without exception, but I think overwhelmingly their general judgment was that Watervliet affords the best location. The ground there is abundant, the river communication abundant, a large canal is there, and every imaginable facility and convenience, including, among others of course, a neighborhood capable of furnishing skilled mechanics, easily to be reached from the adjoining parts of New York and of Massachusetts. That is the reason that the committee adopted it.

Mr. HALE. My impression is—and that was the impression of the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations on the fortifications bill of last year—that Frankford, near Philadelphia, is a better place, because it is nearer to the supply of steel and has better water communications; but I do not propose to move to amend this bill nor in any way to obstruct its passage. I think it will probably go through, perhaps without objection in this body, and therefore I do not move the amendment I had intended to propose.

Mr. DAWES. One word about this matter of Watervliet. I, of course, shall not antagonize the bill in any respect, but I am not quite certain about the propriety of naming Watervliet. I have no special objection of my own, but the information which I have corresponds with that of the Senator from Maine as to Frankford. If the Senator from Connecticut is confident and certain upon that matter of Watervliet I shall not interpose, but otherwise I should like very much to have the bill conform to an effort that has been made in the committee of conference on the fortification bill to carry out this same measure which the Senator has embodied in this bill, but I do not know that I want to offer any amendment.

Mr. HAWLEY. I hope not.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to ask the Senator from Connecticut to explain the meaning of the words "for armor and other army purposes," in line 10 of section 1. What is the meaning of the word "armor" in that connection?

Mr. HAWLEY. That has in view, undoubtedly, the turrets and other protections for coast defense.

Mr. MORGAN. Coast defense, I suggest to the Senator from Connecticut, is not entirely an army purpose. The army is not alone engaged in coast defense; and it seems to me that the bill in several particulars is too much restricted. The word "armor" there evidently means, as the Senator suggests, to provide a sort of mail or protection for the turrets that may be erected within the fortress. I suppose that is the meaning of it; but we need armor for other purposes; we need armor for ships, and when works have been established which are capable of producing armor of sufficient weight and size for the purpose of protecting turrets that may be within the fortress, it may be very convenient perhaps to use that same machinery and that same establishment for making armor for ships. So I would suggest to the Senator that the bill would be improved by striking out the word "Army" where it occurs there, and then again, in the second section, striking out, in the third line, the words "an army" and inserting "a;" so as to read "a gun factory."

Mr. HAWLEY. I am unable to hear. What is the first amendment proposed in line 10?

Mr. MORGAN. The first is to strike out the word "army," in line 10 of section 1.

Mr. HAWLEY. I have not the slightest objection to that.

Mr. MORGAN. I move that amendment. I move to strike out, in line 10 of section 1, the word "army" after the word "other;" so as to read:

For armor and other purposes.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. Before the Senator goes further I call his attention to the fact—I do not know but that I was hasty in not attending to that—that the bill next this on the Calendar, which I really called up at the same time, or gave notice that they were to go together—the next bill provides for the navy in language very similar to this for the army.

Mr. MORGAN. Well, we might want to use both of these establishments for the navy, or we might want to use them both for the army. I think it would be too great a restriction to prohibit us from doing so if we saw proper.

I inquire of the Senator, what is the total amount of money appropriated in the two bills?

Mr. HAWLEY. The gun-foundry board—we have not quite come up to its recommendations—recommended contracts that would cost $15,000,000, seven and a half millions for each service. A full and satisfactory plant for what is called a gun factory, which is better understood if I call it a finishing shop, would cost a million dollars in each case. Twice seven and a half million is $15,000,000, and two millions more would make $17,000,000. These two bills appropriate but $16,000,000 in the aggregate. But I do not think that is material, for I believe that the contracts can be made within the appropriation, especially as the Senator will see in lines 11 and 12 that the contract is "not to exceed 10,000 gross tons." If necessary there might be something less than that contracted for in the first instance. If it were not for embarrassment about the bill, I would myself make each bill eight and a half millions, but I am content to take them as they stand. They have been revised and revised and revised and rerevised and carried again and again to the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy and the ordnance officers of both the Army and Navy, and the engineer officers of both, until they have been filed ad unguem.

Mr. MORGAN. On the suggestion of the Senator from Connecticut, that another bill is to follow this to provide for the Navy, I will not propose any further amendment to this bill, because I take it for granted that after all——

Mr. HAWLEY. Let us consent that the amendment just made be reconsidered.

Mr. MORGAN. Oh, no.

Mr. TELLER. No; that amendment ought to be left anyway.

Mr. MORGAN. I think so.

Mr. DOLPH. I think the Senator from Alabama is mistaken. This is to authorize the Secretary of War to contract for armor for army purposes. The other is to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to contract for armor for navy purposes. We do not want to authorize the Secretary of War to contract for armor for navy purposes.

Mr. MORGAN. What does the Senator from Oregon understand to be the meaning of "armor" in that connection?

Mr. DOLPH. Armor for the protection of turrets, forts, and guns for shore defense.

Mr. MORGAN. Then let it be so expressed, armor for protection of forts and turrets.

Mr. HAWLEY. It must be so because it is certainly not for field operations, and "armor for army purposes" means distinctly, is so understood by the Department and all the officers, armor for the classes of defense recommended by the fortifications board. Undoubtedly, in placing heavy steel guns hereafter we shall put them in turrets similar to those that were upon our well-known monitors, excepting perhaps that they will be sloping, rounded, conical, rather in the shape of domes to better ward off attacks. They will probably be placed in turrets, but there will be certain other defenses that will be iron clad, of one sort and another, as for example the shelters or pits, if you choose to call them so, the little shelters that must be made along the beach to protect and control the mines or anchored torpedoes.

Mr. MORGAN. I suggest to the Senator, then, to strike out the words "and other army purposes," and say "armor for military purposes."

Mr. HAWLEY. Why does the Senator object to the word "army?"

Mr. MORGAN. Because I think it restricts that establishment to the supply merely of the coast defenses and the army in the field, and we might have a very great need for it in supplying the Navy.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the Senator allow me to read in the next bill, which is for the Navy, the following very similar language in the first section?

Steel in forms suitable for heavy ordnance adapted to modern warfare—

That is, the gun business—and steel, finished, for armor, shafting, and other naval purposes.

So that the two bills cover the whole subject.

Mr. HALE. Allow me a moment. There will not, practically, arise the least confusion in the departments whether this word "army" is in or out. With the two bills that will be passed by Congress, one for a distinctive army purpose and the other for a navy purpose, no Secretary, either of War or of the Navy, will seek to interfere with the appropriations in the other bill, or to carry any of the money in his bill into the other department of our military establishment. So I do not think the striking out of the word "army," as suggested by the Senator from Alabama, has harmed the bill in the least.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will submit the question to the Senate on the amendment.

Mr. MORGAN. I withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be considered withdrawn.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read "A bill to encourage the manufacture of steel for modern army ordnance, armor, and other army purposes, and to provide heavy ordnance adapted to modern army warfare, and for other purposes."

Mr. HAWLEY. The addition to the title is to cover the amendment of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH].

Mr. HAWLEY. I move now to proceed to the consideration of the twin bill S. 663.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 663) to encourage the manufacture of steel for modern naval ordnance, armor, shafting, and other naval purposes, and to provide heavy ordnance adapted to modern naval warfare.

The bill was reported from the Select Committee on Coast Defenses with amendments. The first amendment was, in section 1, line 4, after the word "contracts," to insert "with responsible steel manufacturers;" in line 5, after the word "advertisements," to strike out "with responsible steel manufacturers" and insert "to continue not less than thirty days in newspapers most likely to reach the manufacturers addressed;" in line 8, after the word "steel," to strike out "for the fabrication of" and insert "in forms suitable for;" in line 10, after the word "steel," to insert the word "finished;" in line 13, after the word "specifications," to insert "subject to inspection and tests at each stage of manufacture;" in line 17, after the word "shall," to strike out the words "certify and guarantee" and insert "contract;" in line 18, after the word "plant," to insert "including the best modern appliances;" and after the word "contract," at the end of line 26, to insert "and that all the forgings shall be manufactured in the United States;" so as to make the section read:

That the Secretary of the Navy be, and hereby is, authorized to make contracts with responsible steel manufacturers, after suitable advertisements, to continue not less than thirty days, in newspapers most likely to reach the manufacturers addressed, for the supply of rough-bored, rough-turned, and tempered steel, in forms suitable for heavy ordnance adapted to modern warfare, and steel, finished, for armor, shafting, and other naval purposes, in quantity not to exceed 10,000 gross tons, in quality and dimensions conforming to specifications, subject to inspection and test at each stage of manufacture, and in the case of ordnance including all the parts of each caliber specified: Provided, That no money shall be expended except in payment for steel accepted and delivered; that each bidder shall contract to erect in the United States a suitable plant, including the best modern appliances, capable of making all the steel required, and of finishing it, in accordance with the contract, and agree in the case of an ordnance contract to deliver yearly a specified quantity of each caliber, the time of delivery of the smaller calibers to commence at the expiration of not more than eighteen months and that of the largest calibers at the expiration of not more than three years from the date of the acceptance of the contract; and that all the forgings shall be manufactured in the United States.

The amendments was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 5, after the word "for," to strike out "the fabrication of the heaviest" and insert "finishing and assembling;" in line 6, after the word "warfare," to insert "up to and including the largest approved sizes, and for;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Navy be, and hereby is, authorized to erect at the navy-yard, Washington, D. C., a naval gun factory, in accordance with the report of the gun foundry board of December 20, 1884, for finishing and assembling guns adapted to modern warfare, up to and including the largest approved sizes, and for the manufacture of gun-carriages and ordnance equipment for the naval service, at a cost not to exceed $1,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert, as an additional section, the following:

SEC. 3. That for the purposes of this act the sum of $8,000,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be available during six years from January 1, 1887.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 10178) for the relief of Mrs. Julia A. Sluder, executrix of E. Sluder, deceased, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

The bill (H. R. 10666) for the allowance of certain claims reported allowed by the accounting officers of the United States Treasury Department was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

ORDER OF PROCEEDING.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first case on the Calendar under the special order will be stated, subject to objection under Rule VIII.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 7479) to provide a method for settling controversies and differences between railroad corporations engaged in interstate and Territorial transportation of property or passengers and their employés.

Mr. HARRIS. I think the resolution refers to bills on the Calendar under Rule VIII; that is, to begin where the call last left off. The bill announced is on the Calendar under Rule IX.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will adopt that construction, although the Chair was at first in doubt whether that was the proper construction of the resolution. The first case on the Calendar under Rule VIII will be read.

Mr. HARRIS. That is my impression of the proper construction of the order. That was the intention.

Mr. HALE. How are we proceeding—under the eighth rule?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the special order, by which House bills only are in order, under Rule VIII.

Mr. HALE. That is the order submitted by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes, sir.

MRS. ARLANTA T. TAYLOR.

The bill (H. R. 7310) granting a pension to Mrs. Arlanta T. Taylor was announced as first in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is a pension bill for one of our constituents in Missouri. There is some question about it yet. I ask that it be passed over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

KANSAS LAND-GRANT RAILROADS.

The bill (H. R. 7021) to provide for the adjustment of land grants made by Congress to aid in the construction of railroads within the State of Kansas, and for the forfeiture of unearned lands, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. HARRIS. I was requested by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, to say that he desired that the bill should not be considered this morning, but wished unanimous consent that it hold its place on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection that order will be made.

PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS.

The bill (H. R. 2851) to provide for ascertaining and settling private land claims in the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona and the State of Colorado was announced as next in order.

Mr. TELLER. Let that pass over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over under objection.

Mr. HARRIS. Does the Senator propose to put it under Rule IX?

Mr. TELLER. I propose to put it over indefinitely if I can. I am opposed to it, and there will be a good deal of discussion on it when it does come up.

Mr. HARRIS. I think that is one of the bills that the Senator from Kansas requested me to call attention to.

Mr. TELLER. I think not. I object to the bill; let it take its course.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is objected to, and it will be placed under Rule IX.

Mr. RANSOM subsequently said: I desire the attention of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] for a moment. That Senator just now objected to the consideration of the bill for the adjustment and settlement of private land claims in the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona and in the State of Colorado. I hope the Senator will not insist upon that objection so as to displace the bill.

Mr. TELLER. I will consent that the bill may stand where it is on the Calendar, simply going over for to-day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MILLER in the chair). The bill will retain its place on the Calendar.

ESTATE OF C. M. BRIGGS.

The bill (H. R. 3828) for the relief of the estate of C. M. Briggs was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and in lieu of the matter stricken out to insert:

That the Court of Claims is hereby given, subject to the proviso hereinafter mentioned, like jurisdiction to hear and determine the claim of the legal representatives of C. M. Briggs, deceased, for the proceeds of 455 bales of cotton, now in the Treasury of the United States, alleged to have been owned, in whole or in part, by said Briggs, as is given to said court by the acts of March 12, 1863, and July 2, 1864, upon petition to be filed in said court at any time within two years from the passage of this act, any statute of limitations to the contrary notwithstanding: Provided, however, That unless the said court shall, on a preliminary inquiry, find that said Briggs was in fact loyal to the United States Government, and that the assignment to him hereinafter mentioned was bona fide, the court shall not have jurisdiction of the case, and the same shall, without further proceedings, be dismissed: And provided further, That if the court shall find that the alleged assignment from one Morehead to said Briggs, of date of April 18, 1862, under which said Briggs claimed said cotton, was intended only as security to said Briggs for indebtedness, and against contingent liabilities assumed by him for said Morehead, judgment shall be rendered only for such portion of the proceeds of said cotton as shall equal the moneys actually due to said Briggs at the date of said assignment, and such as were afterwards actually paid by said Briggs to or for said Morehead.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report in that case be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. SPOONER June 21, 1886:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3828) for the relief of the estate of C. M. Briggs, deceased, have had the same under consideration, and respectfully report:

That in April, 1862, Charles S. Morehead, ex-governor of Kentucky, resided at Louisville, in that State, and that C. M. Briggs, the deceased claimant, also resided at Louisville.

Morehead and Briggs had been partners in the practice of the law, and the latter was in August, 1862, largely the creditor of the former, for money loaned, indorsements paid, partnership moneys used by said Morehead beyond his share, moneys advanced in paying indorsements made for Morehead, and the said Briggs was, moreover, contingently liable on indorsements then existing. The amount of the indebtedness is not shown, although it is stated in the affidavits before the committee to have been "many thousands of dollars."

Morehead owned in 1862, and had owned for some time prior thereto, two plantations in the county of Washington, near Egg's Point, Mississippi, on which, in 1862, was a crop of cotton. In this condition of affairs Morehead executed and delivered, on April 18, 1862, to C. M. Briggs the following instrument:

"For and in consideration of money loaned and advanced heretofore by C. M. Briggs, and further valuable considerations, by way of suretyship for me by said Briggs, I hereby sell and transfer to said C. M. Briggs all of the cotton on my two plantations in Mississippi near Egg's Point and Greenville. Said cotton so sold embraces all that I may have, baled and unbaled, gathered and ungathered. This is intended to cover all cotton that I have now, or may have this year, on said two plantations, supposed to be about 2,000 bales.

"C. S. MOREHEAD."

This paper itself, and the affidavits before the committee, may perhaps be fairly said to leave it an open question whether it was intended as an absolute sale to Briggs of the cotton, free of all equity of redemption in Morehead, or was intended to be a security for advances theretofore made and liabilities theretofore incurred by said Briggs by his indorsements for the benefit of said Morehead, and then existing, out of which the said Briggs was to reimburse himself, rendering, that done, the surplus to Mr. Morehead. The quantity of cotton, the utter indefiniteness as to the amount due from Morehead to Briggs, together with the fact that part of it was only by way of contingent liability, tend very strongly to show that the transfer was for purposes of security; but whether an absolute sale, or as security only, is quite immaterial in the view taken by the committee as to the justice of the claim of Briggs upon the cotton and its proceeds, to the extent at least of the advances made at the date of the instrument, and thereafter paid by Briggs for Morehead.

Ex-Governor Morehead (who died about 1869), the committee is satisfied, so far as it has any information upon the subject, was a disloyal man at the time this instrument was executed, and afterwards. He was arrested by the Government and confined in one of the prisons; but loyal or disloyal, the committee know of no reason why he was not competent in law to own the cotton, and to make a valid assignment of it to Briggs, either absolutely in payment of a debt or by way of security.

The stanch loyalty of Briggs to the Government from the beginning of the war is abundantly vouched by men distinguished for service to the Union. General Rousseau, ex-Attorney-General James Speed, W. D. Gallagher, and Joseph H. Humes, late paymaster United States Army, vouch for his loyalty, and among the papers is found a letter, of date February 20, 1863, to Hon. Salmon P. Chase, Secretary of the Treasury, from George D. Prentice, in which it is stated:

"Mr. Briggs is perfectly reliable, and you may be assured that no trust confided to him will be abused or transcended. He is and always has been a devoted Union man. If any reference be necessary, I would suggest that Hon. J. J. Crittenden and Hon. Henry Grider have known him since boyhood."

The said Briggs made repeated attempts to obtain the cotton, but was prevented by military orders and the then condition of affairs.

On the 7th day of March, 1863, under orders from General Grant, Captain Osband, of the Fourth Illinois, with three steamers, proceeded to Worthington's Landing, directed to capture cotton and forage for the use of the Army, and at such landing he seized 2,180 bales of cotton, the property of divers people, loaded it upon the steamer Empress, and carried it to Memphis, Tenn., where it was by proper authority turned over to Capt. G. L. Fort, assistant quartermaster of the United States, and by him sold, and the net proceeds paid into the public Treasury under the act of March 12, 1863, to be held by the Government in trust for the owners.

In the cotton seized and sold was 455 bales of the cotton grown on the Morehead plantations, and embraced in the bill of sale to Briggs.

Other owners of the cotton taken at the time who have presented their claims have been paid.

Congress, by acts of March 12, 1863, and July 2, 1864, conferred jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to entertain suits of loyal owners for the proceeds of captured and abandoned property, but the legislation made it a jurisdictional fact that any such suit should be brought within two years.

It is alleged, on behalf of the deceased claimant, and there is an affidavit by him in the papers before the committee, that he did not know until after the expiration of the two years that the cotton had been captured and sold by the United States and the proceeds covered into the Treasury, and therefore that he had a claim against the Government under that act. The statement in the affidavit is believed by the committee, not simply because of the attested character of Mr. Briggs, but from the corroboration found in the public knowledge of the then condition of affairs, which may well have rendered it impossible for Briggs to ascertain what had become of his cotton, and from the further fact that, being a lawyer and a loyal man, it is hardly to be believed that he would have permitted the statute of limitations to bar him had he known of the facts which opened to him the remedy given by the acts of Congress.

In 1868 he presented his claim to Congress, before which it has been since pending. This claim has been repeatedly reported adversely, once by the Judiciary Committee of the Senate, at the first session of the Forty-second Congress; again by the Committee on Claims, at the first session of the Forty-fourth Congress, Report 128, and again by the Committee on Claims, at the first session of the Forty-fourth Congress, Report 372. The bill was reported favorably by the Committee on War Claims of the House of Representatives at the present session of Congress.

The committee can see no good reason why the Congress of the United States should not, under the circumstances, remove the bar of the statute of limitations, and enable the legal representatives of the deceased claimant to establish, if they may be able so to do, the ownership, absolute or qualified, by said Briggs of said cotton, and his consequent interest in the proceeds, his loyalty being made a jurisdictional fact.

This property was not confiscated, and the Supreme Court of the United States has decided that the title was not divested by the seizure, and that the Government holds it, or the proceeds, in trust for loyal claimants.

If Briggs had known the fact and could have established his ownership of the cotton under the acts of Congress of 1863 and 1864, he could have of course recovered the proceeds, or such part thereof as the court found him entitled to. Lapse of time has not, except technically, made any change in the title to the proceeds. If the bill should become a law, and the legal representatives of Briggs shall be able to establish his loyalty, and his absolute ownership of the 455 bales of cotton, of course they will be entitled to recover the entire proceeds of that cotton. If, on the other hand, it should turn out that the transfer to Briggs was colorable, and a makeshift to enable a disloyal man to save to himself, through the use of the name of a loyal friend, his property, that ends the case, and the money remains in the Treasury. If it should be found by the court that Briggs was loyal, that Morehead was indebted to him, and that the assignment of the cotton was as security only, then the judgment should be in favor of the estate of Briggs for so much of the proceeds of the cotton as will pay the debt for which it was security, and the surplus, if any there shall be, will remain in the Treasury.

The committee therefore recommend that the House bill 3828 be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the amendment herewith reported.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

HARRISON DEWEY.

The bill (H. R. 3110) directing the Secretary of War to amend the record of Harrison Dewey was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Military Affairs reported an amendment, in line 6, after the word "honorable," to strike out "discharge" and insert "muster out;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War be directed to amend the record of the War Department in the case of Harrison Dewey, late second lieutenant of Company E, Second Regiment Vermont Volunteers, so as to grant him an honorable muster-out from said service as of the date of his dismissal as now shown by said record.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

RAILROAD RECEIVERS.

Mr. GEORGE. I ask leave to call up a resolution I offered on the 20th of December, 1886, and have it referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Mississippi to refer the resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire into the powers of the Federal courts wherein any receiver for a railroad has been appointed to authorize or permit such receiver to disregard or violate the laws of the State wherein such railroad is operated regulating charges for the transportation of persons or property on the same so far as such charges are made for transportation beginning and ending in such State, and also to inquire into the necessity for any legislation on that subject, and that they report by bill or otherwise.

MRS. FANNY S. CONWAY.

The bill (H. R. 914) for the relief of Mrs. Fanny S. Conway was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to Mrs. Fanny S. Conway, widow of Dr. Ed. Conway, lost in the Grampus in 1843, of $270, being the amount due and unpaid her under act of Congress.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE OVER BAYOU BARNARD.

The bill (H. R. 1336) to authorize the construction of a bridge over Bayou Barnard, in the State of Mississippi, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment was in section 1, line 6, after the word "transit," to insert "without tolls;" in line 13, before the word "boats," to strike out "passing;" in line 15, after the word "therefor" to insert "width of spans;" and in the same line, after the word "location," to strike out the word "thereof" and insert "of said bridge;" so as to make the section read:

That it shall be lawful for the board of supervisors of Harrison County, in the State of Mississippi, to construct a bridge across Bayou Barnard at a point in or near the town of Handsborough, in said county, for the transit, without tolls, of persons, animals, and vehicles of all kinds: Provided, That the said bridge shall have a draw of not less than 30 feet, and as much more as may be necessary for the passage of steam or sail boats or other water crafts navigating said bayou; and said authorities shall have some person in charge of said draw, so that at all times the same may be opened for the passage of boats without unnecessary delay: And provided further, That before any bridge shall be built under this act the plans therefor, width of spans, and the location of said bridge shall be submitted to and approved by the Secretary of War.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert the following as additional sections:

SEC. 2. That the said board of supervisors shall maintain, at their own expense, from sunset to sunrise, throughout the year, and during heavy fogs, such lights on the bridge as may be required by the Light-House Board for the security of navigation.

SEC. 3. That the right to alter or amend this act so as to prevent or remove all material obstructions to the navigation of said bayou is hereby expressly reserved, and all changes or alterations so required shall be made at the expense of the parties owning or controlling said bridge.

SEC. 4. That if the construction of the bridge authorized herein be not commenced and completed within three years from the approval of this act, this act shall be null and void.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WALTHALL. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments to that bill, and ask for a conference with the House of Representatives thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. VEST, Mr. RANSOM, and Mr. CONGER were appointed.

TEXAS JUDICIAL DISTRICTS.

The bill (H. R. 4841) to change the eastern and northern judicial districts of Texas, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

The bill was read.

Mr. VEST. That bill cuts off part of the Indian Territory and annexes it to a judicial district of Texas. I did not know what it was when it was called up. I object to its consideration.

Mr. HARRIS. The objection carries the bill over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MILLER in the chair). The bill will be passed over.

Mr. BERRY. The Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE] is not in, and I ask that it retain its place on the Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] has objected to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. BERRY. I ask unanimous consent that it retain its place on the Calendar until the Senator from Texas comes in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. COKE. I ask that the bill lie over until my colleague [Mr. MAXEY] returns.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be placed under Rule IX, unless there is unanimous consent that it retain its present place. The Chair hears no objection to the suggestion of the Senator from Texas, and it is so ordered.

MAJ. MICHAEL P. SMALL.

The bill (H. R. 4616) for the relief of Maj. Michael P. Small was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury shall allow to Maj. Michael P. Smith, commissary of subsistence, United States Army, a credit of $3,780.63 in the settlement of his accounts, being the amount of Government funds lost by him through the fraud of his confidential clerk while said Small was on duty as depot and purchasing commissary of subsistence at Chicago, Ill., in 1879-'80: Provided, That the Court of Claims shall find the loss of said funds to have been without fault or negligence on the part of said officer; and jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine such matter, without regard to the limitation imposed by section 1069 of the Revised Statutes, and to render judgment accordingly.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MANDERSON. I hope the Senator from Mississippi in charge of the bill will ask for a committee of conference on that bill, so that it may become a law at this session.

Mr. WALTHALL. I was about to make that motion when the Senator made the suggestion. I move that the Senate insist on its amendment and ask for a conference thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. WALTHALL, Mr. COCKRELL, and Mr. MANDERSON were appointed.

TEXAS JUDICIAL DISTRICTS.

Mr. VEST. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry. What disposition was made of Order of Business 1642, being the bill (H. R. 4841) to change the eastern and northern judicial districts of Texas, and for other purposes?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MILLER in the chair). The bill was passed over without prejudice, retaining its place on the Calendar until the absent Senator from Texas [Mr. MAXEY] shall return.

Mr. VEST. Was that by unanimous consent?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. By unanimous consent.

Mr. VEST. I did not so understand. I am opposed to that bill, and I do not want it called up if I can help it. If it is permitted to stand under this order——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood the Senator from Missouri to object to the consideration of the bill. The Chair then stated that it would go under Rule IX. Then the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE] made a request for unanimous consent that the bill retain its place until his colleague [Mr. MAXEY] should return. That question was put, and no objection being made, it was so ordered. Perhaps the Senator from Missouri did not understand it.

Mr. VEST. I do not wish the bill taken up when I am not in the Senate.

Mr. COKE. It retains its place subject to call, I understand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Subject to call under the rule on which we are now acting, but with the statement that it was to lie over until the Senator's colleague should return.

Mr. VEST. I want to be here when the bill is considered. That is all.

ALEXANDER GOBLE.

The bill (H. R. 2176) for the relief of Alexander Goble was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to Alexander Goble, late a corporal of Company A, One hundred and fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, of $190, being bounty-money due Goble from the Government of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ST. MARK'S PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

The bill (H. R. 1993) for the relief of St. Mark's Protestant Episcopal church, in the District of Columbia, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that a certain piece of land situated in the city of Washington, known as lots 9 and 11 in square 788 of the plan of that city, and occupied by the church known as St. Mark's Protestant Episcopal church, and all the buildings, grounds, and property appurtenant thereto and used in connection therewith, shall be exempt from any and all taxes or assessments, national, municipal, or county; and all taxes, together with the interest and penalties now due and unpaid upon the property, remitted.

Mr. PLATT. Let the report be read, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. VANCE July 12, 1886:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1993) for the relief of St. Mark's Episcopal church, in the District of Columbia, have had the same under consideration, and report thereon as follows:

They find all the facts in the case stated by the report of the committee of the House of Representatives on the bill, and adopt the same as their report, as follows, to wit:

"The congregation of St. Mark's parish is small, and consists mostly of persons of moderate income—some being poor and none wealthy—and they are illy able to pay the taxes outstanding against their property—the lots referred to in the bill. They now occupy a small wooden building, near and adjoining, for and as their place of worship. The seats now are and will remain free.

"The taxes, penalties, and interest are outstanding and unpaid from 1872 to the present time. The lots were purchased by the vestry of St. Mark's parish in the year 1870, and were purchased for the sole and only purpose of erecting a church thereon. In 1881 they laid the foundation of a church building, covering the whole of said lots, but have not completed said church edifice for the reason that they have been pecuniarily unable to do so. It has, in fact, been with great labor and sacrifice that they have paid the purchase-money for said lots.

"The committee think that said lots having been purchased solely for the purpose of erecting thereon a church for the use of said St. Mark's Episcopal church, and said church having proceeded with said work as rapidly as their pecuniary ability would permit, and not having been utilized by them, or attempted to be, for profit, that the same has been occupied and used by them since their said purchase.

"The committee report the bill back to the House, and ask that the same be passed."

The committee therefore recommend that the bill be passed as amended to correct a clerical error in the number of the square in which said lots are situated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no amendment in the bill as reported, though the report speaks of an amendment.

Mr. PLATT. Does not the report state what the amendment proposed is?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It does not.

Mr. MCMILLAN. A mere clerical correction.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the number of the lot.

Mr. HARRIS. Does the report recommend that the bill be amended?

The Chief Clerk read:

The committee therefore recommend that the bill be passed as amended to correct a clerical error in the number of the square in which said lots are situated.

Mr. PLATT. In the number of the square.

Mr. HARRIS. And does not specify what the number is?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It does not.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask, then, that the bill go over for the present, retaining its place on the Calendar, the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE], who reported it, not being in his seat. He will be able to make the proper amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is so ordered.

WILLIAM H. MORHISER.

The bill (H. R. 5877) for the relief of William H. Morhiser was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It appropriates to William H. Morhiser the pay and allowances due him for services to the United States Government for which he has not been paid, namely: first, the pay and allowances of a private of cavalry from November 30, 1863, to January 1, 1865; and second, such additional pay and allowances, as commutation of rations, &c., as were allowed to prisoners of war from July 30, 1864, to January 1, 1865. The bill was reported to the Senate ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

E. P. M'NEAL.

The bill (H. R. 4839) for the relief of E. P. McNeal was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to E. P. McNeal, of Hardeman County, Tennessee, of $12,781.81, in full compensation for all property taken from McNeal by the United States Army during the war.

Mr. PLATT. Let the report be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. DOLPH July 15, 1886:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4839) for the relief of E. P. McNeal, having had the same under consideration, submit the following report:

This claim was favorably reported from the Committee on War Claims (Report No. 443) at the second session of the Forty-fifth Congress; was adversely reported from the same committee at the second session of the Forty-sixth Congress (Report No. 1067); was again adversely reported from the same committee at the first session of the Forty-eighth Congress; was favorably reported from the same committee and passed the House at the present session of Congress. The facts are stated in said House report (No. 443) made at the second session of the Forty-fifth Congress, which is as follows:

[House Report No. 443, Forty-fifth Congress, second session.]

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the petition of E. P. McNeal, having considered the same, submit the following report:

E. P. McNeal resided in Hardeman County, Tennessee, during the war. The claim is for lumber, wood, horses, mules, and farm produce alleged to have been taken and used by the Army in 1862, 1863, and 1864. It was filed in the office of the Quartermaster-General, under the act of July 4, 1864, and finally rejected by him in October, 1874, for the reason, as assigned, that that officer was not convinced that the claimant was loyal. In rejecting the claim the Quartermaster-General expressed a purpose not to reopen it on the additional evidence presented, "in justice to thirteen thousand claimants whose claims are still undecided and who have rights to be heard."

It would certainly be a hardship if the petitioner must be permanently deprived of his rights solely on account of a lack of force in the Quartermaster-General's Office, and the grounds relied upon for bringing the case before Congress appear sufficient.

By joint resolution No 99, first session Thirty-ninth Congress, the provisions of the act of July 4, 1864, were extended to the loyal citizens of the State of Tennessee; McNeal took the oath of allegiance to the Government of the United States in July, 1862, prior to the taking of his property. Under the construction uniformly given to that act, when a person took the oath of allegiance and kept it faithfully he is held loyal thereafter. That question arose in McNeal's case in 1863. On the occupation of that section by the Federal army in 1862, a large quantity of his cotton was seized and sold, and he applied to the Secretary of War for the restoration of the proceeds. The application was referred to Judge-Advocate-General Holt for his opinion, from which the following extracts are taken:

* * * "The sixth section of the act of 17th July, 1862, declares that if any person being engaged in armed rebellion against the Government of the United States, or aiding or abetting such rebellion, shall not within sixty days after public warning and proclamation by the President, cease to aid, countenance, or abet such rebellion, and return to his allegiance to the United States, all the estate and property, moneys, stocks, and credits of such person shall be liable to seizure, &c.

"This must be construed to be a declaration by implication that, if such person does comply with the requirements of the statute, his property of every kind shall be protected from seizure. The exemption for complying with the law must necessarily be held to be as broad and comprehensive as the penalty denounced for a failure to do so. What support, or aid and comfort beyond the contract referred to, had been previously given to the rebellion by the petitioner does not appear; but, whatever it may have been, he, on the 22d of July, 1862, five days after the passage of the law, returned to his allegiance and took the oath which has been already mentioned. This appears to have been done in good faith, and it is not alleged or pretended that he has since violated that oath or been guilty of any disloyal practices. It is quite clear, therefore, that if this cotton or its proceeds can be regarded as his property, it was not liable to seizure under the sixth section of the act of 17th July.

* * * "A great principle of public policy is involved in this case, and no technical objections should be allowed to restrain or embarrass its operations. It was the object of Congress to induce those in rebellion against the Government to lay down their arms and return to their allegiance, and to prevail on them to do so a complete amnesty for the past, with limited exceptions, has been offered by solemn legislative enactment. When the terms thus proposed have been accepted and complied with by a citizen previously in rebellion, good faith, as well as the best interests of the Government, require that the full benefits of this legislation and of this policy shall be secured to him.

"I recommend, therefore, that Brigadier-General Ross be ordered at once to pay over to the petitioner the $10,000, the proceeds of the cotton, and which he now holds awaiting the decision of the War Department upon the question raised."

This decision was approved by Hon. E. M. Stanton, then Secretary of War, in November, 1862, and the proceeds were paid to McNeal accordingly.

The petitioner's loyalty was again passed upon favorably by the accounting officers of the Treasury in November, 1871, and the sum of $1,294.04 was paid him on vouchers for hay, corn, fodder, &c., taken and used by the army in August, September, and October, 1862. These vouchers had been originally filed in the Office of the Quartermaster-General as a part of this claim, and were presented to the Treasury Department for settlement, with the acquiescence of the Quartermaster-General. The proof offered in support of loyalty was the same as now offered, with the exception of such proof as has since been filed. The case was referred by the Treasury Department to the Bureau of Justice in the War Department for opinion as to the sufficiency of the proof of McNeal's loyalty. After considering the effect of the oath of July, 1862, and going over the testimony critically and at length, the opinion concludes:

"There are thus twelve witnesses, unimpeached in their character, who under oath affirm the continued loyalty of the claimant—not as 'reputed,' nor as gathered as hearsay, nor any popular estimate of him, but as a fact within their own knowledge, derived from intimate and long-continued personal intercourse with him, and from constant personal observation of his conduct. Among these are three officers of the Government who, being unassailed, are, by their position as its trusted agents, entitled to its confidence. Not a single witness who has spoken under the sanction of an oath has charged the claimant either with disloyal conversation or with practices of any kind inconsistent with the obligations of allegiance assumed by him in July, 1862. Opposed to this array of testimony is the statement found in the printed voucher and the certificate of Assistant Quartermaster Eddy; but these speak only of reputation and of the sayings of certain 'Union men' not named, not under oath, and not subjected to cross-examination. In response to these, and sufficient to neutralize them, is the certificate of Assistant Quartermaster Clary, stationed at Memphis, Tenn., that the claimant, though originally a secessionist, having, on the occupation of Bolivar by the Federal troops, taken the oath of allegiance, the report was that 'he had fulfilled its conditions.' Guided to its conclusion solely by the evidence on file, this bureau can not but regard the claimant's loyalty as established so far as any issue of fact can be settled by human testimony."

This opinion is signed by J. Holt, Judge-Advocate-General. It was concurred in by the accounting officers of the Treasury, and the vouchers were paid as stated.

Since these vouchers were allowed and paid by the Treasury Department, other testimony as to loyalty has been taken, and is now presented.

W. H. Morgan, late assistant adjutant-general and brevet brigadier-general, testifies that he was for some time during the war assistant adjutant-general for the district of West Tennessee; that he was well acquainted with McNeal, and that he was regarded as a Union man by the military authorities after 1862; that as soon as the Federal troops reached his neighborhood he was one of the first to take the oath, and his conduct was such as to gain for him the confidence of the officers. The witness concludes:

"Any one who states that McNeal was disloyal from the first moment he had an opportunity to take the oath must do it from mistaken information or personal motives."

Josiah Deloach, postmaster at Memphis, Tenn., testifies that he has been well and intimately acquainted with McNeal for many years past, and that since he took the oath of allegiance in July, 1862, "he has at all times been loyal to the Government of the United States, and kept his said oath inviolate."

Thomas G. Patrick testifies "that said E. P. McNeal, since he took the amnesty oath, under President Lincoln's proclamation, in July, 1862, has all times been true and loyal to the Government of the United States, and a supporter of the same."

D. J. Benner, chief quartermaster on General Hurlburt's staff, while that officer commanded at Bolivar, and who has been before the committee, testifies:

* * * "The said McNeal had the reputation of being an unqualified Union man, and was so considered by those persons, residents of that section of country, whose loyalty the Government has fully recognized; it was a matter of common report that he took the oath of allegiance at the very earliest opportunity, and that he faithfully lived up to his obligations. I always, while stationed at Bolivar, and when hearing his name mentioned in Memphis, believed him to be a consistent Union man, and have never had any reason since to change that opinion."

If any doubts existed in the minds of any as to McNeal's loyalty upon the settlement of his vouchers by the Treasury Department, it would seem that they ought to be wholly removed by the positive testimony taken subsequently. The committee are of the opinion that the testimony abundantly justifies the conclusion that the petitioner was loyal within the meaning of the act under which he seeks relief.

McNeal owned two plantations, one near Bolivar, and the other some twelve miles distant. These appear to have been in a good state of cultivation, and there is no question as to his ownership of the property. Some twenty-five witnesses testify to the taking of the property by the United States Army, and to quantity or numbers and value. Of these, upwards of twenty made affidavits to the taking and conversion in 1865, when the circumstances relative thereto were probably fresh in memory. The account was made out in July, 1865. The case has been investigated by officers of the Quartermaster-General's Department, and no question has been raised as to the validity of the claim, so far as relates to the property. The witnesses include Pyboss, postmaster at Bolivar; Boyle, an internal revenue officer: Col. D. J. Benner, late an assistant quartermaster; D. E. Coon, late colonel of the Second Iowa Cavalry; and a number of citizens of evident respectability. Colonels Benner and Coon have been before the committee in person. The former testifies that about 10,000 bushels of corn and 80,000 pounds of fodder were taken in 1862 by himself and by an officer acting under him. He also corroborates the taking of the lumber and wood. Colonel Coon testifies to the taking of eight mules and 600 bushels of corn. The amount claimed was $16,642, which is somewhat reduced by throwing out a small portion which was not deemed sufficiently proved, and by substituting prices allowed by the Quartermaster-General at the various dates of the taking of the items charged.

The account is stated as follows:

9,895 bushels of corn, at 50 cents	$4,947 50
790 bushels of corn, at $1	790 00
80,600 pounds of fodder, at 75 cents per cwt	504 50
300 pounds of hay, at $15 per ton	2 25
13,504 feet of lumber, at $15 per 1,000	202 56
865 cords of wood, at $2 per cord	1,730 00
1,000 cords of wood (timber), at $1 per cord	1,000 00
24 mules, at $125 each	3,000 00
1 horse	150 00
2 horses, at $115 each	230 00
Wagon and harness	125 00
Total	12,781 81

The committee recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

Your committee adopt said report, and recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. PLATT. The Senator who made that report is not in.

While the bill may be all right, I do not like to vote for it without a little further time to examine it. I therefore ask that the bill may lie over until the Senator from Oregon comes in.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. CULLOM, Mr. MANDERSON, and Mr. GRAY were appointed.

J. R. M'GOLDRICK.

The bill (H. R. 960) for the relief of J. R. McGoldrick was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It appropriates $77 to pay J. R. McGoldrick, of Louisiana, in reimbursement of his claim for lost remittance of money-order funds mailed by him, as postmaster at Coushatta, La., on the 28th of September, 1883, and directed to the postmaster at Shreveport, La., and which was robbed or stolen from the mail-pouch in transit.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

H. C. WILKEY.

The bill (H. R. 6046) for the relief of H. C. Wilkey was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to H. C. Wilkey, late postmaster at Columbus, Ky., of $307.87, and interest thereon from June 8, 1882, for Government money stolen from him by burglars, and which he was required to keep on hand to pay United States postal clerks with, the payment for the loss of which is not provided for in the act of Congress of March 17, 1882.

Mr. PLATT. Is it customary to pay interest on these claims?

Mr. FRYE. No; it is not.

Mr. PLATT. I ask that the bill be read again.

The bill was read.

Mr. PLATT. In line 7, after the word "cents," I move to strike out the words "and interest thereon from June 8, 1882;" so as to read:

Out of any money not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $307.87, for Government money stolen from him by burglars, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read a third time, and passed.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] is not in his seat, and I will move that the Senate insist upon its amendment and ask for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, by unanimous consent, was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. SAWYER, Mr. CONGER, and Mr. BECK were appointed.

JAMES M. HAGAR.

The bill (H. R. 7507) for the relief of James M. Hagar was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to James M. Hagar, managing owner of the ship Saint James, of Richmond, Me., $1,112.78, being the amount illegally exacted from the ship by the United States consul at Bremerhaven and covered into the Treasury, which sum Hagar is entitled to have refunded to him, as appears by statements of the Secretary of State and Fifth Auditor of the Treasury.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. CONGER. In the Calendar the name is printed "James H. Hagar."

Mr. FRYE. It is right in the bill. "James M. Hagar" is right; the bill is right.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SAINT PAUL, MINNEAPOLIS AND MANITOBA RAILWAY.

The bill (H. R. 10056) granting to the Saint Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railway Company the right of way through the Indian reservations in Northern Montana and Northwestern Dakota was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment.

Mr. DAWES. I offer an amendment, to come in after the word "thereof," in line 4 of section 4.

Mr. COCKRELL. What has become of the amendment reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs?

Mr. MCMILLAN. There is an amendment recommended by the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment reported from the committee will be acted upon before taking up the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported from the committee.

Mr. TELLER. What is the amendment?

Mr. HARRIS. Let the amendment be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 4, line 12, the Committee on Indian Affairs report to strike out the word "and" before "construction," and after "construction" to insert the words "and operation;" so as to read:

But no right of any kind shall vest in said railway company in or to any part of the right of way herein provided for until plats thereof, made upon actual survey for the definite location of such railroad, and including the points for station buildings, depots, machine-shops, side-tracks, turnouts, and water-stations, shall be filed with and approved by the Secretary of the Interior, and until the compensation aforesaid has been fixed and paid; and the surveys, construction, and operation of such railroad shall be conducted with due regard for the rights of the Indians, and in accordance with such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may make to carry out this provision.

Mr. DAWES. The object of the amendment is to enable the Secretary of the Interior to have some control over the operation as well as the construction of the road.

Mr. TELLER. I have not any objection to the United States making any donations to Indians whenever the Government of the United States sees fit. The bill shows that this is not Indian land in any sense of the term. The President of the United States reserves this land. He can to-morrow declare it to be public land again if he sees fit. He reserves it for the use of the Indians. I have not any doubt about his authority to have allowed this railroad to be built across the land without any act of Congress; but they have seen fit to come to Congress, and we provide that the Secretary of the Interior shall fix a price the railroad is to pay, not to the Government, whose land it is, but to the Indians, who have no title whatever in the land.

Mr. DAWES. It is agreed to between the Government and the Indians and the railroad company. All agree to it.

Mr. TELLER. What I contend is that the Indians should have nothing to say about this land. It is Government land.

Mr. COCKRELL. Would not this enactment be a recognition of their title hereafter?

Mr. TELLER. That is the question. The President of the United States can not donate the public domain to an Indian tribe any more than he can to me—not a bit.

Mr. DAWES. Nobody assumes that he can.

Mr. TELLER. Here we provide for payment to Indians who are occupying a piece of ground under an executive order. The executive order gives them no rights whatever. It simply reserves the land from occupation by white men. Now, we say the Indians shall be paid for this land, which they do not own. It seems to me that that provision of the bill ought to be stricken out.

Mr. DAWES. The Indians are entitled to the use of the land so long as the executive order exists. There is no question about that; and if they can be paid a sum for the use of the land I think that the Senator from Colorado need not object to it.

Mr. TELLER. I do not object to the bill. I think that the railroad company should have the right of way over the land. I only object to this loose kind of legislation, for it is certainly loose when a bill is brought in here which recognizes in an Indian tribe something that the Government of the United States has itself to buy when it wants to give a railroad company the privilege of going across it, recognizing a title in the Indians that they do not have. I am not going to object to the bill, because I want this railroad built. It is necessary.

Mr. DAWES. Then let us have the amendment acted on.

Mr. DOLPH. I think this is a matter of more importance than seems to be considered by a majority of the Senate. In the first place, the Government has granted by general act the right of way over the public lands to every railroad company that chooses to comply with the provisions of the act of March 3, 1875. I judge from the letter of the Secretary of the Interior, and I so understand it, that the Government had already extinguished the Indian title to these lands before this reservation was set aside by executive order.

Mr. TELLER. Certainly it had.

Mr. DOLPH. Then the President comes in and sets aside a portion of the public domain for the use of the Indians as a reservation. If it had not been for that order, there is already existing legislation which would grant to the railroad company, by compliance with its conditions, a right of way over those lands.

Now, because of the executive order, and because the President does not choose to modify the executive order in-so-far as to allow the company to locate its line over this land and to file its maps and thereby secure the right of way, the company comes to Congress for leave to deal with the Indians in regard to the reservation. As I understand, there is a provision in the bill to the effect that the company shall pay the Indians for the land—which does not belong to them, but belongs to the Government—as well as to pay for the injury done to the improvements made by the Indians.

I think it is a wrong principle, and, as suggested by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL], it might commit us to the idea, at least as a precedent, that the Indians had a right to the soil, or the power of the President to donate land to Indians at any time. I understand the President could rescind his order at any time, and throw any one of the reservations which have been created by executive order open to settlement without any act of Congress whatever.

Mr. DAWES. There is no doubt about the President's authority to vacate the order by which he established the reservation, and there is no doubt in my mind that he could permit the railroad company to go over the land by excepting from his order so much of the land as would be occupied by the railroad. But the President and those administering Indian affairs decline to do that; and they, with the railroad company and the Indians, have agreed that for the use of this right of way, while the executive order exists, the railroad company shall pay the Indians what the Secretary of the Interior says they ought to pay for the use of the land while the executive order exists. The Senate can decline to grant this right, and the Interior Department will decline to let the railroad go through, and I shall be entirely satisfied.

Mr. TELLER. Has the agreement already been made between the company and the Indians?

Mr. DAWES. But, it seems to me, all at once somebody is straining at a gnat and swallowing a camel. I do not know who it is, but the idea that when the railroad company is perfectly willing to pay the Indians for the use of the land just what the Secretary of the Interior agrees, and they have all three gone into the agreement, and the money is ready, then because perchance in accordance with strict law the Secretary had the power to do it without this proposed act, the Senate may decline to pass the bill if they choose.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time has expired for the present order. The unfinished business will be laid before the Senate.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I ask unanimous consent that the order be continued until we get through with the pending bill. This is a matter of great public importance. The railroad is to be constructed through a portion of country which very much needs it. It extends from the Red River to Montana. I ask unanimous consent that we may go on with the bill.

Mr. DAWES. There is no dispute about the effect of the proposed law, if this is the convenient way of doing it.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Let us get through with the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the Senate continue the consideration of the bill until it is completed. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. SABIN. It was my purpose to offer to the bill an amendment.

Mr. DAWES. Let us dispose of the pending amendment.

Mr. SABIN. One thing I was going to ask is, what is the object of your amendment? To what amendment does the Senator from Massachusetts refer?

Mr. DAWES. The amendment recommended by the Committee on Indian Affairs. Let that be disposed of before you make your suggestion.

Mr. SABIN. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts what is the object of the amendment he has offered?

Mr. DAWES. If the Senator will look at the twelfth line of the fourth section he will see that somebody, in drawing the bill, left out two words which are in all the other bills, namely, the words "and operation." The committee suggested that those words be put in so that the Secretary of the Interior could control the operation as well as the construction of the road while the executive order existed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. Now, in section 4, line 4, after the word "thereof," I move to insert:

And also to ascertain and fix the amount of compensation to be made individual members of the tribe for damages sustained by them by reason of the construction of said road.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I hope the Senator from Massachusetts will withdraw the amendment.

Mr. DAWES. It is important to put this in to insure the bill becoming a law.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Very well.

Mr. TELLER. Let the amendment go in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SABIN. It was my purpose to offer an amendment to the bill limiting the amount of bonds and stock that should be issued upon the road. I find, however, upon examination that that limitation is already placed at $15,000 per mile for bonds, which strikes me as a very reasonable figure. It is not the purpose of the company to issue any stock whatever upon the new road to be constructed under the provisions of the bill, such issue being restricted by their charter. I therefore hope that the bill will be passed at this time without further amendment.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DAWES. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments and ask for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. DAWES, Mr. SABIN, and Mr. HAMPTON were appointed.

IMMEDIATE TRANSPORTATION OF DUTIABLE GOODS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MILLER). The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business coming over from Saturday.

Mr. CONGER. Before proceeding with the unfinished business I ask unanimous consent to take up the bill (H. R. 3289) to amend section 5 of the act entitled "An act to amend the statutes in relation to immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes," approved June 10, 1880. The bill has been read and was about to be put on its passage when the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] offered an amendment which should have been offered to some other bill. There is no amendment that I know of to be offered to the bill now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan asks the unanimous consent of the Senate to take up the bill indicated by him out of its order. Is there objection?

Mr. VEST. I call for the regular order.

Mr. CONGER. I hope the Senator from Missouri will allow this bill to go through. It was under consideration some time ago, and was ready to be passed to a third reading when the Senator from Massachusetts offered an amendment which he supposed should belong to the bill, but on inquiry he found it should be an amendment to another bill. This is a bill which it is very desirable to pass, and is a matter of great necessity to our Western and Southwestern people.

Mr. VEST. I have no objection to the bill; I should like to see the bill pass.

Mr. CONGER. It will take but a moment to dispose of it.

Mr. VEST. However I do not see where is the great necessity for pressing it at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? The Chair hears none; and the bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

The bill proposes to amend section 5 of the act of June 10, 1880; so as to read:

SEC. 5. That merchandise transported under the provisions of this act shall be conveyed in cars, vessels, or vehicles securely fastened with locks or seals, under the exclusive control of the officers of the customs; and merchandise may also be transported under the provisions of this act by express companies on passenger trains, in safes, "pouches," and trunks, which shall be of such size, character, and description, and secured in such manner as shall be from time to time prescribed by the Secretary; and in cases where merchandise shall be imported in boxes or packages too large to be included within the safes, trunks, or "pouches" as prescribed, such merchandise may be transported under the provisions of this act, by such express companies, "corded and sealed," in such manner as shall from time to time be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury; "and passengers' baggage and effects arriving at any of the ports specified in section 1 of this act, which shall appear by the manifest of the importing vessel, or other satisfactory evidence, to be destined to any of the ports specified in the seventh section, may also be transported by express companies under the provisions of this act to any of the ports specified in the seventh section thereof, in such manner and under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe;" and merchandise such as pig-iron, spiegel-iron, scrap-iron, iron ore, railroad-iron, and similar articles commonly transported upon platform or flat cars may be transported under the provisions of this act upon such platform or flat cars; and the weight of such merchandise so transported shall be ascertained in all cases before shipment, and ordinary railroad scales may be used for such purposes; and inspectors shall be stationed at proper points along the designated routes, or upon any car, vessel, vehicle, or train, at the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, and at the expense of the companies, respectively. Such merchandise shall not be unladen or transshipped between the ports of first arrival and final destination, unless authorized by the regulations of the Secretary of the Treasury in cases which may arise from a difference in the gauge of railroads, "or where the route is bonded for both land and water carriage," or from accidents, or from legal intervention, or when, by reason of the length of the route, the cars, after due inspection by custom officers, shall be considered unsafe or unsuitable to proceed further, or from low water, ice, or other unavoidable obstruction to navigation; and in no case shall there be permitted any breaking of the original packages of such merchandise.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House requested the Senate to furnish the House with a duplicate engrossed copy of the bill (S. 2225) to indemnify certain subjects of the Chinese Empire for losses sustained by the violence of a mob at Rock Springs, in the Territory of Wyoming, in September, 1885, the original having been lost or mislaid.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9116) to provide for holding terms of the United States courts at Texarkana, Ark., and for other purposes, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CULBERSON, Mr. ROGERS, and Mr. CASWELL managers at the conference on the part of the House.

PAYMENT OF LABORERS FOR DECORATION DAY, ETC.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. R. 40) providing for the payment of per diem laborers in Government employ on the 30th of May of each year as on other days.

The amendments of the House of Representatives were stated as follows:

In line 3, strike out "thirtieth" before the word "day," and after the word "day" strike out the words "of May."

In lines 3 and 4, strike out the words "commonly called Decoration day" and insert "which is celebrated as memorial or decoration day, and the 4th of July."

In line 4, strike out the words "a holiday" and insert the word "holidays;" and amend the title so as to read:

A joint resolution providing for the payment of per diem laborers in Government employ on memorial or decoration day and the 4th day of July of each year as on other days.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

The amendments were concurred in.

COPY OF A BILL.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the request of the House of Representatives to furnish a duplicate engrossed copy of the bill (S. 2225) to indemnify certain subjects of the Chinese Empire for losses sustained by the violence of a mob at Rock Springs, in the Territory of Wyoming, in September, 1885.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The request will be granted by unanimous consent, unless there be objection.

STEEL FOR ORDNANCE, ETC.

Mr. DOLPH. Before Senate bill 662 is transmitted to the other House, I desire to move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, for the purpose of making a verbal amendment to the amendment offered by myself, adding the words "is hereby appropriated." I presume it can be done in a moment by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate has heard the request of the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. DOLPH. I move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate ordered to engrossment and third reading and passed the bill (S. 662) to encourage the manufacture of steel for modern army ordnance, armor, and other army purposes, and to provide heavy ordnance adapted to modern army warfare.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. DOLPH. I now move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment offered by myself to the bill was agreed to.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. DOLPH. I now move to add to the amendment the words "is hereby appropriated."

Mr. BUTLER. I must object to the consideration of either of those bills in the absence of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY]. I do not know what the amendment is.

Mr. DOLPH. It is simply to add the words "is hereby appropriated," which were omitted in the amendment making an appropriation of $5,000,000. It was a clerical omission. I wish to have the amendment made while the bill is still in the possession of the Senate.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not know what it is, but of course if the Senator states that——

Mr. DOLPH. It is merely to add to the amendment adopted by the Senate on my motion the words "is hereby appropriated."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon. The amendment as proposed to be amended will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add to the amendment inserted in the bill as section 4 the words "is hereby appropriated;" so as to read:

SEC. 4. That for the purpose of the construction of fortifications and other works of coast defense, in accordance with the recommendations of the Board on Fortifications or other Defenses, appointed by the President of the United States under the provisions of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1885, $5,000,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, is hereby appropriated.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a reading, read the third time, and passed.

ATLANTIC AND PACIFIC SHIP-RAILWAY.

Mr. VEST. I now call for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unfinished business will be proceeded with.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2288) to incorporate the Atlantic and Pacific Ship-Railway Company, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. VEST to the amendment of the Committee on Commerce, to add as an additional section:

SEC. —. That if stock to the amount of $10,000,000 shall not be subscribed, and 10 per cent. thereof actually paid in, before the expiration of two years next after the passage of this act, or if the work of constructing said railway shall not be actually commenced before and be in progress at the expiration of four years next after the passage of this act, the said corporation shall be deemed to have expired by limitation, and all its franchises and privileges shall be deemed to have absolutely ceased and become determined.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, when I yielded the floor on Saturday upon this bill I was about to consider the relations of the United States Government toward the Government of Colombia in respect of the obligations that we are under there to protect the peace in that country. The United States Government was the first in the field in its negotiations with Colombia—New Granada then—in regard to this isthmian transit. We had then the proposition on foot of building a railway across that isthmus, with the assistance of our own people. In the treaty of 1846 was the following provision:

The United States of America and the Republic of New Granada, desiring to make as durable as possible the relations which are to be established between the two parties by virtue of this treaty, have declared solemnly, and do agree to the following points:

First. For the better understanding of the preceding articles, it is and has been stipulated between the high contracting parties, that the citizens, vessels, and merchandise of the United States shall enjoy in the ports of New Granada, including those of the part of the Granadian territory generally denominated Isthmus of Panama, from its southernmost extremity until the boundary of Costa Rica, all the exemptions, privileges, and immunities concerning commerce and navigation which are now or may hereafter be enjoyed by Granadian citizens, their vessels, and merchandise; and that this equality of favors shall be made to extend to the passengers, correspondence, and merchandise of the United States in their transit across the said territory, from one sea to the other. The Government of New Granada guarantees to the Government of the United States that the right of way or transit across the Isthmus of Panama upon any modes of communication that now exist, or that may be hereafter constructed, shall be open and free to the Government and citizens of the United States, and for the transportation of any articles of produce, manufactures, or merchandise, of lawful commerce belonging to the citizens of the United States.

Other privileges are conferred, which it is not necessary that I should read:

And, in order to secure to themselves the tranquil and constant enjoyment of these advantages, and as an especial compensation for the said advantages, and for the favors they have acquired by the fourth, fifth, and sixth articles of this treaty, the United States guarantee, positively and efficaciously, to New Granada, by the present stipulation, the perfect neutrality of the before-mentioned isthmus, with the view that the free transit from the one to the other sea may not be interrupted or embarrassed in any future time while this treaty exists; and, in consequence, the United States also guarantee, in the same manner, the rights of sovereignty and property which New Granada has and possesses over the said territory.

Second. The present treaty shall remain in full force and vigor for the term of twenty years from the day of the exchange of the ratifications; and from the same day the treaty that was concluded between the United States and Colombia, on the 13th of October, 1824, shall cease to have effect, notwithstanding what was disposed in the first point of its thirty-first article.

Third. Notwithstanding the foregoing, if neither party notifies to the other its intention of reforming any of, or all, the articles of this treaty twelve months before the expiration of the twenty years stipulated above, the said treaty shall continue binding on both parties beyond the said twenty years, until twelve months from the time that one of the parties notifies its intention of proceeding to a reform.

There is the basis of the peculiar commercial and political relation which we hold to the State of Panama and to the Republic of Colombia in respect of this isthmian transit. There has been a free expression of opinion on various occasions by our Secretaries of State and our Presidents as to the interpretation of the obligations resting upon us and the correlative rights that grow out of this treaty in our favor, and they have been uniformly of this tendency, without undertaking to read the correspondence which sets forth the proposition I am about to state: That this undertaking of the Government of the United States to secure the peace and neutrality of Panama includes the right to enforce the peace in that country, so that there shall be no outrage committed upon the commerce of the people of the United States when in transit across that isthmus; and that this is also a peculiar power given to us, in its nature exclusive because of the fact that we were paid for it, as is expressly in the treaty alleged, by the concessions made to us by the fourth, fifth, and sixth articles of the treaty; that is to say, that Panama or New Granada in negotiating this arrangement with us made a stipulation which gave us peculiar privileges for which we were compensated in the articles numbered 4, 5, and 6.

We have been following up the idea which was conveyed in the original treaty by some assertion on our part from time to time of our exclusive right to secure the occupancy of certain islands in the Bay of Panama whenever we could get the consent of the Government of Panama to our occupancy, because of the fact that those islands would give to us the power to protect the transit; they would enable us, without locating ourselves within the body of the people of Panama, to create such stations and such defenses in the Bay of Panama as might give to us a better opportunity of defending against any aggression which might be made to interrupt the freedom of commerce across the isthmus.

Since that treaty was agreed upon some very important changes have taken place in the Isthmus of Panama. We find that the railway company which was organized there and built its route has transferred its entire interest into the hands of the Panama Canal Company; that we now have no other right of property there than the naked power and duty of protecting the Isthmus of Panama as to the freedom of our own commerce and as to the freedom of commerce of all the rest of the world. In other words, we have not in the Isthmus of Panama to-day any other than a purely political interest; there is no railroad, no canal, no grant of a right to build a railroad or a canal alongside of the one which is being now constructed, and no right to do anything except merely to send our ships of war down there whenever the people of Panama or any other set of people may choose to break the peace and thereby interrupt our commerce and the commerce of the rest of the world crossing that Isthmus. That is where we are left.

The Monroe doctrine, in addition to the rights which are conferred by the treaty of 1846, may be a sufficient foundation, and I believe is a sufficient foundation, for any interference that we might choose to make there with the operations of any company acting under the guarantee of a foreign power and seeking to establish in that isthmus any exclusive or peculiar right of transit. I do not mean merely the right to carry their own ships across or the right to charge their own rates of toll, but I mean a right to make a preference between the ships of one nation and another, for instance, in time of war, so that if we had to go to the Pacific Ocean to defend our possessions we might be compelled to get the consent of the agents or the incorporated company of some foreign power located in Panama before we could have the full power and privilege of exercising our treaty rights in that country.

As our material interests in the Isthmus of Panama dwindle and disappear it seems to me that the assertion of our political interests there ought to become more prominent and decided, because of the fact that they are all we have left. If that canal or that transit is to be of any importance at all to the people and the Government of the United States in the future, it seems to me to be high time that we were having an understanding with the other powers of the earth, particularly with Colombia, as to what rights and privileges we are to enjoy there, and whether, after all, we are to become the protectors of the commerce of the rest of the world in that quarter without any corresponding advantage to ourselves.

I mentioned on Saturday an impression that was resting upon my mind, that the Governments of France and Great Britain would bestir themselves to get advantages in that quarter, knowing that our material interests had disappeared, and that we had nothing now remaining to us except the mere shell of right and privilege conferred by the treaty of 1846, which imposes a great many more duties upon us than it confers benefits. That the Governments of Great Britain and France would naturally seek to establish themselves there, and that the conduct of the Government of Great Britain in reference to the island of Taboga and the other islands in the Bay of Panama heretofore, within the last three or four years, was a sufficient indication to us of a fixed and settled purpose to plant themselves in a position of command on the other side of the isthmus, the Panama side, while they hold a very advantageous position of command on this side, in the island of Jamaica.

The island of Jamaica is almost as near to the Panama Canal as the island of Cyprus is to the Suez Canal. I do not know but that it is quite as near, quite as convenient a place for resort, for fortification, for the accumulation of naval and military stores, for the grouping of armies that might be necessary to enforce British policy in that quarter; and if in addition to this they shall ever acquire in the Bay of Panama the right to establish themselves under the authority of the Government of Colombia, they would have their guns pointing from either direction upon the openings of this canal, and with their immense fleet they would certainly have a very great power to control the destinies of that canal and all persons and governments directly interested in it.

I have never found anything in the history of the policy of the British Government which tends to modify the opinion in my mind that it will always do whatever may be considered necessary for the permanent establishment of its commercial and its maritime power in any part of the world. I do not attribute that sentiment to the people and the Government of Great Britain in derogation of their character in the slightest degree. It is a trait that belongs to their character naturally, and which we ourselves have inherited from them to a large extent; and it is something not to be complained of either, in an international sense. Still we must recognize the fact that in our dealings with these great questions, which so immediately concern our future welfare, we will always expect to find an antagonist in Great Britain, alert, well informed, sedate, resolute—yes, intrepid, and ready to do anything that may be necessary for the establishment and the promotion of British interests.

So I take it, Mr. President, that we have some duties to perform in respect to this matter, and that the time is now perhaps as rife as the time will ever be for the declaration of a firm American policy in respect of this great Mediterranean of ours that lies to the south of us, and its connections, in the future, through the isthmus with the Pacific Ocean. There is no time for faltering, no time for misunderstanding, no time for procrastination or delay; but it is high time that we had announced and established in the face of the world, sedately and justly and honestly a policy that our people are willing and ready to pursue on these questions.

The Clayton-Bulwer treaty, which announced a certain doctrine, was ratified in April, 1850, and in 1853 we ratified with Mexico a treaty which has reference to some of the same subjects that are mentioned in the Clayton-Bulwer treaty. I bring this subject forward and would like to be able to call it to the attention of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], who is in charge of this bill, for the purpose of getting some explanation about it. I think that our treaty of 1853 with Mexico is probably as much in conflict with the eighth article of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty as anything that has been proposed to be done between this Government and Nicaragua without adverting to exactly what has been proposed to be done; but we understand it, though I believe we are not yet at liberty to state it. This is called the Gadsden treaty. It is a permanent or a perpetual treaty. There is nothing in it to indicate that either government has a right to put an end to it. The rights which are conferred here were intended to be perpetual rights. I will read them:

ARTICLE VIII.

The Mexican Government having on the 5th of February, 1853, authorized the early construction of a plank and rail road across the Isthmus of Tehuantepec, and, to secure the stable benefits of said transit way to the persons and merchandise of the citizens of Mexico and the United States, it is stipulated that neither government will interpose any obstacle to the transit of persons and merchandise of both nations; and at no time shall higher charges be made on the transit of persons and property of citizens of the United States than may be made on the persons and property of other foreign nations, nor shall any interest in said transit way—nor in the proceeds thereof, be transferred to any foreign government.

This is the point in the matter—

The United States, by its agents, shall have the right to transport across the isthmus, in closed bags, the mails of the United States not intended for distribution along the line of communication; also the effects of the United States Government and its citizens, which may be intended for transit, and not for distribution on the isthmus, free of custom-house or other charges by the Mexican Government. Neither passports nor letters of security will be required of persons crossing the isthmus and not remaining in the country.

When the construction of the railroad shall be completed, the Mexican Government agrees to open a port of entry in addition to the port of Vera Cruz, at or near the terminus of said road on the Gulf of Mexico.

The two governments will enter into arrangements for the prompt transit of troops and munitions of the United States, which that Government may have occasion to send from one part of its territory to another, lying on opposite sides of the continent.

The Mexican Government having agreed to protect with its whole power the prosecution, preservation, and security of the work, the United States may extend its protection as it shall judge wise to it when it may feel sanctioned and warranted by the public or international law.

That is a very important treaty engagement as I understand it, and the line of transit which is mentioned in the eighth article of the treaty of 1853 is identical with the one that is in the bill we are now considering. So in that connection it becomes a matter of the greatest moment that we should understand whether the concession which Mexico has made to the Eads Ship-railway Company in any wise conflicts with the rights secured to us under the eighth article of the treaty with Mexico of 1853 and the eighth article of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty. It was for the purpose of enabling the Senate to see the precise bearing of this concession in connection with this treaty that I had it placed in the RECORD, and presently I shall refer to some points in the concession and some in the treaty which I think are entirely in conflict.

But before proceeding to do that I desire to call the attention of the Senate to certain rights that we have in Nicaragua upon this subject of transit which are of later date than the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, and which I suppose were incorporated in this engagement between the United States and Nicaragua in strict compliance with the principles of that treaty, because Great Britain also negotiated with Nicaragua about the same time, or a little before, this treaty was negotiated, one of almost precisely similar import so far as the right of transit and protection is concerned. The fifteenth, sixteenth, and seventeenth articles of the treaty with Nicaragua are very important in connection with the proposition to build any transit-way across the isthmus whether in Panama, or whether in Nicaragua, or whether at Tehuantepec, or elsewhere. I say it is important because, in looking at the eighth article of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, we see that there is a reference made both to Tehuantepec and Panama, and perhaps I had better read that before I read the articles in the treaty with Nicaragua, of which I have just been speaking. The eighth article of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty is as follows:

ARTICLE VIII.

The Governments of the United States and Great Britain having not only desired, in entering into this convention, to accomplish a particular object, but also to establish a general principle, they hereby agree to extend their protection, by treaty stipulations, to any other practicable communications, whether by canal or railway, across the isthmus which connects North and South America, and especially to the inter-oceanic communications, should the same prove to be practicable, whether by canal or railway, which are now proposed to be established by the way of Tehuantepec or Panama. In granting, however, their joint protection to any such canals or railways as are by this article specified, it is always understood by the United States and Great Britain that the parties constructing or owning the same shall impose no other charges or conditions of traffic thereupon than the aforesaid Governments shall approve of as just and equitable; and that the same canals or railways, being open to the citizens and subjects of the United States and Great Britain on equal terms, shall also be open on like terms to the citizens and subjects of every other State which is willing to grant thereto such protection as the United States and Great Britain engage to afford.

I do not suppose that any one will find that the eighth article of this treaty is very easy to be interpreted. Certainly I have not found it easy to understand, but I read it in this way, that the United States and Great Britain will make treaty stipulations in the future, either jointly or separately, but in substance identical with this article, with the Governments of Central America and also with the Government of Colombia, under which a joint protection shall be given to any isthmian transmit by the Governments of the United States and Great Britain and by which it shall be imposed also upon those governments, either by treaty or without a treaty, that the citizens of the United States and of Great Britain shall have rights in that transit equal to those of any other power of the earth, and that their own rights shall be equal to each other, and that other nations who will contribute to the protection which the United States and Great Britain promise that they will give to the isthmian transit, shall also have the benefit of the transit by railway or by canal upon equal terms. That is my understanding of what is meant by that clause in the treaty.

This seems to be a treaty engagement to enforce upon the States of the isthmus the neutrality of any transit across them, and to give them the joint protection of the United States and Great Britain, while admitting to similar rights those countries, and only those, that will give like protection. But for the evident magnanimity of this proposition it might be considered arrogant.

Having read that in connection with the rights that we got from Mexico in 1853, three years later than that treaty, I shall proceed now to read the articles from the Nicaraguan treaty of 1867, which, as I have observed, were intended to carry into effect on our part the principles of the agreement of 1850, called the Clayton-Bulwer treaty.

ARTICLE XIV.

The Republic of Nicaragua hereby grants to the United States, and to their citizens and property, the right of transit between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans through the territory of that republic, on any route of communication, natural or artificial, whether by land or by water, which may now or hereafter exist or be constructed under the authority of Nicaragua, to be used and enjoyed in the same manner and upon equal terms by both republics and their respective citizens; the Republic of Nicaragua, however, reserving its rights of sovereignty over the same.

ARTICLE XV.

The United States hereby agree to extend their protection to all such routes of communication as aforesaid, and to guarantee the neutrality and innocent use of the same. They also agree to employ their influence with other nations to induce them to guarantee such neutrality and protection.

And the Republic of Nicaragua, on its part, undertakes to establish one free port at each extremity of one of the aforesaid routes of communication between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans. At these ports no tonnage or other duties shall be imposed or levied by the Government of Nicaragua on the vessels of the United States, or on any effects or merchandise belonging to citizens or subjects of the United States, or upon the vessels or effects of any other country, intended, bona fide, for transit across the said routes of communication, and not consumption within the Republic of Nicaragua. The United States shall also be at liberty, on giving notice to the Government or authorities of Nicaragua, to carry troops and munitions of war in their own vessels, or otherwise, to either of said free ports, and shall be entitled to their conveyance between them without obstruction by said Government or authorities, and without any charges or tolls whatever for their transportation on either of said routes; provided said troops and munitions of war are not intended to be employed against Central American nations friendly to Nicaragua. And no higher or other charges or tolls shall be imposed on the conveyance or transit of persons and property of citizens or subjects of the United States, or of any other country, across the said routes of communication, than are or may be imposed on the persons and property of citizens of Nicaragua.

And the Republic of Nicaragua concedes the right of the Postmaster-General of the United States to enter into contracts with any individuals or companies to transport the mails of the United States along the said routes of communication, or along any other routes across the isthmus, in its discretion, in closed bags, the contents of which may not be intended for distribution within the said republic, free from the imposition of all taxes or duties by the Government of Nicaragua; but this liberty is not to be construed so as to permit such individuals or companies, by virtue of this right to transport the mails, to carry also passengers or freight.

ARTICLE XVI.

The Republic of Nicaragua agrees that, should it become necessary at any time to employ military forces for the security and protection of persons and property passing over any of the routes aforesaid, it will employ the requisite force for that purpose; but upon failure to do this from any cause whatever, the Government of the United States may, with the consent, or at the request of the Government of Nicaragua, or of the minister thereof at Washington, or of the competent legally appointed local authorities, civil or military, employ such force for this and for no other purpose; and when, in the opinion of the Government of Nicaragua, the necessity ceases, such force shall be immediately withdrawn.

In the exceptional case, however, of unforeseen or imminent danger to the lives or property of citizens of the United States, the forces of said republic are authorized to act for their protection without such consent having been previously obtained.

But no duty or power imposed upon or conceded to the United States by the provisions of this article shall be performed or exercised except by authority and in pursuance of laws of Congress hereafter enacted. It being understood that such laws shall not affect the protection and guarantee of the neutrality of the routes of transit, nor the obligation to withdraw the troops which may be disembarked in Nicaragua directly that, in the judgment of the government of this republic, they should no longer be necessary, nor in any manner bring about new obligations on Nicaragua, nor alter her rights in virtue of the present treaty.

That is as far as it is necessary for me to read now in order to show the point that I make, which is, that in its dealings with Panama, in its dealings with Mexico, in its dealings with Nicaragua, the Government of the United States, both before and since the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, has distinctly asserted its right to enter into separate stipulations for its own accommodation and convenience. In the case of Mexico the right of transmitting our armies and munitions of war across the isthmus; in the case of Nicaragua the right, when there may be an immediate necessity, of going in there with our army and munitions of war and our ships to protect the freedom of the transit and the impartiality of its use; and in the case of Panama or Colombia an express obligation resting upon us that we will, for a consideration expressed in that treaty, protect any transit across the isthmus, whether by railroad or by canal, against local interruption or against foreign interference.

These are the rights and obligations which we have by treaty with these three powers, and I do not understand that there is a nation in the world that pretends to deny to us the full right that is conferred under each and all of these respective treaty engagements.

I mention this because I expect before we have gotten very far with this matter somebody will rise to say (perhaps not here, but elsewhere) that before you can charter a company of Americans to go to Tehuantepec, or to go to Nicaragua, or to go to Panama to construct a canal or a railroad you must first inquire whether the consent of the British Government is to be obtained under the eighth article of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty. I do not know that the British Government would insist upon that, for I have an impression growing out of the history of this matter, as I understand it, that that Government is scarcely willing to press with any emphasis and force the principles and doctrines of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty upon us in so far as it prevents us in any sense from entering this isthmus at any point and with the consent of the local government, and constructing for the benefit of the Government and the people of the United States a line of transit across the isthmus.

Still, in the absence of a distinctive American policy, in the absence of an express, resolute determination on our part to do for our country at the present and for posterity what duty demands of us, and what right and conscience clearly accord to us, we may well halt and hesitate in the advocacy of any proposition that has for its object the final, practical solution of this subject and the dispersion of this cloud of mist and doubt, and disturbance too, which has existed over this country ever since April, 1850, in consequence of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty.

Mr. EUSTIS. Has England ever complained about the Nicaraguan treaty?

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator from Louisiana asks me if England has ever complained about the treaty we made with Nicaragua. Certainly not; and England has negotiated with Nicaragua a treaty almost identical in its provisions so far as the part of it is concerned which I have been just reading, including in that treaty the surrender of the right of dominion over the so-called Mosquito Kingdom at the mouth of the San Juan River.

I believe that the Senator from Missouri has a clear road opened by treaty to the building of the ship-railway which the bill proposes, provided the Eads concession is not of a character to interfere with the treaty rights of the United States; and about that I confess I have some doubt. I will call attention to the sixteenth article of the concession, and let us see how that harmonizes with the treaty with Mexico from which I have been reading. The sixteenth article of the concession is as follows:

ART. 16. Passage over the railway shall be open for all the vessels of all the nations not at war with Mexico, and the government of the republic binds itself not to close to ocean commerce, during the time of the concession, either of the two terminal ports of the interoceanic ship-railway, one in the Gulf, the other in the Pacific, except in case of war.

That exception of case of war is not reserved in the treaty, and that is the very time when it would be supposed that we would have the best right to it.

The treasury department shall make the regulations which must be observed, &c.

That is not a material matter. I now turn to article 25, clause 3, to see how that comports with the treaty:

3. For the company, knowingly and intentionally, and not being constrained by superior force, transporting on the railway vessels of war or troops of any foreign nation, without the previous constitutional permission, officially communicated by the government to the enterprise.

This is one of the causes which would work the forfeiture of the concession. The term "constitutional permission" there I do not quite understand, but I suppose it might include the provisions of a treaty made in conformity with the constitution of the Republic of Mexico.

Now I call attention to article 28 in respect of the question of giving privileges or preferences to the people or the commerce of any other country above that of the United States. This article provides:

ART. 28. Eads or the company may grant a reduction amounting to 25 per cent. of the rates authorized by article 11 to the merchandise, passengers, and merchant vessels of the nation, or foreign nations whose governments shall lend it their aid either by means of money or guarantee.

This reduction shall last for a term of thirty years, and in all cases Mexican merchandise and passengers and the national marine shall enjoy the same franchises. The enterprise is also authorized to grant the same reduction to the war marine of said nation or nations, but with the proviso that the transportation of vessels, troops, or munitions of war shall not be understood to have been consented to, in any case, without the express permission of the Government of Mexico officially communicated to the enterprise.

It seems to me that that is a preference given to those governments that aid in this enterprise which totally overturns the privileges given to us by the treaty of 1853, from which I have just been reading.

Again:

The government granting the aforesaid aid shall have the right to be represented in the board of directors of the company, without any power save that of being present at the examination of the accounts for the purpose of receiving the share of the profits that belongs to them by two-ninths of the whole number of its members, these representatives enjoying the same emoluments and prerogatives as the other directors.

In case that Eads or the company should fail in any of the stipulations contained in the preceding article contracted with any foreign government, that government can only enforce its rights before the Mexican courts of the capital of the republic, in accordance with ths laws of Mexico; but in no case can the government which brings suit acquire the ownership of the works or the rights emanating therefrom.

These provisions seem quite in conflict with our treaty rights with Mexico.

Our rights in Mexico in respect to this matter are treaty rights, to be settled in the courts of diplomacy or at the point of the sword if we disagree materially about them; but this engagement, as I understand it, would remit the United States to the Mexican courts or require us to prosecute our claims there as suitors and not to assert them under the treaty if we should become a party to this concession by adopting it as the basis of this legislation.

Now, Mr. President, in order to avoid these and other troubles of like kind which I find in the reading of this concession, I propose to offer an amendment to this bill which I think covers the ground, though it may not be happily worded for that purpose. I am not quite sure that this amendment goes as far as it should. I think the Senator from Missouri will recognize the importance of it in connection with the points I have just stated of discrepancy between the concession made by Mexico and the obligations this company comes under to that government and our treaty rights under the treaty of 1853. My amendment is as follows:

In granting this act of incorporation to its own citizens and to such other persons as may become their associates and successors, the Government of the United States expressly hereby declares that it reserves to itself the full and unqualified rights and privileges in any railway or canal transit across the Isthmus of Tehuantepec, or in any way connected with or growing out of such lines or means of transit, secured to the United States by article 8 of the treaty with Mexico, concluded December 30, 1853, and proclaimed June 30, 1854; nor does the United States in any manner waive or modify or release any agreement in said treaty that relates to governments or persons that are foreign to Mexico or the United States. And this act shall not be construed as accepting or confirming, or in any way recognizing as being valid, any concession or agreement made by Mexico to James B. Eads, or to any other person which, in any manner, is or may be in conflict with or in derogation of any right of the United States under said treaty.

I think the Senator from Missouri will recognize the necessity for putting that into this bill as a guard against the release of the rights guaranteed to us by Mexico, and which I think are permanent and very valuable rights. Whether Mr. Eads shall ever successfully complete a ship-railway across that isthmus, or whether he shall only succeed in building a railroad under the charter which we grant him and under the concession which Mexico has given him, in either event it is altogether important to us that we should have upon that line of transit all the privileges guaranteed to us in the Gadsden treaty.

I do not know that the Mexican Government has any desire to break away from this treaty, but I could scarcely think of any means which would be more effectual to get rid of it than to make a concession like this to one of our citizens, which stands in the teeth of the treaty and the rights that we have guaranteed to us under that instrument, and by getting us to adopt that concession as a part of this measure, or as a predicate on which this measure is based. After we have thus recognized this concession, Mexico would be able to assert that we knew what our rights were under this treaty, and granted to an American corporation rights in contravention of them, and in the confirmation also of rights granted by the Mexican Government to that same company. They could well insist that we have united with Mexico in the mutual surrender of the stipulations of that treaty in our favor and that the relation hereafter existing between us in respect to the right of transit across the Isthmus of Tehuantepec would be simply that fixed in the concession made to Eads and accepted by our act of incorporation. I do not want to get into that condition in respect of this very important matter, and I repeat that I have some doubt whether or not the amendment I have prepared is altogether sufficient to preserve to us those treaty rights which were guaranteed to us in 1853, by which we made the Gadsden Purchase. It is certainly a matter worthy of attention.

My attention was not so sharply drawn to this matter until I read the concession which the Senator from Missouri handed me on Saturday, and which I put into the RECORD. It is different from that which Mr. Eads handed me, and which I have now, with his compliments written over his own name; and this concession does not appear to be signed, whereas the former concession was signed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Which do you call "the former?"

Mr. MORGAN. The one Mr. Eads handed me, which differed from this.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is signed?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes. I will send it to the Senator from Vermont if he desires to look at it. I thought perhaps the agreement had been enlarged by subsequent arrangement between the parties, and that is a matter easy of explanation. I hope it is, and believe it is, but I do not know anything about it. This one is dated December, 1880, signed by Porfirio Diaz and James B. Eads.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But the one in the RECORD is not signed at all.

Mr. MORGAN. Apparently not, if correctly printed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And has no date.

Mr. MORGAN. And has no date. I dare say the Senator from Missouri will be able to give a full explanation of that. There is one other objection I have to this bill which I think ought to be corrected by its friends. If I understand all the rates of toll, they are very much higher in this concession than I think they ought to be.

ART. 11. Eads or the company is authorized to collect tolls from each vessel transported over said railway, provided that the maximum toll on each vessel does not exceed a sum equal to $5 per cubic meter for each meter contained in a parallelopipedon of which the dimensions shall be the greatest length and the greatest breadth of the vessel, measured at the surface of the water, and her greatest immersed depth. In the application of this tariff, fractions of cubic meters shall be considered as complete cubic meters.

For each passenger carried across in a vessel a sum not exceeding $15 may be charged.

Silver in bars, or coined; gold in bars, in dust, or coined; jewels and precious stones shall pay, as a maximum rate, 1 per cent. of their value.

Which I do not understand; perhaps the Senator from Missouri will be able to explain it. In this same article 11—

If any captain of a vessel, or owner, or conductor of said property shall fail to declare that it is being carried to the agent of Eads or of the company, said Eads or said company shall have the right to exact 10 per cent. of the value of the property, and to seize and detain the vessel, or the property in question, until payment of said 10 per cent. be made.

I do not know what that relates to. It appears to relate to all the commerce carried across this ship-railway.

Eads or the company may also collect wharfage dues and tonnage dues, provided that said dues do not exceed $1 per registered ton, and that the vessels from which these dues be claimed use the ports, wharves, or other hydraulic works of the company; and this sum may be charged for each period of twenty days, or less if the vessel be there only that time, on the condition that the delay be not caused by the enterprise.

I do not know why it should be in this concession that Eads should have the right to collect 10 per centum of the value of property shipped across that transit unless the captain of the vessel, or owner, or conductor declares that it is being carried to the agent of Eads or the company. I could very well understand that in the case of material out of which the ship-railway was to be built there should be a declaration of that character, otherwise 10 per cent. of the value of the property would be charged against the shipper. That would be a rule for the purpose of preventing the evasion of the concession which exempts the property to be used in the building of the railway from any tariff charge.

I merely call the attention of the Senator from Missouri to that clause because I would like to have it explained.

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator let me explain it now?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. VEST. I think I understand it. Article II provides:

Eads or the company is authorized to collect tolls, &c.

* * * * * * *

For each passenger carried across in a vessel a sum not exceeding $15 may be charged.

Silver in bars, or coined; gold in bars, in dust, or coined; jewels and precious stones shall pay, as a maximum rate, 1 per cent. of their value.

If any captain of a vessel, or owner, or conductor of said property shall fail—

That is, if the captain of the vessel itself or an agent who has charge of this property carried in the vessel declares "that it is being carried to the agent of Eads or of the company." That is, he must state that he has this property in charge on the vessel, and if he fails to make that declaration and undertakes to carry it over surreptitiously and to defraud by that means, then the company shall have the right to exact 10 per cent. of the value of the property, and seize and detain the vessel until the payment of the 10 per cent. is made. That is, the penalty in case of concealment to defraud the Government is 10 per cent. A comma should be put after the word "carried," "shall fail to declare that it is being carried," that is, declare it to be carried to Eads or the agents of the company, and then the 10 per cent. penalty is exacted. That is the whole of it.

Mr. MORGAN. I am not disposed to be at all hypercritical about it. It was a matter that struck my attention in reading it. I thought it a peculiar provision as it was punctuated.

I understand also that a discrimination is made between Mexico and its right of transit across this isthmus, and all other countries, including the United States, in this way: The United States, after granting this charter or act of incorporation, will be required to pay all its dues and tolls in gold coin, and the Mexican Government has the right to pay them in silver coin, which is twenty to twenty-five per cent., I believe, discount for American gold. I think that when we are making a concession of this kind, if there is any value to be attached to it at all, there is at least enough value, or ought to be in our estimation, to induce us to demand from the Mexican Government, and from this corporation also, terms of perfect equality between Mexico and the United States in tolls and other charges.

Mexico has the soil and is to have the advantage of this local establishment upon her soil with its increased population and wealth and so on. Mexico is to be very largely benefited by the building of this ship-railway, whereas the United States has only a contingent benefit in it, and one not at all superior to that of any other government in the world. She has no advantage over Great Britain, France, Germany, or any other power in sending her troops or ships or any thing else across that isthmus. Mexico gets all the advantage, and yet when Mexico comes to pay her tolls across this ship-railway she pays in her own silver coin and the United States pays in gold. I do not quite see the advantage that it will be to the Government of the United States to put it in the power of the corporation to make that discrimination between us and Mexico in the transportation of goods, or soldiers, or whatever it may be, across the ship-railway.

I notice also that the Government of Mexico reserves a considerable amount of stock and control of this company, and guarantees upon certain conditions the bonds of the company, and also makes a large grant of public lands for the purpose of cleaning out the harbors at either end of this ship-railway. If the Government of Mexico finds it to her interest to put her credit or her money or her guarantee into this enterprise, and if that is considered all the guarantee the company wants or all the assistance in the way of credit that it wants, I do not quite understand why that company should come here for a charter. We can not enforce any provision of this charter under this concession elsewhere than in the courts of Mexico. Whether we make ourselves parties to it as a Government, or whether our people make themselves parties to it as interested individuals, we must all go alike into the courts of Mexico, as the concession and the charter based upon it provide, and have all the rights that may arise under it settled there by adjudication.

I do not see any corresponding right or benefit coming to the United States, of any pecuniary character, in consideration of this charter that we grant, and really I can not understand, after Mexico becomes the guarantor of the bonds of the company up to $100,000,000 I believe, and after Mexico makes her grant of the right of way and her grant of public lands for cleaning out the harbors at either end of this ship-railway, and after she has reserved to herself the difference in exchange between gold and silver in the payment of her dues, and has reserved to herself the right to forbid at any time the transit of ships of war or troops of any foreign country, including the United States, and of course reserves to herself the right to discriminate between countries in that particular—I do not see where it is that we are getting any advantage under this charter at all; and yet I am willing to vote for it provided it can be put in the body of this charter that the rights that belong to the Government of the United States under the treaty of 1853 are all preserved. If this company, in its dealings with us upon that isthmus, chooses to violate the rights guaranteed to us in the treaty of 1853 we have our clear remedy to demand that Mexico shall comply with it; but to do this we should have it clearly stated that in granting this act of incorporation all our treaty rights are reserved.

I do not know, as I observed before, whether the Government of Great Britain, under the eighth article of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, is going to interfere or undertake to interfere with the rights claimed under this concession. It is very true that it does not give us any peculiar or exclusive rights. Nevertheless there might be ground of interference. Probably Great Britain would find ground of interference under the eighth article of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, because she might say to us, "You are empowering your people to go there and to enjoy peculiar and exclusive privileges as a corporation, an artificial person, a body-politic created by the law of the United States, that body which in every sense is peculiarly American, and which carries with it American privilege, power, and right. You are enabling such a body as this to go into the Isthmus of Tehuantepec and to claim for themselves under a concession from Mexico that which perhaps you would not have had the right to claim from Mexico under the eighth article of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, and we wish to know what your explanation of this is; we want to know whether you are violating the treaty."

I am always at a loss to find any ground relating to the Central American isthmian transit upon which it is not possible that Great Britain may interfere with our rights or our policy under their construction of what we have surrendered of our independence in the Clayton-Bulwer treaty.

The truth, Mr. President, is that so broad is the sweep and purpose apparently of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, that it seems that we can scarcely do anything in respect of Central America or Mexico or Colombia that we do not come in contact or in conflict with some of its provisions or some of its doctrines, for it is a treaty that is very full of doctrine and very empty of everything else.

However, I am willing to unite hands with the Senator from Missouri and with every Republican and with every Democrat in this body to say to Great Britain, and to those who throw themselves back upon the Clayton-Bulwer treaty as the sole interpreter of our rights, "We have had as much of that as we intend to stand. You designed that treaty for the purpose of committing us to an agreement with you that nullified the Monroe doctrine, and that doctrine is the supreme law of all America."

In 1825, when the Monroe doctrine was proclaimed, the first act of the British Government afterwards was to go to the Belize and convert a privilege to cut logwood into a right of sovereignty in that part of Honduras, and to crown a miserable, filthy, wretched, ignorant Indian as the king of the Belize; and after he had abbreviated his life by the drunken debauchery the British Government empowered him to enjoy, so that within a very few years he had passed away, as he was about to leave this world, he bestowed his royal honors by bequest upon a subaltern of the British Government then in the Belize, and he became king. That, it has always seemed to me, was intended to be a conspicuous affront to that part of the American people, which I believe has embodied nearly the whole of several generations, who have been boasting themselves continually from year to year and from decade to decade that they had great respect for, great reverence for, great determination to support, the famous Monroe doctrine. Great Britain flaunted in our faces the royal pretensions of this dirty sans-culotte, and crowned him king upon American soil as a response to the enunciation of the Monroe doctrine.

After we had conquered Mexico and had signed the treaty of Guadalupe-Hidalgo, it was a very few days—perhaps it was not more than ten or twenty days—until the British flag was floating over the harbor at the mouth of the San Juan River and the protectorate of the British Government over the Mosquito kingdom was proclaimed. The only rivalry between the Mosquito king and the king that was crowned in the Belize was a rivalry of filth and insignificance and dirt and humiliation. Two men were selected, assuming to be the chiefs of their tribes, upon whom royal honor was conferred, and into whose veins, by this royal adoption, royal blood was infused for the purpose of showing the people of the United States that they would have to take at the hands of the British Government whatever of royalty they saw proper to impose on the continent of America, and that it was to be selected from such strains of blood and through such channels as they saw proper to select. A mock and degraded royalty was thus set up as an answer to our declaration of the Monroe doctrine.

When that doctrine was further dishonored by our treaty of 1850, under which we yielded our natural rights in the isthmian transit, in consideration of the dethronement of the Mosquito king, we were confronted at once by the creation of a crown colony in Honduras, based on the divine right of the drunken king of the Balize.

The Mosquito protectorate was organized by an invasion of a pacific country, Nicaragua, and from that time on until the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, Great Britain exercised the rights of sovereign over that Mosquito territory. It had no boundaries, it scarcely had a location upon the surface of the earth, for it was composed mostly of marsh and inhabited by monkeys and mosquitoes. There was nothing of it of any substantial character, except that it included the mouth of the San Juan River. Those wild Indians that hunted about for iguanas and things of that kind to live upon had no use for a country that was of any value.

The reason was obvious why Great Britain assumed this protectorate. It was that, seeing the power we had acquired by the treaty of Guadalupe-Hidalgo, and that our borders comprised from Southern California to Oregon and Washington Territory, she saw that it was necessary to plant herself at the mouth of the San Juan River, and to hold it, asserting supremacy in that quarter. That right she gave up after a long struggle and after a long time of waiting after the Clayton-Bulwer treaty was signed.

So, Mr. President, I hope that the people of the United States have arrived at that point of determination when they will say to the Government of Great Britain: "Whatever is essential for us to have in the way of a transit across this isthmus for the passage of our armies and our ships, our foreign commerce, and our coastwise trade, that, in natural justice and right, we are entitled to, and will have." When the Almighty planted that ridge of high land, that backbone which connects these two continents, with the seas washing its base on either side, and when afterward, under His beneficent providence, this great people sprang up in the United States of America, and when their rights of commerce and rights of self-defense came to them as a prominent topic of consideration for all the world, the question whether or not that isthmus should be controlled by any power but that of the United States, or without their consent, became to us as delicate and as important a question as if it was made in respect to the peninsula of Florida.

It is not the mere right of occupancy enjoyed by the local populations, it is not the right to the soil, it is not the right to sovereignty over the isthmian States, upon which these matters of our national defense and national commercial power and commercial duty and right are based, or by which they are to be measured, but it is upon the configuration of the continent in which we have indefeasible rights, and upon the seas that wash its shores, and upon the great fact that we have got immense borders on the Pacific Ocean which now we can not reach with ships unless we pass around the Cape, and that our rights and duties rest. Whoever undertakes to get through that peninsula and to convert the connecting canal into a part of the ocean, a part of the high seas, must first ascertain whether it is entirely compatible with our interests and our wishes that this should be done.

We found the continent as it is, and have planted our institutions and shaped our policy according to its shores and seas, mountains, plains, and rivers. Whatever shall revolutionize these natural adjustments to our detriment must be done with our consent or be left undone. This I understand to be an American doctrine.

The change in the geographical situation by the construction of a ship-canal at tide level or with locks across this isthmian country is just as important to us as if the transit between Florida and Cuba was closed, just as important to us as if some restriction should be put upon our passage through the Straits of Magellan. It is the change of the ocean transit, and not the question of the advantage or disadvantage it may be to us, that is the material question. In every respect that is to us one of the most important as well as one of the most dangerous questions that can possibly arise. I deny the right of any government on this earth to change the commercial and military geography of this entire hemisphere without consulting this great people that God has permitted to assemble and to rule in this country now for several centuries.

This is not a right to be decided according to the ordinary rules of property, nor is it a right of that ordinary character which may be disposed of by the local government in combination with other governments of the earth. When a line is cut through that isthmian country, as I have before remarked, it will constitute, as a matter of fact and ought to constitute as a matter of law and of international recognition, a part of the coast line of the United States, and the Government of Nicaragua has no more right to control this coast line of the United States in respect to the advantage it may be to Great Britain or any other power without the consent of the United States than she would have the right to control the coast line between the Cape of Florida and Galveston in Texas.

Now, Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri and the gentlemen who advocate this bill and myself are in harmony upon these topics, and I trust we shall not get out of harmony upon any branch of this subject. When I venture to state the strong conviction that after we have well considered the subject, and after the capitalists of this country have taken it into advisement, the final location of the ship-transit between the Caribbean Sea and the Pacific Ocean will be found through the Lake of Nicaragua. I hope to have the friendly indulgence of the Senator from Missouri. I do not bring this subject forward with a view of disparaging the proposition that is now before the Senate, for I have observed entirely in good faith that if Mr. Eads can succeed in carrying vessels of commerce loaded across his ship-railway from the Atlantic to the Pacific I wish him Godspeed in his effort to do so; and while I do deplore that there is some division of American sentiment which at the present time seems to stand in the way of a united and powerful effort to push forward these enterprises, time will settle that. We can not settle it in the Senate.

The Senate perhaps is not prepared to pronounce a final judgment upon the engineering possibilities or probabilities of Mr. Eads's ship-railway. It is something that is very magnificent in its conception, worthy of a great engineer, and in its execution it will have the support of a man who has proved his ability in many great enterprises. The Senate, I think, could never come to a sedate and satisfactory judgment if it were compelled to choose between these two propositions; but capitalists will weigh these matters down to a very scruple, and they will understand exactly where is the best place to put their money if they undertake to assist the one enterprise or the other. Our duty as legislators is to go as far as we can with propriety in enabling these corporations to get a foothold and to establish themselves if they can.

My reasons for preferring the Nicaragua route are numerous. The first of all is the elevation above the sea. Take the greatest elevation above the level of the sea of Lake Nicaragua, which of course is the highest level upon that canal, and it is 107 feet 6 inches; that of Panama is 108 feet, and that of Tehuantepec is 726 feet. So, when you come to consider merely the rise over the altitude that you have to overcome in passing from sea to sea, you find that the figures are in favor of Panama by an actual, close, instrumental survey. I will remark here that I have never had the pleasure of seeing a close, instrumental survey of the ship-railway. I have no doubt it exists, and I hope the Senator from Missouri will put it in the RECORD, or at least at the disposal of the Senate before we get through with this debate.

Then I prefer the Nicaragua route because of the length of the line. In Panama where you have to cut 128 feet in order to get to the bottom of the prism of your canal, if it is 20 feet deep, passing through these elevations which for about 4½ miles are chiefly rock and very difficult to handle, an immense outlay of money must necessarily take place, and there are other contingencies and conditions connected with the construction of that canal through Panama which have dazed the engineering ability of the world. I think there are very few engineers who have real faith to-day in the ability of M. De Lesseps or any other man to build a sea-level canal through from Panama to Aspinwall and to make it safe and permanent.

But I do not care to comment upon that any more than to say this: Recent official advice, as I am informed, has reached the Government of the United States that in the Panama Canal, as a sort of temporary expedient, as they say, they have found themselves compelled to put in quite a number of locks. That means simply that they have yielded the proposition of a sea-level canal, and that they expect to put locks in it, and when they come to that they have 108 feet to lock over, while the Nicaragua Canal has but 107, not much difference, but still there is a difference in favor of the Nicaragua Canal. Now there are 41.7 miles of canalization in Panama. In Nicaragua there are 38.98 miles. In Tehuantepec there are 40 miles of canalization and 134 miles of railroad.

When I say 40 miles of canalization, I mean that when you start at the harbor on the east, the bar of the river Coatzacoalcos, and ascend it 25 miles, to the average from which this railway takes its departure from the river—your river Coatzacoalcos, which in the dry season goes down very low, and which in the wet season goes up very high and spreads over great marshes—you have got to get 20 feet of water, as that is the draught of the ships you expect to go in.

Gentlemen who profess to be informed about it say that there is almost as much work in the dredging out of that river as there would be in building the canal, and that the difficulty of handling the river, in consequence of its varying depths and floods, is far greater than would be the difficulty of handling any canal. That is to say, at the point where the railroad leaves the canal and at points below that you have got to have a lock, dam, or a wall, so as to raise the vessels to the proper height to get out on the railway and to overcome the shallows on the bars in the river that are shifting with every great rise and fall of the waters.

These streams, like all the other streams in those tropical countries, are liable to sudden and great inundation, and where the inundation pours itself into the channel of transit you must naturally expect that for every flood that comes there will be a residuum of sand-bars and other obstructions and difficulties washing out your works, &c., which you have to repair.

When you have crossed the distance of 134 miles on rail and over an elevation of 726 feet, taking the level of the sea at the lower point, you strike a lagoon on the other side, the name of which I forget, and that is 15 miles from the Pacific. It is shallow, must be dredged, and when you get out to the farther coast you have got, according to Mr. Eads's statement here, a very long jetty to build to get it out into the deep waters of the Pacific Ocean, so that in the comparison of the length of the lines, the elevations to be overcome, and even the number of locks, the advantage is in favor of the Nicaragua Canal. I do not say there are as many as seven locks to be built on the Coatzacoalcos. There are seven locks on the latest survey and location of the Nicaragua Canal, whereas there are twenty-one locks in the survey and location of 1873. The last one was made by Mr. Menoçal. I do not say that there are seven locks to be built on the Coatzacoalcos; and on the lagoon at the further end of this railway, how many I do not know, for, I repeat, I have not seen the surveys, but we know how many are to be built on the Nicaragua Canal, and if Panama has to resort to locks, as we are informed she is obliged to do, instead of having seven, she will have as many as twenty. There are twenty-one dams on the Panama Canal to dam the river Chagres out of the canal basin, whereas upon the Nicaraguan route there is but one dam, and that is on the San Juan River which raises the general level of the river for nearly 40 miles—one single dam On the eastern division, leading to the Caribbean Sea, the canal is almost a continuous series of estuaries formed by permanent dams.

So, all these comparisons, without going into special details, have satisfied me that whoever wishes to put money into this enterprise, for the sake of economy will find an advantage in putting it in the Nicaragua route, and if we are to have locks on either of the canals, why not as well have them on the Nicaragua Canal as on the others?

I regret that I do not feel warranted in taking time to go over the accurate details of the Survey, and the estimates made by Mr. Menocal. They entitle him to rank as a man of leading ability in his profession, and are worthy of careful examination.

Can any gentleman in the Senate point out upon the map of this world any place besides Nicaragua where a great estuary of water has been collected by the hand of nature and locked up at an elevation of 107 feet over the level of the sea, from which can be distributed the power to carry the largest vessels down to the sea and the power to raise them from the sea? Is there any such place on this earth as Lake Nicaragua for the advantages of canalization and for many other advantages that can be pointed out? Suez has a little lake, a small body of brackish water, as a feeder, but they have had to construct a canal from Cairo to Suez in order to get fresh water to supply the Suez Canal. Then they have had to build immense jetties at the northern end of that canal in order to get the waves of the sea to roll in, and catch them in the lake, so as to furnish a body of water on which ships could be transported.

Here nature in the mountains of Nicaragua has poured into great reservoirs eternal streams of water, clear and bright, not subject to floods, and never an elevation in those lakes of more than 4 feet, and the water never muddy. Nature has poured these waters into these vast basins, and on the eastern side is the River San Juan, a powerful, strong, beautiful current, and but for a few rapids in it a current that might be made easily navigable to vessels drawing 20 feet of water. Indeed, vessels of large draught from the eastern ports have gone from the Caribbean Sea into these lakes on frequent occasions. These steamers traverse the ocean, and draw from 12 to 18 feet of water.

On the east side the rim of the lake stands a little higher, but only a few feet higher, and nothing remains to be done but the cutting of proper canal channels, with proper locks, for a distance of about 17 miles, and you reach the Pacific Ocean with your ship. Lake Nicaragua is a deep, placid, clear body of water, with some local islands and beautiful shores, in a healthy country and a climate that is delightful.

Mr. President, I am informed by some of the most experienced navigators in this country that it is worth to a ship the price of the toll upon her tonnage to cross through these lakes of fresh water and get clear of the barnacles and sea grass after a voyage across the Atlantic or across the Pacific, and that there is no such place of refreshment for a ship, as they term it, as is to be found in this great estuary of water.

The climate is delightful, the health is excellent. A number of statistics are before me from officers of the medical staff of the United States who have been there with parties, and who have examined the statistics in respect to these parties and the people who live there, and the health is excellent in Nicaragua. Men can labor as much in Nicaragua as they can labor in any tropical country in the world, and I might say even more than they can upon the plains of Tehuantepec.

But suppose these advantages are about equal, either the Tehuantepec route or the Nicaragua route very far excels Panama in respect to the health of the laborers and persons who are employed in the transmission of commerce, for the Panama route is a sickly region of the world, infected with yellow fever and various other terrible diseases.

Mr. President, we shall not get possession under this act of Congress, perhaps we shall never get possession of Lake Nicaragua and Lake Managua, one the tributary of the other. We may never enjoy the possession of those lakes in that sense in which I should feel very proud and delighted to enjoy so great an advantage for our country, but it should be said for the sake of truth and for the hope of the future, that there is more military power in the possession of Lake Nicaragua by a country that is able to put fleets into it and sail their fleets up or down either coast, the Pacific or the Atlantic, than there is in any location that man can point out on the face of the earth.

With a naval station at Nicaragua in that lake, with that for your base of supplies, you would be standing in the very key and center of this hemisphere and you would reach your arms across the Pacific and Atlantic almost with supreme command. With the power to pass through that lake and that canal to reach our Western coast, we could double our naval strength whenever we chose to do it on either ocean, and instead of being compelled, as now the necessity seems to stare us in the face, of having a great fleet for the Atlantic and perhaps a greater one for the Pacific, we could with one fleet accomplish the purposes of both.

Look at the moral power, at the commercial command, that the people of the United States would exercise over this hemisphere if they had their footing firmly planted in Lake Nicaragua with a ship-canal leading out to either ocean, a short distance to be overcome by steam within a very few hours. There we should find ourselves on the great lines of travel and in command of the highways of commerce; there we should stand as peacemaker and conservator of commerce and the safeguard of navigators among all the powers of this earth, and there the great power of the American Government and people with their magnificent organization and control through our wise and liberal Government would receive its supreme crown of glory.

In no other place is to be found the splendid center of influence from which would flow out to the world the blessings of peace and prosperity, which are the fruit of our self-government and the rightful inheritance of the people of all nations.

No, sir, the place can not be designated on this earth that is so desirable to the Government and the people of the United States as that, and I scarcely can forbear to criticise any timorous policy which prevents us from enjoying as we have a right to enjoy the benefits of that great situation.

No proposition has ever been presented to the American people, outside of the preservation of their own Constitution in their own country, of the magnificence and importance of this. Standing there facing to the south, the republics of South America would feel in our presence and attitude the benign influence of our protection against wrong and injustice from abroad and would look up to us with even double the reverence that they did when, leaving the Spanish monarchy and scarcely understanding the institutions of republican government, they did us the honor to adopt our Constitution almost in its form of words in all of those governments.

They would yield to us in their commercial strength and power a reward the like of which has never been contemplated by the American merchant or the American statesman; and if I could only persuade myself to the belief that the American people would establish a policy which would put these possessions under our control peacefully and with the consent of our sister republics, as God intended that they should be, I would be willing that very moment, be cheerfully willing to sever my connection with public affairs and retire to the humblest sphere, for I would feel that in contributing what little I might be able to do to the progress and the completion of a design as great and as excellent as this I would be doing far more than I had ever hoped I should be able to do in the maturity of my manhood.

There is nothing that so excites the aspirations of my heart, there is nothing that so commends the approval of my judgment, there is nothing to which my hopes turn with such yearning as to the day when the United States shall be welcomed to the occupancy of this grand naval fortress situated in the midst of the seas and in the midst of the continents of this hemisphere.

I wish to read a few extracts from the writings of a man who, in 1849, laid down the philosophy of this question in a not very extended essay—a man for whom, in his grave, I have the most affectionate reverence, for it was my honor to know him personally, and who, now that he is dead, his memory lives green among all the nations of the earth. The seas scarce ever toss their rolling billows to the sky that they do not proclaim the eulogy of Matthew F. Maury, that great writer on the currents of the ocean, that map-maker of the airs which circle above the waves of the sea. He took in hand this subject in 1849, and I wish to bring to the attention of the Senate a very few extracts—I am sorry they will be so brief—from his writings on this question.

Let us take a view of this railroad—

That is the Panama Railroad then being projected.

Let us take a view of this railroad and our position with regard to it in some of those manifold lights in which the wants of commerce and the great interests of the people of the United States present it. And for this purpose I extract from an article which I have recently written on the subject.

Rightly to do this and properly to estimate the effects which are to arise from uniting the two oceans, it is necessary to pass in review the position in respect both to the Old World and the New, of our Mediterranean, which consists of the Gulf of Mexico, with its archipelago, the Caribbean Sea. The geographical position of this sea and its shores, the size of the rivers which flow into it, the climates and soils of their valleys, and the hand with which nature has strewed the elements of commerce among them, all conspire to make it the most useful to the greatest number of men, and, therefore, the most interesting sea in the world. It is situated midway between the two Americas.

Rivers whose headwaters reach back north and south into the very heart of the country flow into it. A line from the delta of the Orinoco to the east end of Cuba is but a thousand miles long; and yet to the west of it lies this magnificent basin of water, locked in by a continent that has on its shores the most fertile valleys of the earth. In the midst of these valleys ships may sail thousands of miles on the largest rivers that bring tribute to the ocean. They contain the elements of dormant wealth, of national power and greatness, which it requires facility of communication with the Pacific to begin to develop, and which, when fully developed, will astonish the world. An era and an epoch in the affairs of nations will date from the opening of this communication. All, and more too, that the Mediterranean is to Europe, Africa, and Asia, this sea is to America and the world.

A sea is important for commerce in proportion to the length of the rivers that empty into it, and to the extent and fertility of the river basins that are drained by it. The quantity and value of the staples that are brought down to market depend upon these. The Red Sea is in a riverless district; few are the people and small the towns along its coast. Its shores are without valleys; not a river empties into it, for there is no basin for it to drain. Commercially speaking, what are its staples in comparison with those of the Mediterranean, which gives outlet to rivers that drain and fertilize basins containing not less than one million and a quarter of square sea miles of fruitful lands? Commercial cities have never existed on the shores of the Red Sea. Commerce loves the sea, but it depends for life and health on the land. It derives the sustenance from the rivers and the basins which they drain, and increases the opulence of nations in proportion to the facilities of intercourse which these nations have with the outlets of such basins.

The river basins drained into the Gulf and Caribbean Sea greatly exceed in extent of area and capacity for production the river basins of the Mediterranean. The countries in Africa, Asia, and Europe which comprise the river basins of the Mediterranean, are, in superficial extent, but little more than one-fourth the size of those which are drained by this sea in our midst. It is the Mediterranean of the New World, and nature has laid it out on a scale for commerce far more grand than its type in the old; that is about 45° of longitude in length by an average of 7° of latitude in breadth. Ours is broader, but not so long; it is, therefore, more compact; ships can sail to and fro across it in much less time, and gather its articles of commerce at much less cost.

The two seas cover each about the same superficial extent; but from one extreme to the other of that of the Old World the route is tortuous and the voyage long. It can not be accomplished without sailing a distance quite equal to that between Europe and America; whereas from the most remote point in the Caribbean Sea to the farthest port in the gulf a straight line may be drawn on the water, and the distance from one extremity to the other of it will be but little more than 2,000 miles.

* * * * * * *

Every one who takes the trouble to examine is struck with the fact that the greatest commercial cities of the world are, and ever have been, those whose merchants have been most advantageously situated with regard to the outlets, natural or artificial, of great river basins and producing regions.

Rightly to perceive how admirably located and arranged for the purposes of commerce are the Gulf and Caribbean Sea, and duly to appreciate the advantages arising therefrom, let us, before comparing the river basins of America with those of Europe and Asia, or before tracing further the effects which the course of the rivers of a country has upon its commerce, take a glance at the geographical position of this our central sea.

Curtained on the east by a chain of fruitful islands, stretching from Trinidad to Cuba, it is on the north and the south and the west land-locked by the continent, which has bent and twisted around this sea so as to fold it within its bottom and hold it midway between the two semi-continents of the New World. In this favored position it receives on one side the mountain streamlets of a sea of islands; on another, all the great rivers of North America; and on the others the intertropical drainage of the entire continent. The Atlantic Ocean circulates through this our Mediterranean. Its office in the economy of the world is most important.

It not only affords an outlet for the great American rivers, but it makes their basins habitable by giving them drainage and by sending far away into the ocean the drift and the overheated waters which the rivers bring down. It also, through its system of cold and warm currents, makes its own shores habitable to man, tempers the climate of Europe, and by its genial warmth makes productive the soil there. The Amazon, rising in the Andes and emptying into the ocean under the line, also finds its way through the magnificent llanos and pampas of the tropics down to the margin of this sea.

* * * * * * *

Let us now return to the comparison as to extent of the river basins of the Old World with those under consideration in the New. According to one of the most remarkable works of the age—Professor Johnson's Physical Atlas—the river basins in the Old World contain, in geographical square miles, stated in round numbers, as follows, namely:

	Square miles.
Of Mediterranean, Europe	1,160,000
Of Nile	520,000
Of Euphrates	196,000
Of Indus	312,000
Of Ganges	432,000
Of Irrawaddy	331,000
Of others of India	173,000
Of those of Western Europe, as Rhine, &c	730,000
Total Mediterranean, India, and West Europe	3,854,000

AREA, IN GEOGRAPHICAL SQUARE MILES, OF RIVER BASINS DRAINED INTO THE GULF OF MEXICO AND CARIBBEAN SEA.

	Square miles.
Basin of Mississippi River	982,000
Basins in Florida and Texas (estimated)	520,000
Basins in Mexico and Central America (estimated)	300,000
Basin of Amazon (including basin of Para)	1,796,000
Basin of Orinoco and all others of Caribbean Sea	700,000
Total Gulf and Caribbean Sea	4,298,000
Total Mediterranean, India, and West Europe	3,854,000

Difference—call it nothing, though it measures an area containing nearly half a million of square miles.

There stands this Southern Mediterranean of ours in contrast with the great deltas washed by the waters of all these lakes, rivers, and seas.

The certainty of its future wealth and power, as demonstrated by this master of philosophic science, animates us with hopes and aspirations that seem to lift us into a new existence.

From this statement we are led to the very remarkable conclusion—and it is an important physico-commercial fact—that the area of all the valleys which are drained by the rivers of Europe which empty into the Atlantic, of all the valleys that are drained by the rivers of Asia which empty into the Indian Ocean, and of all the valleys that are drained by the rivers of Africa and Europe which empty into the Mediterranean, does not cover an extent of territory as great as that included in the valleys drained by the American rivers alone which discharge themselves into our central sea. Never was there such a concentration, upon any sea, of commercial resources. Never was there a sea known with such a back country tributary to it.

The produce which comes down the rivers of Europe has, when it arrives on the shores of the Atlantic, to be transported 15,000 or 20,000 miles to be exchanged for that which comes from the river basins of India. From the mouth of the European rivers discharging into the Atlantic Ocean the voyage to the mouth of the Asiatic rivers which run into the Indian Ocean often occupies two hundred days; consequently it requires a ship more than a year to take on board a cargo from the river basins of Europe, go with it to India, exchange it, and return with the proceeds thereof to the place whence she started, so great the distance and so long the period of time which separate these two fountains of commerce.

One ship, therefore, trading between the American system of river basins may fetch and carry, exchange and bring back in the course of one year as many cargoes as ten ships can in the same time convey between the remote basins of the system in the Old World.

The products of the basin of the Mississippi, when they arrive at the Balize, may in twenty or thirty days be landed on the banks of the Orinoco and the Amazon. Thus in our favored position here in the New World we have, at the distance of a few days' sail, an extent of fruitful basins for commercial intercourse which they of the Old World have to compass sea and land and to sail the world around to reach.

On this continent nature has been prodigal of her bounties. Here upon this central sea she has, with lavish hand, grouped and arranged in juxtaposition all those physical circumstances which make nations truly great. Here she has laid the foundations for a commerce the most magnificent the world ever saw. Here she has brought within the distance of a few days the mouths of her two greatest rivers. Here she has placed in close proximity the natural outlets of her grandest river basins. With unheard-of powers of productions, these valleys range through all the producing latitudes of the earth. They embrace every agricultural climate under the sun; they are capable of all variety of productions which the world besides can afford. On their green bosom rests the throne of the vegetable kingdom. Here commerce, too, in time to come, will hold its court.

The Mississippi comes down from the grain-producing regions of the North, bearing vessels deeply laden with produce; freighted with all varieties of the fruits of the temperate zones, they convey to the sea large cargoes of merchandise, gathered from the products of the field, the forest, and the mine. Hills of iron, mountains and valleys filled with coal, are found on its banks. Its waters are mingled in the Gulf with those of the Amazon and the Orinoco, which run between the tropics. From their basins they are ready at the bidding of civilized man to place on this sea, in all variety and abundance, the products of the torrid zone.

Arrived in the Gulf with these goods, the mariner then finds a river in the sea to speed him on with its favoring currents to prosperous voyages. Through the Gulf Stream the productions of this grand system of river basins will be distributed over the world, passing by, and enriching as they go, Norfolk, Philadelphia, New York, and Boston, all the Atlantic slope of the United States, and all the Pacific slope, too.

In calculating the sources of the national wealth, prosperity, and greatness which are contained for this country in river basins, central sea, mountain ranges, water-courses, and geographical features, the lights of history are of no avail. You may prepare the canvas and make ready the easel, but colors that are bright enough for the features can not be found. The exceeding great resources of our Mediterranean beggars description. We know that other places with the elements of commerce in far more scanty proportions, with facilities less abundant, and obstacles far greater, have grown opulent and obtained renown in the world. While one calls to mind the history of such places, he feels that here is room and scope enough for individual wealth far more dazzling, for national greatness far more imposing, and a renown far more glorious.

From all this one is led to the conclusion that the time is rapidly approaching, if it have not already arrived, when the Atlantic and Pacific must join hands across the Isthmus. I have shown that there is no sea in the world which is possessed of so much importance as this southern sea of ours; that with its succession of harvests there is, from some one or other of its river basins, a crop always on the way to market; that it has for back country a continent at the north and another at the south, and a world both to the east and the west.

I have shown that it is contiguous to the two first, and convenient to them all. The three great outlets of commerce, the delta of the Mississippi, the mouths of the Hudson and the Amazon, are all within 2,000 miles—ten days' sail—of Darien. It is the barrier which separates us from six hundred millions of people—three-fourths of the population of the earth. Break it down, therefore, and this country is placed midway between Europe and Asia; this sea becomes the center of the world and the focus of the world's commerce. Open this as a highway, and you will give vent to commerce, scope to energy, and range to enterprise, which in a few years hence will make gay with steam and canvas parts of the ocean that are now unfrequented and almost unknown. Old channels of trade will be broken up and new ones opened. I greatly desire to see our country the standard-bearer in this great work.

The railroad across the Isthmus of Panama will speedily lead to the construction of a ship-canal between the two oceans, for a railroad can not do the business which commerce will require for it; and by showing to the world how immense this business is, men will come from the four quarters to urge with purse and tongue the construction of a ship-canal.

Owing to the course of the winds, the direction of the currents, and other physical circumstances British merchants are ten days' sail and upward nearer than we are to all the markets of the world, except those of the Caribbean Sea and Gulf of Mexico. They are next door to all the markets of Europe, to Brazil, to Cape Horn, the Cape of Good Hope, and consequently to all ports beyond them they are practically some ten or fifteen days' sail nearer than we are. A vessel from the United States bound for the southern hemisphere first sails nearly an east course until she arrives in the vicinity of the Azores and Canary Islands; she then puts her head south for the first time.

Now, while the American vessel is sailing this route the English vessel that sailed on the same day for the same market has passed those islands and is far on her way. For the reason that the Cape de Verde Islands are some ten or fifteen days nearer to England than to America, England is that much nearer to the southern hemisphere; for vessels generally, whether from the United States or from England, are in the habit of passing by these islands on their way thither. Therefore the Englishman meets the American in all the markets of the world, except those of the Gulf and the Caribbean Sea, with the advantage of ten days and upward.

I have said all that I deem it proper to say on this occasion in respect of this great enterprise, the Nicaraguan Canal. I have said that I favor also the building of a ship-railway canal from the Gulf of Campeachy to the Gulf of Tehuantepec across that isthmus. I am in favor of any and every American enterprise that will concentrate capital and force for the doing of that which is absolutely indispensable under the command of the Almighty, the very Heaven that has poured these blessings upon us.

If we should be, with our capital, our genius, our industry, our courage, our resources of every kind, negligent of the duty of improving the advantages of this great southern Mediterranean of ours, to say nothing of the coast of California, Oregon, and Washington Territory, and the coasts that reach up to Maine along the Atlantic—if we should neglect this great opportunity to do all that we can for the benefit of this great work, I for one should feel that we ought to rest under a very severe condemnation.

It seems that the only possibility now of doing anything is through the instrumentality of corporations to be created by the Government of the United States and the assistance of our enterprising individuals in reaching out to build these great works. Far better would it have been, and much more would I have preferred it, if the Government of the United States in the exercise of its natural right and duty had gone forward and by an agreement with Nicaragua or with Mexico or with Colombia had built this great work.

There is certainly no power in the world that has the natural right to prevent us from entering into some convenient arrangement with the local authority to build any ship-railway or any canal that we desire to build which may be for our advancement, but I consider that the duty might arise even above that. I believe, and I assert, that it does rise above that, that when even the local authority undertakes to build a canal or a ship-railway without first getting the consent of the United States Government and providing for the protection and the welfare of the American people, that government is violating a duty which we can not overlook.

We must look out for this continent and take care of it. It is in a large sense our inheritance, not in a selfish sense, but in the sense of being trustees for the bestowal of the benefactions of a kind Providence upon the people around us throughout the length and breadth of this great hemisphere.

One observation more must be made, and that will close my remarks. The progress of the western hemisphere has none of those incidents of depression and of controversy leading to bloodshed, to rapine, to all manner of human entanglement and conflict which has beset the whole of Asia and nearly all of Europe and as much of Africa as has been civilized. Read the conflicts of those people back through the ages of history, and you will find that 60 or 70 per cent. of them have been provoked sooner or later by their differences in religion; whereas this people, from Greenland to Patagonia, recognize but one religion, and that the Christian religion.

We have here no Mohammedanism, we have no Chinese paganism, we have no African or Egyptian idolatry, but the great broad foundation of a universal concurrence in that grand idea upon which governments are formed and in respect of which they may be always in harmouy. We rest from Greenland to Patagonia fixed in all of our institutions, governmental and social, upon the basis of an acknowledgment of the Christian religion; so that it seems that a door is open to us for unlimited and unobstructed progress which we have but to enter like honest men and follow up the command which God seems to have rested upon us, that we should go forth as a nation and as a people to bless and prosper mankind.

That it appears that there were no reasons other than those of a political nature for the suspension of John A. Childs, who was a very efficient and competent officer, but, inasmuch as no charges have been made in any way affecting his good name and as he does not seek to retain the office, and because no objection has been made to the nomination of George W. Hess, the Committee recommend that the latter's nomination be confirmed.

Mr. GIFFORD. I ask that the resolution be printed in the RECORD.

The resolution is as follows:

Whereas it is reported that the early abandonment of Fort Abraham Lincoln in this Territory is contemplated by the United States Government: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Dakota, That we earnestly protest against any such contemplated action, and do respectfully petition that said fort be maintained and further improved for the following reasons:

Its location at the crossing of the Northern Pacific Railroad over the Missouri River makes it permanently suited for a distributing post for arms and supplies for other posts along the Missouri River and in the country farther west.

Its facilities are the very best for the massing of troops, and for their prompt dispatch, in case of Indian outbreak, riots, or emergency of any kind, to exposed points in every direction.

Its abandonment would necessitate the removal of the bodies of the dead in its cemetery to some other point, many of whom have but recently been brought there from other posts and interred.

Its adequate maintenance is a necessity to the settlers in the adjacent country who are unprotected except by the near presence of United States troops from the depredations of the roving bands of Indians who are continually wandering over the country, or from the horrors of an outbreak of the thousands now massed on the adjoining Sioux Reservation, whose atrocities and massacres are still fresh in the memories of the people, while its abandonment would not only greatly alarm and jeopardize the present scattered settlers and small communities, but would also seriously retard further settlement and development of that section of the country.

Resolved, That we urge upon our Delegate in Congress, Hon. O. S. GIFFORD, to use every effort to secure the object above set forth.

Resolved, That duly certified copies of the foregoing preamble and resolutions be forwarded to Hon. O. S. GIFFORD, the President of the Senate, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, at Washington, to be laid before both Houses of Congress, and ordered printed and referred to appropriate committees.

Mr. HOLMAN also introduced a bill (H. R. 11098) granting a pension to Fletcher S. Dewey; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

ELIZABETH BROWN.

Mr. LAWLER introduced a bill (H. R. 11099) granting a pension to Elizabeth Brown; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

CHARLES G. MINNICK.

Mr. LAWLER also introduced a bill (H. R. 11100) granting a pension to Charles G. Minnick, a soldier of the war of 1812; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

COAST DEFENSES, ETC.

Mr. LAWLER offered the following; which was read and referred to the Committee on Rules:

Whereas on the 13th day of December, 1886, the following preamble and resolution were submitted in the House and referred to the Committee on Appropriations, to wit:

"Whereas the rapidly accumulating surplus in the Treasury, largely in excess of the needs to support the Government and discharge the bonded debt as it is called or may become due, is likely to prove subversive of the commercial interests of the country and detrimental to the welfare of the people in various essentials; and

"Whereas the proper executive officers of the Government represent to the Congress that our coast defenses need to be placed in armament so as to meet the requirements of the advanced arts in modern warfare and afford adequate protection to the large seacoast and lake-board cities, now absolutely exposed to the mercy of a foreign enemy; and

"Whereas, although the personnel of our Navy is composed of officers and sailors of the highest excellence and patriotism, unsurpassed in ability by that of any other nation, yet we have no vessels of war worthy the name or capable of competing with the armed cruisers of third or fourth rate powers; and

"Whereas it is estimated that nearly one million of willing workingmen are now unemployed throughout the country and suffering consequent deprivation of the necessaries of life; and

"Whereas the happiness and welfare of the Republic are largely dependent upon the employment and contentment of the laboring classes: Therefore, be it

"Resolved (as the sense of the House of Representatives of the Forty-ninth Congress of the United States), That a large proportion of the surplus in the Treasury should be expended, through liberal appropriations, for repairing and properly equipping our coast defenses, for construction of war ships worthy the name of an American navy, and for such Federal public works as may be needed in various sections of the country, to the end that these surplus moneys may be distributed among the people as wages for their labor to be employed."

And whereas on the 24th day of January, 1887, the following resolution, accompanied by a letter from Admiral Porter, was submitted to the House and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, to wit:

"Resolved, That the Committee on Naval Affairs be instructed to inquire into and report upon the expediency of immediately appropriating the sum of $50,000,000, to be expended under direction of the Secretary of the Navy, for the construction, equipment, and armament of such new vessels of war as may be deemed necessary by him; such sum to become and remain a permanent appropriation for the specific purpose named, not to be covered back into the Treasury at any time, but to remain available continuously for this purpose until the Congress shall otherwise direct.

"By unanimous consent, a letter from Admiral Porter to Mr. Lawler, in relation to the subject of the resolution, was ordered to be printed with it."

And whereas on the 31st day of January, 1887, the following preambles and resolution were submitted to the House and referred to the Committee on Appropriations, to wit:

"Whereas the belligerent tone of the Canada press and the announcement that Great Britain will shortly dispatch a fleet of war-ships to cruise in the vicinity of our northeastern coast line indicate hostility toward the United States, growing out of our position on the fisheries question; and

"Whereas Admiral Porter has directed special attention of the country to the fact that twenty-seven of our Atlantic, Gulf, and Pacific harbors are absolutely defenseless, eleven of these, to wit, New York, San Francisco, Boston, the lake ports, Hampton Roads, New Orleans, Philadelphia, Washington, Baltimore, Portland, Me., and the Rhode Island ports of Narragansett Bay are in urgent need of immediate defenses; and

"Whereas it is alleged that Great Britain and Canada are in possession of charts and exemplifications of all our harbors and coast defenses: Therefore,

"Resolved, That the President be, and he is hereby, requested as Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy to inform the House of Representatives at an early day what steps, if any, are necessary in his judgment to provide for this emergency."

And whereas no report has been made to the House upon either of said preambles and resolutions from said committees, as is required by clause 1, Rule XXIV of the Rules of the House: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations and Committee on Naval Affairs, be, and are hereby, discharged from the further consideration of said preambles and resolutions.

And whereas due regard for the welfare of the Republic demands that some definite action be taken upon the subject matter contemplated by said resolutions, so that the Congress, if deemed necessary, may take precaution for the public defense under the powers conferred by section 8, Article I of the Constitution of the United States, and in accordance with the prevailing sentiment of the people thereof, as expressed in the public press,

Be it further resolved, That after the call by States for introduction of bills and resolutions shall have this day been fully answered, the House shall immediately thereupon take order for consideration, either in whole or in part, of said preambles and resolutions, and resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for that specific purpose; that two hours be allowed for debate thereupon, unless sooner concluded, and a vote to be taken at once thereafter by the House upon the adoption of any or all of said resolutions as the House may direct.

Mr. RANDALL. As that preamble contains a reflection upon the Committee on Appropriations, I think it proper to say that that committee have considered the subject, and that the original matter is not within the range of the rule to which reference is there made, but is a demand on the President for certain opinions, and it is quite unnecessary to adopt any resolution of that kind, because the Constitution provides that the President shall from time to time give to the Congress information of the state of the Union and recommend to their consideration such measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient.

Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois. On behalf of the Committee on Naval Affairs, I wish to say that the resolution referred to as having been referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs has been considered by that committee and will be reported to the House in due time.

JOHN T. LYNCH.

Mr. BLAND introduced a bill (H. R. 11101) for the relief of John T. Lynch, administrator of David Lynch; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

SIMEON TROW.

Mr. BLAND also introduced a bill (H. R. 11102) for the relief of Simeon Trow; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE NEAR MUSSEL SHOALS CANAL.

Mr. WHEELER introduced a bill (H. R. 11103) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Tennessee River at or near the foot of Mussel Shoals Canal, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

EXTRA COPIES OF PENSION ACT.

Mr. WHEELER also offered the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That the Public Printer be directed to print 15,000 extra copies of the act granting a pension to the surviving officers and enlisted men of the Army and Navy and the widows of such officers and enlisted men for the use of the House.

WILLIAM E. PARKER.

Mr. CRAIN introduced a bill (H. R. 11104) granting a pension to William E. Parker; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

CUTHBERTSON SMALL.

Mr. LITTLE introduced a bill (H. R. 11105) for the relief of Cuthbertson Small; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

RETAIL LICENSE FOR VENDING OLEOMARGARINE.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri, introduced a bill (H. R. 11106) to reduce the retail license charged to venders of oleomargarine and butterine; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

FOURTH COLLECTION DISTRICT OF VIRGINIA.

Mr. DAVIS, under authority heretofore granted, submitted the views of the minority of the Committee on Commerce on the bill (H. R. 11025) to amend an act approved June 15, 1882, changing the boundaries of the fourth collection district of Virginia.

CLAIMS AGAINST THE GOVERNMENT.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I call up the pending motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 2643) being an act supplemental to an act entitled "An act to afford assistance and relief to Congress and the Executive Departments in the investigation of claims and demands against the Government," approved March 3, 1883; and I desire to offer an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] calls up the pending motion to suspend the rules to pass the bill he has indicated. The gentleman states that he proposes to modify the bill. A second has been demanded but not ordered.

Mr. BURROWS. We have a morning hour, do we not?

The SPEAKER. Upon the first and third Mondays of the month.

The Clerk will report the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER].

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Claims have instructed me to move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 2643) being a bill supplemental to an act entitled "An act to afford assistance and relief to Congress and the Executive Departments in the investigation of claims and demands against the Government," approved March 3, 1883, with the following amendments thereto:

Strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SECTION 1. That whenever any bill or petition shall be introduced in either House of Congress providing for or asking the payment of a private claim against the United States, legal or equitable, or for a grant, gift, or bounty to any person, or for relief of any kind, involving the investigation of facts, the House in which such bill or petition is introduced shall, before final action is taken thereon, refer the same to the Court of Claims, which shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1883, entitled 'An act to afford assistance and relief to Congress and the Executive Departments in the investigation of claims and demands against the Government,' and report to such House the facts bearing upon such claim, grant, gift, bounty, or relief, as required therein and by this act.

"SEC. 2. That hereafter all private claims, demands, or applications for any grant, gift, bounty, or for relief of any kind that may be presented to Congress shall be presented by petition only, which shall set forth the facts upon which such claim is based or such relief is sought, and which shall be signed by the claimant or his agent or attorney, and neither House of Congress shall consider or entertain, for any purpose other than that of referring the same to the Court of Claims, or to some judicial tribunal or commission under existing law, any such claim or demand against the United States which involves the investigation of facts, or any bill or petition for any grant, gift, or bounty to any person, or any relief whatever, involving the investigation of facts, until such facts shall have been investigated by such court, judicial tribunal, or commission, and the findings of fact reported to Congress. And it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House, under such rules as each House may prescribe, to transmit the same to the Court of Claims as herein required.

"SEC. 3. That at the adjournment of this Congress all bills and petitions relating to private claims against the United States, legal or equitable, or for any grant, gift, bounty, or relief of any kind to any person, which may be pending in either House of Congress or before any committee of either House, except such as have been reported upon by the Court of Claims, or the accounting officers of the Treasury Department, shall, by the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House, respectively, be referred to said court, together with all papers on file relating thereto, as hereinbefore provided; and all such bills, petitions, claims, and demands shall be investigated by the court, as provided by this act and the act of March 3, 1883. The Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House shall enter in the journals of their respective Houses, and in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, a statement showing what bills, petitions, or claims have been so transferred.

"SEC. 4. Any person having a claim or demand against the United States which is barred by a statute of limitation, or which is not cognizable by any court authorized to hear and determine the same and to render judgment thereon, may file his petition therefor in the Court of Claims, subject to the provisions of this act and the act to which this is an amendment, and have the facts relating thereto judicially ascertained, and report made to Congress as herein required. But nothing in this act shall be construed as committing the United States to the payment of any claim or demand referred to the Court of Claims or instituted under this act, or the act to which this is an amendment, and no judgment shall be entered thereon by the court.

"SEC. 5. That the Court of Claims is required to promptly consider all matters referred and presented to said court, under such rules and regulations as it may adopt, and subject to the provisions of existing law. And on the first day of each regular session of Congress the clerk of the Court of Claims shall transmit to each House of Congress a full and complete statement of the findings of fact in each case investigated, and not theretofore reported, stating what amount, if anything, is due the claimant or claimants; whether the claim or demand is founded upon any act of Congress, or upon any contract, express or implied; the laches or diligence of the claimant or petitioner in presenting the claim or demand against the United States; and such other findings of fact and conclusions of law as may be required by an act of Congress and as the court shall deem material to enable Congress to pass upon such claim, demand, or petition. That until such claim, demand, or petition is finally investigated and reported upon to Congress by the court, as provided by this act, and the act to which this is an amendment, neither House of Congress shall consider the same, by bill or otherwise, in reference to allowing the same.

"SEC. 6. That it shall be the duty of the Attorney-General, or his assistants under his direction, to appear for the defense and protection of the United States in all cases which may be transmitted to the Court of Claims or instituted under this act, or the act to which this is an amendment. And it shall be the duty of the district attorney of the United States to appear for the Government in all cases where depositions are taken in their respective districts, to be used in the Court of Claims, and to cross-examine witnesses, and to protect the interests of the United States.

"SEC. 7. That reports of the Court of Claims to Congress under this act, and the act to which this is an amendment, if not finally acted upon during the session at which they are reported, shall be continued from session to session and from Congress to Congress until the same shall be finally acted upon.

"SEC. 8. In all cases which may be brought before the Court of Claims, or referred to it under this act, or the act to which this is an amendment, the claimant shall pay all costs in such court which may be incurred by him in the investigation of the facts and in procuring the depositions of witnesses. And the court shall enter judgment against the claimant therefor at the instance of the attorney for the United States or any person entitled thereto."

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. A second was demanded on the previous day, and pending the vote by tellers the House adjourned. The gentleman from Illinois now asks unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

Mr. STEELE. We had better have a second.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] demanded the second before, and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE] now renews the demand. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] and the gentleman from Tennessee will act as tellers.

Mr. STEELE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. The bill presented by the gentleman from Illinois on a former day under this order was not the same as that which he now submits. Can it be changed without unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. If a second had been ordered the bill, as the Chair has heretofore ruled, could not be changed; but the gentleman having merely submitted his motion, and no second having been ordered, he this morning states that by direction of the committee he makes certain changes in the bill, which the Chair thinks he has a right to do.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 151, noes 13.

Mr. STEELE. I am willing that a second be considered as ordered, and will not make the point of "no quorum."

The SPEAKER. There is a second; and under the rules thirty minutes are now allowed for debate, fifteen minutes in support of the motion and fifteen minutes against it. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] to control the time in support of the motion and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] to control the time in opposition.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, it is proper I should state that when I demanded a second at the time this proposition was first presented to the House, I did so because in the bill as then submitted certain classes of claims were discriminated against. That objection having been obviated in the amended bill offered this morning, I do not feel it would be right for me to control the time in opposition to the measure.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will then recognize the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] to control the time in opposition to the motion.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, my opposition to this measure is based on our lack of such information as would advise the House in regard to the effect of the bill if enacted into law. If I correctly understand the bill, the 60,000 claims which were considered by the Southern Claims Commission, 10,000 of which were rejected, and of the remaining 50,000 only 7 per cent. allowed, and also the 40,000 claims which were acted upon by the Quartermaster's Department and the auditing officers of the Treasury Department, would, under the operation of this bill, go before the Court of Claims for report upon the facts on which those claims are based. If we could amend this proposition so as to provide that all claims heretofore acted upon and determined by the Southern Claims Commission, and all claims which have been rejected or passed upon under the act known as the 4th of July act shall be excluded from the operation of the bill, then the limitations of existing law as to claims against the Government would not be destroyed. But, if I understand correctly the effect of the bill in its present form, it would practically authorize the revival of every one of those claims which have heretofore been passed upon and rejected or in part paid.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman does not understand the bill.

Mr. RANDALL. I may not understand it; but I have seen so much of this character of legislation in behalf of claims that I want to understand it, and I want the House to understand it. I at least desire to be exempt from all responsibility in this matter if the effect of this measure should be, as I fear it may be, to take money out of the Treasury improperly in the payment of claims which have already been acted upon by a suitable tribunal provided for that purpose. This is all I care to say on the question.

Mr. REED. Has this bill ever been printed?

Mr. SPRINGER. Not in the shape in which it stands now.

Mr. REED. In other words, we are asked to pass a bill which we have not had an opportunity to examine in print.

Mr. SPRINGER. I think I can make this matter so plain to the gentleman from Maine that he will be willing to vote for the bill upon the reading from the Clerk's desk. It is not in any such shape as to surround it with any mystery whatever.

Mr. ROGERS. There is one question I would like to put to the gentleman from Illinois at the outset—whether the court in adjudicating claims under this bill will do anything more than find the facts and certify them to Congress, and whether Congress will not then be entirely free in determining as to the propriety of an appropriation.

Mr. RANDALL. But the bill gives an opportunity for the reopening of claims which have already been adjusted by the Government.

Mr. ROGERS. I was addressing my question to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER], who claims to understand the bill.

Mr. RANDALL. And I was making answer to the remark of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS].

ADDITIONAL COPY OF A BILL.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] will give way for a moment the Chair desires to lay before the House a resolution:

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate be requested to furnish the House with a duplicate engrossed copy of Senate bill 2225, to indemnify certain subjects of the Chinese Empire for losses sustained by the violence of a mob at Rock Springs, in the Territory of Wyoming, in September, 1885, the original having been lost or mislaid.

The SPEAKER. The bill referred to in this resolution is embraced in the class of business fixed for to-morrow under the special order. If there be no objection the resolution will be agreed to; and the Clerk will request from the Senate a copy of the bill designated.

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and adopted.

CLAIMS AGAINST THE GOVERNMENT.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I shall briefly state what is proposed to be done under the provisions of this bill. And in the first place I wish it to be understood that this bill is as broad as the right of petition. For, sir, every citizen of the United States under the Constitution has the right to petition Congress for relief. Now, what is to be done when that petition comes here? Are we to deny everything, or are we to grant everything which is asked at our hands? Or shall we require the petitioner to go before a court of competent jurisdiction and first have the facts judicially ascertained, and then have those facts reported to us for our action? That is what is proposed by this bill, and that is all there is in it, except as to details how it shall be done.

Then follows this provision, applicable to all cases coming here:

That nothing in this act shall be construed as committing the United States to the payment of any claim or demand referred to the Court of Claims or instituted under this act, or the act to which this is an amendment—and no judgment shall be entered thereon by the court.

It is simply putting the Court of Claims where the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar now is, as the first place where the facts shall be considered and adjudicated. So that when we get a report from that Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, or from this Court of Claims, and the facts judicially ascertained, we will then know what we ought to do.

It requires the Attorney-General shall be present by himself or assistant in the Court of Claims to protect the interests of the United States.

Further, it is provided that no depositions shall be taken in the districts of the United States unless the district attorney shall appear in behalf of the United States to cross-examine witnesses, so that no claim shall be examined and passed upon against the United States upon ex parte testimony. The Government of the United States is protected by the district attorney being required to appear and cross-examine witnesses in behalf of the United States.

Mr. BURROWS rose.

Mr. SPRINGER. Wait a moment.

Mr. Speaker, it is required, further, that all of these depositions and all expenses incurred by the claimant shall be at his own cost. So that Congress says to a claimant, prove your case in a judicial way and we will decide whether you are entitled to relief or not.

Mr. BURROWS. What about claims which are barred?

Mr. SPRINGER. All claims barred by the law now are barred so far as entering a judgment but not for a judicial ascertainment of the facts.

Mr. BURROWS. Does not this bill remove the bar?

Mr. SPRINGER. No; this bill does not. To-day a claimant may go to the Court of Claims and have his right for relief here and the case prosecuted to judgment where the law so provides.

Mr. BURROWS. What is the provision about removing the bar which exists under the present law?

Mr. SPRINGER. It removes the statute of limitations as to claims in reference to the finding of facts.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Has the gentleman any objection to an amendment?

Mr. SPRINGER. I have already said, and will again repeat, that this bill, so far as judicial ascertainment of facts is concerned, is as broad as the right of petition. You can not prevent anybody from sending a petition to Congress asking for relief, and then it is for Congress to grant the relief asked for or to deny it. The Bowman act sets forth the provisions in relation to the presentation and preparation of claims.

Mr. BURROWS. Is there any enlargement in this bill of the Bowman act?

Mr. SPRINGER. The Bowman act determines how claims shall be considered.

Mr. ROWELL. Does not this bill open it to a larger adjudication of claims?

Mr. SPRINGER. It does not authorize any final adjudication.

Mr. ROWELL. Does it not allow claims to be again presented?

Mr. SPRINGER. No; it does not except for the ascertainment of the facts. Before we are required to pass upon the merits of a case the claimant is required to prove his case in a court of justice. Nobody can object to that provision. It enables the petitioners who petition Congress for relief to go to the Court of Claims and prove the facts upon which they ask for relief. There is no prejudice to the Government and no advantage gained by the claimant. Unless he proves his case of course he gets no relief. Who will say any American citizen shall be deprived of a forum in which he may show by competent testimony he has a just claim against the Government? That is all I ask for anybody: That if anybody has a claim against the United States, the United States will open a tribunal where the facts may be presented.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Does not this bill allow him to come in twice?

Mr. SPRINGER. Not at all.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Has the gentleman any objection to permitting an amendment excluding the class of claimants referred to by my colleague [Mr. RANDALL]?

Mr. SPRINGER. I have no objection to excluding any one who has already had a hearing of the facts in his case.

Mr. SENEY. Let me ask the gentleman does this reopen the claims already rejected?

Mr. SPRINGER. It will have the effect I have stated only.

Mr. PERKINS. I would like to ask the gentleman if, under the present law, he knows of any instance where the House, or a committee of the House, has accepted the findings of the Court of Claims upon any matter submitted to it?

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not know of one that has been passed without examination.

Mr. PERKINS. Then I would like to ask how Congress is to get relief under the operation of such a bill as this?

Mr. SPRINGER. The claim is to be sent there in order to have a judicial ascertainment of the facts.

Mr. PERKINS. But if the findings of fact are not accepted after they are made, how does Congress get any relief? Now, my observation is that neither the House nor its committees are disposed to accept the findings of the court.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let me ask, in response to the gentleman: Is it easier for the House to determine the merits of a case when the facts have been ascertained only by ex parte evidence? In which way will the interests of the Government be best subserved? If it is easier to determine and to do justice after the judicial ascertainment of the facts, let us have that judicial ascertainment; and I assume that those who are to come after us will be just as jealous of the rights of the Government and as careful guardians of the Treasury as this Congress or its predecessors.

Mr. HEARD. Let me ask the gentleman from Illinois, does this substitute, as proposed, provide that the findings of the Court of Claims shall relate to questions of law as well as questions of fact?

Mr. SPRINGER. The court will take cognizance of the law under which a claim is predicated.

I yield now five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WARNER], a member of the committee.

Mr. STEELE. Before the gentleman yields the floor I would like to ask whether this bill would not send all private pension claims to the Court of Claims, and thereby enable the Government to employ its attorneys against the rights of a claimant, and no provision is made for the employment of counsel for a claimant who is too poor to employ counsel himself?

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, this bill is in substance the same as that reported from the Committee on Claims at the first session of this Congress, with this, I may say, important exception: That bill referred all private and domestic claims, other than war claims, to the Court of Claims for a finding of fact, and they make report to Congress before such claims could be acted upon.

When the bill now under consideration came over from the Senate it was thought best to enlarge that jurisdiction and to refer all claims against the Government, including war claims, which we are daily considering in this House to the obstruction of other business, simply for a finding of fact and to report that finding of fact back to the House. It simply presents this proposition, whether we are dealing fairly with the claimants, and whether we intend to consider their matters in Congress or simply keep on holding the word of promise to the ear while we continually and persistently break it to their hope.

Mr. ROWELL. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. I have but five minutes, and must decline interruptions.

There have been sent by this Congress up to date 4,550 bills to the Committee on War Claims. During the Forty-eighth Congress the whole number so referred amounted to 2,149. The Committee on Claims of the present Congress have had 1,800 bills referred to it, while during the last Congress only 913 were referred to that committee.

I have not time, sir, to follow out this table through all the different Congresses, but it has been continually increasing and growing upon us, until to-day I state here, without fear of successful contradiction, that it is only the favored few that receive any consideration at the hands of Congress.

Mr. PETTIBONE. Or ever will.

Mr. WARNER of Missouri. The man who has a member to press his claim in season and out of season, who can get recognition perchance to have it passed by unanimous consent, can get his claim considered; while the hundreds, the thousands, and tens of thousands who have just claims can get no relief or consideration.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Let me ask the gentleman how many of these claims have been considered?

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. In round numbers 10,000 private bills have been introduced in the Forty-ninth Congress up to this time, and 2,041 have been reported, but only a very small percentage of that number have become laws or ever will become laws.

But let us see a little further, for we might as well look at the question squarely. It becomes alarming as to the time of Congress that is spent in considering these cases. The committees of the House are largely in the dark in arriving at the facts in a given case. But a few weeks since we had an important matter involving an unknown amount; $200,000 was said to be a just amount by one part of the committee, $63,000 said another part of the same committee, and $67,000 reported by another committee. In the absence of a judicial finding of fact, the question as to what amount is just in that case, we were asked to pass on that important case. No member pretended to give, and no member probably knew, the exact facts. Why not, then, refer such claims for judicial ascertainment? Are we afraid to permit claimants to establish the facts of their claims against the Government?

But another matter. In the Forty-seventh Congress the expense of printing bills and reports thereon was $85,438.82. During the Forty-eighth Congress this amounted to $96,336.59, while up to the 28th day of January of this Congress the amount paid for printing bills and the reports thereon had run up to the enormous sum of $159,674.55. Of this amount, Mr. Speaker, the Public Printer estimates that at least two-thirds is chargeable to private bills and reports thereon. The question is then presented, does this House, in the consideration of these bills, propose to undertake the ascertainment of the facts themselves, where, as in the McMinnville case that went out to the country a few days ago, it is a disputed question as to what were the facts in that case, and it will go down to history as a disputed question in just as much doubt as that other question, "who struck Billy Patterson." The question presented to us is, are we doing that justice to the citizens of this Government that the Government of England and every other great government does as a matter of justice to its citizens?

The other great nations go much further than is asked by this bill. In the Brown case (6th Court of Claims Report, 192), Nott, justice, in delivering the opinion of the court, uses this language:

"That the legal redress given to a citizen of the United States against the United States is less than he can have against almost any government in Christendom. The laws of other nations have been produced and proved in this court, and the mortifying fact is judicially established that the government of the United States holds itself of nearly all governments the least amenable to the laws. * * * Of all the Governments of Europe, it is believed that Russia alone does not hold the state amenable in matters of property to the law. Of all the countries whose laws have been examined in this court, Spain only resembles the United States in fettering the judicial proceedings of her courts by restricting and leaving the execution of their decrees dependent upon the legislative will. * * * First in the high civilization that protects the individual and assures his rights stands the great Empire of the German States."

In England, notwithstanding the principle underlying the English constitution that the king can do no wrong, the citizen who has a claim against the government is furnished with a mode of obtaining redress. Mr. Justice Davis, in the O'Keefe case (11 Wall., 183), says:

"The law allows him (the citizen) by petition to inform the king of the nature of his grievance, and as the law presumes that to know of an injury and to redress it are inseparable in the royal breast, it then issues, as of course, in the king's own name, his orders to his judges to do justice to the party aggrieved.

"This valuable privilege, secured to the subject in the time of Edward I, is now crystalized in the common law of England. As the prayer of the petition is grantable ex debito justitiæ, it is called a petition of right, and is a judicial proceeding to be tried like suits between subject and subject. It does not exist by virtue of any statute, nor does the recent legislation in England concerning it do more than to regulate the manner of its exercise, and to confer on the petitioner the privilege, not before granted, of instituting his proceeding in any one of the superior courts of common law or equity in Westminster."

This question received consideration of the Committee on Claims in the Thirtieth Congress. Hon. John A. Rockwell, a distinguished member of that committee, in an elaborate report, uses this language:

"The chairman of the committee has obtained from the ministers of several of the leading governments of Europe statements as to the course pursued in claims against the governments of Russia, Austria, and the smaller German States, and in Holland and in other nations. In relation to all mere matters of contract and ordinary trespasses the government is heard in the ordinary tribunals of the country, which are governed precisely by the same rules of law in these cases as between individuals. These governments, although far behind us in civil freedom and constitutional liberty, never shirk from the full and fair investigation of these claims, and always submit to an adverse decision by the courts. It has been left to our own Government to deny to the citizen who has a demand against it the power to try the question before its own courts, and yet has furnished no adequate tribunal for the purpose." (Report No. 498, vol. 3, R. of Com., 1st sess. 48th Cong.)

Had I the time instance after instance could be given where members have been called to vote upon claims involving thousands of dollars proved up, if at all, by ex parte affidavits. Are we unwilling to exchange this unsatisfactory and I might say vicious method of a judicial finding of fact in each case? Let me in conclusion call the attention of the House to a sample of ex parte investigation as given by Justice Nott in a foot-note to the case of Brown vs. United States, on page 191, 6 Court of Claims Reports.

The learned justice says:

Thus the first case in the first volume of the reports of this court (Gordon's case, 1 C. Cls. R. page 1) discloses these extraordinary facts: There was allowed the claimant for property destroyed by United States troops $8,873, then $100 for an error of calculation in the first award; then $8,997.94 for interest; then $10,004.89 more for interest; then $39,217.50 for property previously found not to have been destroyed by United States troops; and finally $66,519.85 in a revision of the previous awards.

The Forty-first Congress revived this practice in the celebrated Chorpenning case, where the Postmaster-General in an ex parte arbitration on ex parte testimony awarded the claimant $425,000. It is not generally known that the same claim had been brought by the claimant previously before the Court of Claims, where he demanded but $176,576, and where the suit was dismissed.

Comment is unnecessary.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to occupy a moment, after which I will yield to any gentleman who desires the floor.

I confess to be sensitive touching what are known as war claims and their passage through this House. Here we have a proposition not printed, and changed since it was formerly before this House for consideration. Is it unnatural that one who has the responsibility of a vote on a measure of this character, so far-reaching, should rise to secure information as to its effect? As I understand it, it does destroy the limitations now in force. It does give a new hearing to many thousands of claims that have been passed upon and rejected by a tribunal authorized by law to have made these investigations. It does open again claims which have been rejected by the proper accounting officers of this Government. And until such claims are excluded from the operation of this proposition, I can not for a moment conscientiously vote for it.

I originally rose rather to suggest to the gentleman having charge of this measure that he should insert a clause that should make it plain; that the quartermaster's claims that have been passed upon shall not be included in the operation of this law; and that claims that have been passed upon by the Southern Claims Commission and rejected, or in part adjudicated by that tribunal—and the average payment, as I remember, of those 50,000 claims was 7 per cent.—shall be excluded from the operation of this measure. I want a clause inserted in this bill which will have that effect, because I believe those claims have been adjudicated by the Government in a manner the claimants were willing to accept.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. RANDALL. Yes, sir.

Mr. SPRINGER. I have no objection whatever to the insertion of such a clause. While I believe under the provisions of this act the court would report that such cases were excluded, having been already adjudicated, I ask unanimous consent to insert a clause of the nature indicated.

Mr. RANDALL. As I understood the reading of the bill, it does not give the court any discretion to exclude rejected claims. It provides that the court should entertain those claims, take testimony pro and con, and report them to this House, the effect of which is to renew those claims after the Government has adjudicated them. If the gentleman will amend his bill in these respects he will take away most of the objection which has been raised against it.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask unanimous consent to make that amendment.

Mr. McCOMAS. I object.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask unanimous consent to have read for the information of the House the Bowman act, which is not repealed by this bill except in one clause of it.

Mr. RANDALL. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG].

Mr. STEELE. I think some time should be allowed to this side of the House.

Mr. RANDALL. I did not understand that gentleman there wanted it. I went over and asked the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED], and he said he did not know if time would be wanted there or not. How much time have I?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has seven minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. RANDALL. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG].

Mr. BRAGG. I hope this bill will not pass. It is time that something seeking to become a law of this kind was dead. If we have not been able to kill anything of the kind we have been struggling year after year to kill what are known as war claims growing out of the depredations of troops during the war. They would have died before now if certain gentlemen were not so particularly anxious all the time to have something to say about them.

We had a court, a commission of claims, and gave time for the presentation of claims. That court was extended. It has expired with limitations passed upon all those claims. And yet gentlemen are not content, although the courts have been out of existence now for nearly six years. These claims are being continually revived. And every now and then we have some little paltry bill which is introduced and passed which repeals the statute of limitations on some one case and opens the door to others. So that we drive this pack of hounds—I mean the claim agents who are pressing this bill—away from our door on the principle that a man always drives away a dog proper, by feeding them every time. They do not always get as much as they want. But whenever you give them a little you encourage them to come back for more.

That is what we are doing with this class of claims. We had a bill here the other day which was sought to be attached to the bill reported from the Department authorizing the payment of $5 an acre for chincapin lands on the Maryland Heights. It was proposed to pay those claimants damages done by troops as they came to and fro down the Shenandoah valley into the battle-fields of Pennsylvania. The moment you confer this power on the court the court takes the testimony, and there is no man who has had experience but knows the claimant who is mean enough to come up from the South and pretends he was loyal can furnish witnesses to prove it.

Mr. RANDALL. I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE].

Mr. STEELE. I yield to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED. I have entire sympathy with the purposes of this bill, but I should like to know if it accomplishes what almost everybody thinks it may accomplish. This bill has never been printed. There has been no opportunity of examining it, and I must say I think it unfortunate that it should be brought up in this fashion.

I should like to ask the chairman of the committee how he reconciles the first section with the second. The first section declares that nothing shall be passed upon until it has been referred by the action of Congress to the Court of Claims. The first section refers to a bill. The second section says no claim shall be presented except by petition, and that they shall be referred by the officials, the Clerk of the House and the Secretary of the Senate, under the rules of the Houses, without action by Congress or without action of the House.

In other words, one section proposes a legislative act, and the other section proposes a routine act for the same transaction.

Mr. SPRINGER. The first section requires that no such bill shall be considered by the House for any purpose except for reference, and the second section provides that hereafter claims shall be presented by petition only, and that the Clerk of the House and the Secretary of the Senate, under such rules as each House may prescribe, shall transmit them to the Court of Claims. That duty is merely ministerial.

Mr. REED. But the first section provides for bills.

Mr. SPRINGER. There is no way of preventing a gentleman from introducing a bill of this kind. All he has to do is to say when he introduces the bill that it does not apply to this class of cases, but after it has been referred to the committee they may determine that it does apply to such a case, and then it will be sent back and transmitted to the Court of Claims.

Mr. REED. But if a gentleman introduces a bill under a claim of right, who is to decide that no action is to be taken on it except by reference?

Mr. SPRINGER. The committee to whom it is referred are to decide that.

Mr. REED. And that is to govern in spite of a decision of the House to the contrary?

Mr. SPRINGER. The House must of course be the judge of whether the bill comes under the rule or not.

Mr. REED. In other words, these matters will still be presented, not in the form of petitions, but in the form of bills, and the House will be required to pass upon them in each case the same as before.

Mr. SPRINGER. Our rule now requires that measures relating to rivers and harbors shall be presented through the petition-box, but nevertheless members frequently introduce them in the ordinary way. You can not anticipate the contents of a bill which any gentleman may introduce.

Mr. REED. Well, Mr. Speaker, it is precisely because nobody can understand what this bill means that I regret that it is brought up in this fashion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] has one minute remaining.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask unanimous consent now, Mr. Speaker, to have the Bowman act, to which this is supplemental, read. The reading will occupy more than a minute, but I hope that every gentlemen will be willing to have it completed.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, if the reading can not be completed in the remaining minute, I am willing, so far as I am concerned, to consent to any additional time that is needed for the reading, but we do not want reading and debate both.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER]?

There was no objection.

Mr. SPRINGER. Now, Mr. Speaker, one word more——

Mr. RANDALL. Oh, no.

Mr. SPRINGER. I merely desire to say, Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] objects.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then, Mr. Speaker, I will ask to have the Bowman act read. I did not think the gentleman from Pennsylvania would be so exacting.

Mr. RANDALL. I have not been exacting, because I have consented to allow all the time that is required for the reading of the act which the gentleman wishes to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c. [section 1], That whenever a claim or matter is pending before any committee of the Senate or House of Representatives, or before either House of Congress, which involves the investigation and determination of facts, the committee or House may cause the same, with the vouchers, papers, proofs, and documents pertaining thereto, to be transmitted to the Court of Claims of the United States, and the same shall there be proceeded in under such rules as the court may adopt.

When the facts shall have been found, the court shall not enter judgment thereon, but shall report the same to the committee or to the House by which the case was transmitted for its consideration.

SEC. 2. That when a claim or matter is pending in any of the Executive Departments which may involve controverted questions of fact or law, the head of such Department may transmit the same, with the vouchers, papers, proofs, and documents pertaining thereto, to said court, and the same shall be there proceeded in under such rules as the court may adopt.

When the facts and conclusions of law shall have been found, the court shall not enter judgment thereon, but shall report its findings and opinions to the Department by which it was transmitted for its guidance and action.

SEC. 3. The jurisdiction of said court shall not extend to or include any claim against the United States growing out of the destruction or damage to property by the Army or Navy during the war for the suppression of the rebellion, or for the use and occupation of real estate by any part of the military or naval forces of the United States in the operations of said forces during the said war at the seat of war;

Nor shall the said court have jurisdiction of any claim against the United States which is now barred by virtue of the provisions of any law of the United States.

SEC. 4. In any case of a claim for supplies or stores taken by or furnished to any part of military or naval forces of the United States for their use during the late war for the suppression of the rebellion, the petition shall aver that the person who furnished such supplies or stores, or from whom such supplies or stores were taken, did not give any aid or comfort to said rebellion, but was throughout that war loyal to the Government of the United States, and the fact of such loyalty shall be a jurisdictional fact.

And unless the said court shall, on a preliminary inquiry, find that the person who furnished such supplies or stores, or from whom the same were taken as aforesaid, was loyal to the Government of the United States throughout said war, the court shall not have jurisdiction of such cause, and the same shall, without further proceedings, be dismissed.

SEC. 5. That the Attorney-General, or his assistants, under his direction, shall appear for the defense and protection of the interests of the United States in all cases which may be transmitted to the Court of Claims under this act, with the same power to interpose counter-claims, offsets, defenses for fraud practiced or attempted to be practiced by claimants, and other defenses, in like manner as he is now required to defend the United States in said court.

SEC. 6. That in the trial of such cases no person shall be excluded as a witness because he or she is a party to or interested in the same.

SEC. 7. That reports of the Court of Claims to Congress under this act, if not finally acted upon during the session at which they are reported, shall be continued from session to session and from Congress to Congress until the same shall be finally acted upon.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] to suspend the rules and pass the pending bill.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the chairman of the Committee on Claims [Mr. SPRINGER] whether he should not ask unanimous consent of the House to set apart a day for the consideration of this bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. I am willing to do that.

Mr. REED. Suppose you do it, then. I think everybody will agree to that.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will ask unanimous consent that the vote be taken upon this bill to-morrow morning after the reading of the Journal. In the mean time gentlemen will have an opportunity to examine the bill.

Mr. REED. Oh, no. Let us have a day for discussion.

Mr. RANDALL. That can be fixed through the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that to-morrow, after the reading of the Journal, is set apart for the consideration of bills reported from the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let it be next Friday then; that is private-bill day.

Mr. REED. Do not propose Friday, because you will meet objections.

Mr. BRUMM. I object to Friday.

Mr. SPRINGER. I see that many gentlemen are not prepared to vote upon this measure, and, if they are willing, I will consent that the matter be referred to the Committee on Rules, with the understanding that that committee will give us a day for the consideration of this bill.

Several MEMBERS. That is right.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then, with the understanding that I shall have leave to introduce a resolution to that effect, I now ask permission to withdraw the bill.

Several MEMBERS. That is right.

Mr. STORM. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. If that is done will it require a majority or a two-thirds vote to pass the bill?

The SPEAKER. A majority.

Mr. STORM. Then I object.

Mr. SPRINGER. That will not prevent the proposition being submitted under the rules afterward. I hope my friend will not object.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Let us pass the bill and have it amended in the Senate.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will guarantee that all necessary amendments will be made in the Senate.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman has no right to make any guarantee for the Senate.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. SPRINGER to suspend the rules, there were—ayes 76, nays 75; two-thirds not voting in the affirmative.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope we shall not consume time by taking the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, only six voting in favor thereof.

So the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill was not agreed to.

JUDICIAL DISTRICTS IN MISSOURI.

Mr. BURNES. I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill which I send to the desk, being a substitute for House bill 2929.

The SPEAKER. The bill which the gentleman moves to pass under suspension of the rules has heretofore been read in the hearing of the House. Is the reading again demanded?

Mr. BLAND. I ask to have it read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will first read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 2929) to amend the act dividing the State of Missouri into two judicial districts and to divide the eastern and western districts thereof into divisions, establish district and circuit courts of the United States therein, and provide for times and places for holding such courts, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The substitute will now be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That the city of Saint Louis and the following-named counties in the State of Missouri shall constitute the eastern judicial district of Missouri, to wit: Saint Louis, Franklin, Gasconade, Jefferson, Crawford, Washington, Saint François, Saint Genevieve, Dent, Iron, Madison, Perry, Bollinger, Cape Girardeau, Shannon, Reynolds, Wayne, Scott, Carter, Oregon, Ripley, Butler, Stoddard, New Madrid, Mississippi, Dunklin, Pemiscot, Montgomery, Lincoln, Warren, Saint Charles, Macon, Adair, Audrain, Clarke, Knox, Lewis, Marion, Monroe, Pike, Ralls, Schuyler, Scotland, Shelby, and Randolph. And all the other counties in the State of Missouri shall constitute the western judicial district of Missouri.

SEC. 2. That the eastern judicial district of Missouri is hereby divided into two divisions, which shall be known, respectively, as the northern and eastern divisions of said eastern district. The city of Saint Louis and the counties of Saint Louis, Franklin, Gasconade, Jefferson, Crawford, Washington, Saint François, Saint Genevieve, Dent, Iron, Madison, Perry, Bollinger, Cape Girardeau, Shannon, Reynolds, Wayne, Scott, Carter, Oregon, Ripley, Butler, Stoddard, New Madrid, Mississippi, Dunklin, Pemiscot, Montgomery, Lincoln, Warren, and Saint Charles shall constitute the eastern division of said district, the courts for which are now established and held and shall be continued at the city of Saint Louis. The remaining counties within the eastern district shall constitute the northern division of said district, and the courts therefor shall be held at the city of Hannibal, and shall be styled the district court (or the circuit court, as the case may be) of the United States for the northern division of the eastern district of Missouri. The western judicial district of Missouri shall be divided into four divisions, to be known as the Saint Joseph, the western, the central, and the southern divisions. The counties of Clay, Ray, Carroll, Chariton, Sullivan, Jackson, La Fayette, Saline, Cass, Johnson, Bates, Henry, Vernon, Putnam, Caldwell, Livingston, Grundy, Mercer, Linn, Barton, Jasper, and Saint Clair shall constitute the western division, the courts, circuit and district, for which shall be continued at the city of Kansas. The counties of Atchison, Nodaway, Holt, Andrew, Buchanan, Platte, Clinton, Harrison, Daviess, De Kalb, Gentry, and Worth, shall constitute the Saint Joseph division, and the courts therefor shall be held at the city of Saint Joseph and shall be styled the district court (or the circuit court, as the case may be) of the United States for the Saint Joseph division of the western district of Missouri. The counties of Cedar, Polk, Dallas, Laclede, Pulaski, Dade, Greene, Webster, Wright, Texas, Lawrence, Christian, Douglas, Howell, Newton, Barry, McDonald, Stone, Taney, and Ozark shall constitute the southern division of said western district, the courts for which shall be held at the city of Springfield, and they shall be styled the district court of the United States for the southern division of the western district of Missouri. The remaining counties within the said western district shall constitute the central division of said district, and the courts, circuit and district, therefor shall be continued and held at Jefferson City.

SEC. 3. That there shall be, and there are hereby, established a district and circuit court of the United States in each of the several divisions of the said eastern and western districts herein created, except the southern division of the western district, in which a district court shall be and is hereby created. That in each division there shall be held two terms of the district and circuit courts in each and every year except said southern division of the western district, in which there shall be held two terms of the district court in each and every year. The times of holding said terms of court in the city of St. Louis, the city of Kansas, and the city of Jefferson shall be held at the times now established by law, and in the other divisions herein named the times of holding said terms of court shall be fixed without delay by the judge of the district court of the proper district That the counties of Cedar, Polk, Green, Dade, Lawrence, Newton, McDonald, Barry, and Stone, of the southern division of the western district aforesaid, be, and they are hereby, attached to the western division of the western district for circuit court purposes, and that all other counties in said southern division of the western district be, and they are hereby, attached to the eastern division of the western district for circuit court purposes. The district judges for the eastern and western districts of Missouri, each in the divisions of his proper district, and the circuit judges of the United States for the eighth judicial circuit, are hereby required to hold the courts aforesaid. Juries shall be summoned for the courts hereby created as now provided by law for the summoning of juries in the said districts.

SEC. 4. That hereafter all suits to be brought in the courts of the United States in Missouri, not of a local nature, shall be brought in the division having jurisdiction over the county where the defendants, or either of them, reside or may be found; but if there be more than one defendant, and a part of them reside in different divisions or districts of said State, the plaintiff may sue in either division of either district where one of such defendants resides, and send duplicate writs to the other division or district directed to the marshal of said district, on which said writs shall be indorsed by the plaintiff or his attorney, that the same is a duplicate of the original writ sued out of the court of the proper division and district. Any cause may, by the written consent of both parties or their attorneys of record, be transferred to the court of either division or district without regard to the residence of the defendants, and whether such cause be now pending or be instituted hereafter. All civil causes now pending in any of the courts in said eastern or western district, or any division thereof, against parties residing in some other division hereby created, may remain and be finally disposed of in the court in which they are now pending, respectively, unless the defendants therein shall desire to have the same transferred to the appropriate court of the division in which they reside, in which last event such transfer shall be applied for to the court of the division in which the cause is pending; and when a cause shall be ordered to be transferred, as above provided, to a court in any other division it shall be the duty of the clerk of the court from which the transfer is made to carefully transmit to the clerk of the court to which the transfer is made the entire file of papers of the cause, and all documents and deposits in his court pertaining thereto, together with a certified transcript of the record of all orders; interlocutory decrees, or other entries in the cause; and he shall also certify under seal of the court that the papers sent are all which are on file in said court belonging to the cause, for the performance of which duties said clerk so transmitting and certifying shall receive the same fees as now allowed by law for similar services, to be taxed in the bill of costs and regularly collected with the other costs of the cause; and such transcript, when so certified and received, shall thenceforth constitute a part of the record of the cause in the court to which the transfer shall be made.

SEC. 5. That there shall be appointed a clerk for each of said courts at Hannibal, Saint Joseph, City of Kansas, and Springfield, and each clerk shall be a resident of the division in which the court of which he is clerk is held; he shall keep an office, and the records, files, and documents pertaining to the court of his division, and he shall discharge all the duties and receive the fees required or allowed by law. And the marshals and the district attorneys for the said eastern and western judicial districts shall be the marshal and attorney respectively for the divisions for their respective district, and shall be allowed the same fees and be subject to the same duties and liabilities as may be provided by law; that process issuing out of the courts of either division of said districts shall be directed to the marshal of the district in which the division is located, and may be executed by him or his deputies upon the party or parties against whom issued wherever found within his district; and the marshal of each district shall keep an office and at least one general deputy residing at the place of holding courts in each division, excepting the division in which he may himself reside.

SEC. 6. That all causes and proceedings in law, equity, or bankruptcy now pending in any district or circuit court of the United States in the State of Missouri, where all the defendants (or plaintiffs, where the jurisdiction is derived from the residence of the plaintiffs) shall reside in either of the divisions in which courts are hereby established, shall be transferred to the court of the division in which the defendants (or plaintiffs, where the jurisdiction is derived from their residence) reside; and the transfer may be made in vacation or in term time. If made in vacation, an affidavit of all the parties defendant that they are resident in said division shall be filed, and ten days' notice of the purpose and time of hearing of said motion shall be given the opposite party or his attorney of record; but if made in term time, then on motion and affidavit only. And the said circuit and district courts for said divisions shall have the same powers and jurisdiction, with the same right to parties to prosecute appeals and writs of error thereupon, as now pertain to the district and circuit courts for the said eastern and western judicial districts. All prosecutions for crimes and offenses, now pending in any of the courts of said eastern and western districts, or any division thereof, shall be terminated by final adjudication therein, and all such prosecution hereafter commenced shall be commenced and prosecuted in the division where the offenses were committed.

SEC. 7. That before the judge shall fix the terms of courts at Saint Joseph he shall have satisfactory evidence that the county court of Buchanan County has provided and set apart for the use of said courts a court-room, clerk's office, marshal's office, and attorney's office, free of expense to the United States for rent therefor, to be used and occupied until the completion of the public building belonging to the United States Government now in process of construction at said city of Saint Joseph, at which time the courts shall be held in said offices established in said public building; and before the judge shall fix the terms of courts at Hannibal he shall have satisfactory evidence that the county court of Marion County has provided and set apart for the use of said courts a court-room, clerk's office, marshal's office, and attorney's office, free of expense to the United States for rent thereof, to be used and occupied until the completion of the public building belonging to the United States Government now in process of construction at said city of Hannibal, at which time the courts shall be held and said offices established in said public building; and before the court or judge shall fix the terms of said court at Springfield he shall have satisfactory evidence that the county court of Greene County has provided and set apart for the use of said court a court-room, clerk's office, marshal's office, and attorney's office, free of expense to the United States for rent therefor.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded on the motion to suspend the rules?

Mr. BLAND. To save time, I ask that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. A second will be considered as ordered if there be no objection. The Chair hears none. There are now thirty minutes for debate—fifteen minutes in favor of the motion, and fifteen against it. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] to control the time in support of the motion, and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] to control the time in opposition.

Mr. BURNES. Mr. Speaker, in the State of Missouri there are at present three United States courts—one at Saint Louis, one at Jefferson City, and one at Kansas City. These three courts are on a line through the center of the State—one upon the eastern border, another upon the western border, and another in the center. That great State, embracing more than 70,000 square miles, lies to the right and the left of these courts. In the southwestern portion of the State there is no United States court; in the northeastern portion there is none; in the northwestern portion there is none. We, in support of the bill, think it best for the judges to go to the people at Saint Joseph, Hannibal, and Springfield to perform their judicial labors rather than that the people shall be dragged in many instances 200 miles for the purpose of paying obeisance to the judges, who in spite of their pretenses are servants and not masters of the people. This bill meets the approbation, I believe, of a large majority of the delegation from Missouri, and has also the sanction of the Judiciary Committee. We think that we are asking nothing unreasonable or unusual when we call upon our friends to sustain us in our wish to pass this bill.

Asking only for equality of right and common justice, let me make a comparison: The State of Iowa on the north of us has six United States courts. The State of Ohio, a much smaller State, is divided, I believe, so that there are now several divisions of the United States courts in the two districts of that State.

Mr. SENEY. Six.

Mr. BURNES. I thank my friend from Ohio. We ask for but six in the State of Missouri; no more than Iowa, no more than Ohio, and I believe but little more, if any, than in the adjoining State of Kansas. I see nothing unreasonable in this proposition. It is much more convenient and cheaper for the judges to go to the people than for the people to go to the judges. Besides, their visits to their masters may save them from supercilliousness and prejudice in their conduct. We ask no extraordinary appropriation. The bill does not impose any additional burdens upon the Treasury nor increase the public expenditure; it does not create any additional judgship, but requires those in office to serve the people by going out of their slippers and gowns upon the public highways to be seen. I trust members of the House will agree to give Missouri these ordinary court facilities which are enjoyed by so many of the people of so many of Missouri's sister States. I will reserve the residue of my time.

Mr. CLARDY. I wish to ask my colleague whether the substitute just read changes at all the division of the eastern judicial district, as stated in the original bill.

Mr. BURNES. No, sir; the eastern district remains as in the original bill. The substitute divides the counties in the western district a little differently with regard to the different divisions.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Does it leave the eastern district unchanged?

Mr. BURNES. Practically so.

Mr. HEARD. I wish to ask my colleague a question. The original bill affected the status of only two counties embraced in my district—Polk and Dallas. I ask my colleague whether the substitute proposes to affect any other counties in my district.

Mr. HATCH. It does not.

Mr. BURNES. I think it does not.

Mr. HATCH. It does not.

Mr. HEARD. Then I desire to say that I shall vote for the bill. There are twelve counties in my Congressional district, one of which is now in the western judicial district of Missouri, the remaining eleven counties being in what is now the central district. This bill proposes to change two of those eleven counties lying on the southern border of my district, attaching them to the Springfield court. I have had no remonstrance from any of the people of my district against this change, while I have had petitions in favor of the proposition from the two counties sought to be affected by it. I shall therefore vote for the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] has eleven minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. BLAND. I desire to have read the memorial to the Congress of the United States, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

This memorial of the Bar Association of Jefferson City, Mo., to the Congress of the United States, respectfully represents:

That the bill now pending for the establishment of additional Federal judicial districts in the State of Missouri (H. R. 2929) ought not to become a law for the following reasons:

1. Because there is no necessity for the creation of any new judicial districts in Missouri.

2. Because there is not, has not been for many years past, and can not be for many years to come, any amount of legal business in the Federal courts sufficient to justify the creation of new districts in this State.

3. Because the creation of such new districts would necessitate great additional expenses by requiring the renting of several additional court rooms and clerk's offices and officers attendant upon the court, holding eight additional terms of court each year in the district, and also large additional jury fees and additional expenses for light, fuel, &c.

4. Because the additional expenses imposed upon the district judge in traveling to so many points and remaining at each in order to go through the empty form of holding courts, would seriously diminish the salary, of which many are now complaining as insufficient.

5. Because the reports of the clerks of the circuit and district courts, made to this association, show the following facts:

That the total number of cases brought to the circuit court for the eastern division of the western district of Missouri for the past seven years, ending February 6, 1888, is 709, of which 488 were for the collection of county and township bonds and coupons, a class of litigation which is practically at an end, for the reason that compromises have been effected with most of the counties, leaving 221 cases of a miscellaneous character for the seven years, or about an average of 31 cases a year; that the total number of cases of all grades of offenses, brought to the district court for the eastern division of the western district of Missouri for the past four years is 422, or an average of about 105 a year; that the total number of days the district court was in session at its stated terms in the eastern division of the western district of Missouri for the past four years is 92, or an average of 23 days a year.

The foregoing being the number of cases brought to and the amount of business transacted in the circuit and district courts for the eastern division of the western district of Missouri, while composed of forty-three counties, as it now is, what necessity, we respectfully ask, can there be for establishing additional courts in the same territory, as proposed by H. R. 2929, introduced by Mr. HATCH?

The foregoing data is furnished from the records of said courts by the clerks thereof.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

By order of the Jefferson City Bar Association.

A. M. HOUGH, President.

J. C. FISHER, Secretary.

The data herein set forth is correct as appears from the records in this office.

Attest:

H. C. GEISBERG, Clerk.

Mr. BLAND. That is the information I find given in that memorial by the clerk of the circuit and district courts of Jefferson City. It shows the facts to be that the total number of cases brought to the circuit court for the eastern division of the western district of Missouri for the past seven years, ending February 6, 1886, is 709, of which 488 were for the collection of county and township bonds and coupons, a class of litigation which is practically at an end, for the reason that compromises have been effected with most of the counties, leaving 221 cases of a miscellaneous character for the seven years, or about an average of 31 cases a year; that the total number of cases of all grades of offenses brought to the district court for the eastern division of the western district of Missouri for the past four years is 422, or an average of about 105 a year; that the total number of days the district court was in session at its stated terms in the eastern division of the western district of Missouri for the past four years is 92, or an average of 23 days a year. This is the exact condition of facts in this case. Every member of the Missouri delegation knows that the case referred to of county and township bonds are out of court to-day. Then what is the necessity except to gratify the ambition of a few aspiring towns and the gentlemen who represent those cities to have court-houses and circuit courts held all over that State. For one, Mr. Speaker, I think it is time for this House and this Congress to call a halt to this character of legislation.

A short time ago, Mr. Speaker, we passed a bill having for its object the curtailing of the jurisdiction of the Federal courts, and that is the demand of the people everywhere except on the part of corporations and monopolies, which ask Congress to extend their jurisdiction and to multiply courts for their own convenience.

It is true this bill does not extend the jurisdiction of a Federal court, but it does enlist new communities and new advocates to maintain their jurisdiction, for every city and every town and every neighborhood that is favored or shall be favored by the location of these courts within their limits will become warm supporters of maintaining their continuance and increasing their jurisdiction instead of diminishing it. So that we are constantly passing bills here for the encouragement of the Federal judiciary in matters over which the States ought to have exclusive jurisdiction. What we ought to do is give these matters now in the Federal courts and over which the Federal courts assume jurisdiction back to the State courts and to the people of the States to be tried in their own counties and local communities and by their own juries.

I fear my friend from the Hannibal district and my colleagues from the Springfield and Saint Joe districts, all thriving and ambitious towns, instead of demanding legislation to reduce and curtail the jurisdiction of those Federal courts, trying to have these courts established in their districts, and when they have accomplished the establishment of these Federal courts in their midst, it may be they will then begin to demand business for these courts in order to have some excuse for continuing them, and that they may be a benefit to those communities. Instead of being strong advocates for the people's rights in curtailing the jurisdiction of these courts, they will be warm advocates to maintain that jurisdiction, and we will find them opponents instead of friends.

Mr. WADE. I should like to ask my colleague whether 75 per cent. of the business done at Jefferson City does not come from the town which asks for a district court at Springfield?

Mr. BLAND. The gentleman represents a flourishing town and I admire his zeal, but I do not think, Mr. Speaker, it is or ought to be the policy of Congress to multiply these courts in order to gratify the ambition of these thriving places or their representatives upon this floor. My colleague is hardly serious in his question, as it is not the fact.

I understand it has been stated that a maiority of the Missouri delegation is in favor of this bill. If I am correctly informed by those who tell me what they shall do in the matter, I believe a majority of the Missouri delegation would like to see this bill defeated. It is useless and unnecessary and it is not a step in the right direction.

I yield now five minutes to my colleague, Mr. STONE.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, for a great many years there have been two Federal judicial districts in Missouri, known as the eastern and western districts. There are one hundred and fourteen counties in the State, exclusive of the city of Saint Louis, which has a separate government of its own. There are thirty-eight counties and the city of Saint Louis in the eastern district, and seventy-six counties in the western. The courts in the eastern district have always been held at Saint Louis. Up to 1879 the courts for the western district had been held at Jefferson City, the capital of the State.

By an act of Congress passed January 21, 1879, the western district was divided into two nearly equal subdistricts, known as the eastern and western divisions of the western district. By the provisions of that act the courts for the eastern division were continued at Jefferson City, and Kansas City was designated as the place for holding courts in the western division. That gave the State three Federal district courts—one at Saint Louis, on the eastern border, one at Kansas City, on the western border of the State, and one at Jefferson City, about half way between the other two and near the geographical center of the State.

With those three places every section of the State is connected by railroads and water ways. Saint Louis and Kansas City are the great financial and commercial centers of the State, and to a greater or less extent of the adjacent States and Territories. With courts at the two great cities of the State and another at the capital, in the center of the State, it was thought we had courts enough until recently, when various local interests have been agitating an increase in the number. During the last and preceding Congresses, under the spur of local influences, various bills were introduced to establish courts at different places. In the last Congress some of those influences—those representing Hannibal, Saint Joseph, and Springfield—combined, and agreed on a bill establishing courts at those three points. That confederated influence reappears in this Congress, and it has prevailed on the learned Committee of the Judiciary to report favorably the joint bill.

That bill divides the eastern district into two subdivisions, with one court at Saint Louis and another farther up the Mississippi River, at Hannibal. The western district is chopped up into four judicial splinters. Courts are continued at Jefferson City and Kansas City, and established at Saint Joseph and Springfield. Saint Joseph is some 50 or 60 miles up the Missouri River, north of Kansas City. Springfield is southeast from Kansas City about 180 miles.

I am opposed to this bill. The proposed court at Springfield is for the accommodation of what is known as Southwest Missouri. There are some twenty-five or twenty-six counties comprising Southwest Missouri, eight of which are in my district. Those eight counties are northwest from Springfield; and Kansas City, the present place of holding our courts, is still farther northwest. Only nine counties in the proposed district are east of Springfield. On the map they look well enough; but in point of fact they comprise the rough mountain region of Missouri. The population is sparse, and always will be, for the country is incapable of sustaining many people. According to the last census the population of those nine counties ranged from 4,404, the lowest, to 12,209, the highest, giving an average population to the nine counties of 8,434, while the average wealth was $743,860. Of course there has been some growth since then; but it has not been great.

In 1884 the total vote cast in those nine counties was 16,649. By reckoning five of population to every voter there would be now an aggregate population of 83,245, and an average population of 9,249; which would be an average increase since the census was taken of only 815. This covers a territory somewhere from 80 to 100 miles east and west, by about the same distance north and south. The remainder of this proposed Springfield district lies west and north of Springfield, in the general direction of Kansas City.

Now, take the eight counties of Southwest Missouri, embraced in my district, and we find that in 1884 those counties polled 40,232 votes, against 16,649 polled in the nine counties east of Springfield. Calculated on the basis of one vote to five of population, the eight counties I represent have a total population of 201,160, as against 83,245 in the nine counties east of Springfield; and the eight counties in my district have a present assessed valuation of over $40,000,000.

Now, I have compared the eight counties of my district embraced in what is called Southwest Missouri, and which lie on the western border, with the nine counties east of Springfield. But there are eight other counties lying between, including the county of Greene, in which Springfield is located.

In 1884 those eight counties cast an aggregate vote of 26,231, which, on a basis of 1 vote to five people, represent a population of 131,155. If to that we add the 83,245 people in the nine counties east of Springfield, we will have a total population in seventeen counties of 213,400, against 201,160 in the eight southwestern counties in my district, or only an excess of 12,240. In other words, I represent on this floor one-half of the population and wealth of Southwest Missouri.

Again, when this bill was reported from the committee, the clerks of the courts at Kansas City and Jefferson City made a full statement of all suits brought in those courts during the last six years, from which it appears that 216 suits of all kinds were brought from the eight counties in my district, and only 123 from the other seventeen; and 66 of those 123 were from the county of Green alone—being mostly suits against that county on county bonds. So that in the other sixteen counties only 57 suits were brought by or against their citizens in six years—an average of barely more than 3 suits to the county in a period of six years.

Mr. PAYSON. During how many years?

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. Since 1880, for a period of six years. Sir, in these six years, not exceeding three suits to the county have been brought from all of that territory in what is denominated the "Springfield district."

Mr. WADE. You mean in the circuit court?

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. Yes, sir.

Now, this bill proposes to establish only district courts at Springfield, Saint Joseph, and Hannibal. There are to be no circuit courts at those points.

The people in my district, which is the rich, prosperous, populous part of Southwest Missouri—for, as I have already shown, of the twenty-five counties in Southwest Missouri the eight in my district comprise one-half the wealth and population of the whole, and are the counties in which two-thirds of the judicial business of that region originates—object, as they have good reason to object, to have their business cut up in this manner.

As it is now the circuit and district courts are held at the same places and in the same buildings, and in point of economy, dispatch, and convenience suitors will greatly suffer by separating the courts as proposed. A great many cases are certified to the circuit court by reason of the district judge's interest in the cause, his inability to discharge the duties of his office, or something of that kind, or are taken up on certiorari, appeals, and writs of error. Our courts are now all together; we are satisfied; and we have a right to object to so hurtful a change in our condition as the pending bill proposes, simply to gratify the ambitions of two or three pretentious towns.

I know nothing about the sentiment in Northern Missouri; but in Southern Missouri, my colleague [Mr. BLAND] and myself, representing fully two-thirds of the people, the wealth, and the business of that section, protest against this measure in behalf of both public and private economy, and of every material interest that should be potent here.

But aside from the view which I have been urging, which is purely local to my section and entirely different from the conditions that generally obtain, I place my opposition to this bill and all similar bills upon higher grounds. I am sure, Mr. Speaker, the high esteem in which I hold my colleagues, who are joined like Siamese twins by this cord which linked them some years ago, would inspire me ordinarily to do any proper thing to advance their interest, and I oppose this bill on their account with some reluctance.

But I oppose the measure on principle, because I am opposed to increasing the number of these Federal courts. I think it would be the part of greater wisdom and better statesmanship to go the other way, and reduce the number and curtail the jurisdiction of these courts. I am not the enemy of the Federal judiciary. Within its proper sphere it is an important and necessary factor in our form of Government. The Federal courts have done and are capable of doing great good.

A long list of great judges could be brought here into this arena—of men whose wisdom, learning, and patriotism have added much to the proudest pages in our history. The judiciary has been the subject of much splendid panegyric. We have been taught that every species of private right—that law and public order—find their greatest security in the the calm, conservative, deliberate judgments of the courts, and that when angry, intemperate partisanship sweeps the law-maker in its current, or when bold executive usurpation menaces the Constitution, and private right or the liberties of the people are in peril from either or both, they take refuge and find security in the sanctuary of the courts.

In all of that there is much of truth, but there may be also something of exaggeration. In recent years the tendency of Federal judicial power has not been altogether for good. The old restraints and limitations of the Constitution, which are no less arbitrary in their application to the judiciary than to other co-ordinate branches of the Government, have ceased to be as sacred in the minds of the judges as they once were. They have broken over here and there, and by a species of easy and generous construction of the Constitution have spread their powers until they assume an almost universal jurisdiction.

The old idea of strict construction is no longer a cardinal doctrine in our Federal courts. The whole tendency is the other way. The ancient constitutional doctrine, that all power not expressly or by necessary implication delegated to the Federal Government, was reserved to the States, is becoming obsolete in practice if not in theory. We are constantly drifting away from the old landmarks. We seem to forget that the Federal Government is the creature of the States. We seem to forget its origin, its constitutional nature, and the purposes of its creation. Sir, the union of the States was intended to be perpetual, and the united Government to be sovereign within the limits of its delegated powers.

But in organizing a common Government the States did not lose their own autonomy, or strip themselves naked of all the high prerogatives of sovereignty. The States, no less than the Federal Government, are supreme within their respective spheres. In dealing with foreign powers, in regulating intercourse between the States, in protecting those great interests which are common to all, the Federal Government is the sovereign.

But within the limits of the State itself—touching the administration of its local affairs—the Federal authority has no lawful right to go. In that field the State is the exclusive sovereign. Under a true construction of the Constitution there is no such thing as universal sovereignty in this country. Like God's eternal planetary systems, whose revolving harmonies are the wonder of the ages, this American republic is a system of sovereignties, each supreme in its own orbit, and held together by the centripetal and centrifugal forces of constitutional law. That is the doctrine of the fathers; that is the rock upon which this Union was built; that is the original and true doctrine, and the one upheld in the golden age of American jurisprudence and statesmanship.

Between the common Government and the States there should be mutual respect, and the rights of each should be observed and enforced. And that was the rule in the good old days when the name of Jefferson was a power in this country, and his interpretation of the Constitution an authority. Then the private citizen saw but little of the Federal Government. He rarely came in contact with it. He loved his flag, and was willing to peril his life for its honor. He loved the Union, for in it he felt there was strength and security. He loved the Constitution, for it was the bond of brotherhood between the States. Beyond the domain of his own State, on land or sea, he felt he was under the eye of Federal power and that its arm was extended to protect him. But at home, while he bowed before the lawful authority of the common government, he felt that his security rested with the sovereign power of his State. But in recent years we have been drifting into other currents of thought and practice. The constellation of State sovereignties is waning, and the star of centralization is rising luminous towards the meridian of universal sovereignty. Federal power has grown enormously in the last quarter of a century. The dignity and importance of State governments are falling away before the ever-increasing augmentation of Federal power.

State Legislatures have been scattered at the point of the bayonet and governors deposed by the President's mandate on his own impeachment. In a multitude of ways—aggressive, startling, offensive—the Federal Government has manifested a lofty contempt of State authority. Thirty years ago a Federal official was a rare bird in country neighborhoods. To-day they swarm like black bats in the ghostly corridors of the Catacombs. They are everywhere—arrogant, obtrusive, and often insolent. The supreme right of suffrage—that highest prerogative of citizenship—must be exercised now under the supervision of a deputy marshal.

The States can not be trusted to enforce the laws and maintain the public peace, nor the people trusted to conduct their own election to choose their own officers. The ballot-box must pass under the espionage of the Federal constabulary, so that the people may not cheat each other or defraud their own Government. Such is the tendency of the times. What have these courts, where we have been taught the Constitution is sure of brave defense, been doing? Have they stood stalwart in the breach, or drifted timidly with the tide? They have done neither. They have been leading the way in all these desperate assaults upon the sovereignity of the States.

I repeat, the old doctrine of strict construction has fallen into disrepute. New and arbitrary rules of construction have been introduced, by which the powers of the courts have been vastly augmented and their jurisdiction enlarged. They are constantly encroaching upon the judiciary of the States. They have multiplied in number and grown in power until they are felt like a living presence in every neighborhood. The volume of their business is increasing enormously—an increase which can not be ascribed altogether to the growth of our industrial and commercial interests—for it consists largely of a character of litigation which in former times was adjudicated almost wholly in the courts of the States.

The State courts are giving way before the march of the Federal judiciary. They are being supplanted. They are treated as inferior tribunals. By mandamus certiorari, changes of venue, the Federal courts are fast absorbing the judicial business of the country. And why not, since they assume a mastery over the courts of the State, and a superior right to direct and control the machinery of local government? Why not, when the very officers of a State court and all the official personnel of the State must yield their first obedience to the Federal mandate. Twenty-five years ago a Federal court issued a writ of mandamus to a State officer for the first time in the history of this Government.

Twenty years ago it was held for the first time in the history of this Government, against the dissenting opinions of three of the ablest judges then on the bench, including Chief-Justice Chase, that a United States circuit court had the right by mandamus to compel a State officer to perform an act, which he had been previously forbidden to do by an injunction from a court of the State. And so they have gone on in this direction, step by step, bending the stubborn restraints of the Constitution to suit their lordly will, until to-day they assert the right to control and direct almost at pleasure the executive and judicial officers of a State, and to visit summary punishment for disobedience of their mandates.

Not many months ago the judges of the county court—a court of record—of Cass County, Missouri, were commanded by the United States court to do an act, the ultimate effect of which they believed and decided would be in contravention of the laws of the State, and when they refused to violate the laws they had sworn to observe and enforce, and thus become instruments for oppressing the people whose servants they were, they were arrested, dragged from their homes to the capital of the State, and cast into a common jail. There they counted the weary hours through weeks and months, holding enforced companionship with pickpockets, garroters, and men on whose souls "was the everlasting stain of blood;" while the governor and the supreme court of the State were within hailing distance, yet powerless to succor, for one little old Federal judge, bigger than all the State, stood in the pathway to rescue.

The prison scene was photographed and reproduced in Harper's Weekly. It is a very suggestive picture—those high officers and honored citizens of the great commonwealth languishing in a common jail—old men with gray beards, recalling the Prisoner of Chillon, gazing through iron gratings at the Capitol within whose walls the laws were made for obeying which they suffered that indignity. Such scenes have become common in Missouri.

The officers of the State in Lafayette, Cass, Saint Clair, and other counties have been arrested, or become fugitives to escape imprisonment, for the grave crime of enforcing the laws of their State. Only last summer one of the judges of the Saint Clair County court, following his own judicial interpretation of the laws of his State, and denying the right of a Federal court to supervise and direct the judicial functions of his court, refused to obey the mandate of a Federal judge. A marshal was sent to arrest him, and he fled to escape imprisonment. For weeks a whole brigade of deputy marshals and hired detectives swarmed throughout that whole region in search of him. His home, where he left his wife and children, was invaded at all hours, both day and night. Vehicles were stopped upon the highways and searched.

A number of citizens who furnished food to the family of the fugitive, and others whose only offense was to express sympathy for the officer and to denounce in private conversation the methods employed by the Federal courts and its officers, were arrested and dragged away to answer for contempt. For months this terrorism is continued. At last the judge surrendered himself, and I suppose is this very hour in a prison cell.

Mr. Speaker, with all these infamous outrages against my own people fresh upon me, I have some right to speak with feeling upon this question.

Early in January I introduced a bill in this House limiting the jurisdiction of Federal courts so that these extraordinary and unconstitutional powers they have been exercising should be forbidden by express enactment; and I mean no offense to the learned Committee on the Judiciary when I say I think they would better subserve a great public demand and the best interests of the country if they should report a bill tending to restrain and restrict these courts, instead of one to increase their number.

This may be old-fogyism, bourbonism, or what you will. But I stand for the old Constitution, as it came fresh from the hands of the great men who fashioned it. I stand for the national sovereignty in national affairs and State sovereignty in local affairs. And I would to God that every Representative in this House would meet me here upon common ground, with greater love for our local governments, and stand in the pathway of centralization and the encroachments of Federal power in whatever form it comes.

But I am free to confess I have little hope of meeting much response from this Congress. I have seen too many such measures go through this House, and I presume the pending bill will march triumphantly along the same pathway. But I shall stand against it, and resist it with such force as I possess, so that my conscience shall stand acquitted though I may wholly fail of achievement.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] has eleven minutes of the time remaining.

Mr. BURNES. I yield one-half of my time to my colleague [Mr. HATCH].

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, it is only necessary to say in reply to the memorial which has been read at the suggestion of my colleague [Mr. BLAND], and the statement of the clerks of these different courts commented upon by my colleague [Mr. STONE], that the Bar Association of Jefferson City, where that Federal court now exists, have of course naturally protested against and persistently fought this measure for the establishment of a court anywhere else in the State.

They were just as much opposed to establishing a court at Kansas City, and fought it as vigorously. It is simply taking away a part of the bread and butter of the lawyers who signed that memorial, and that is all there is in it. But Jefferson City happens to be in the very heart of the district represented by my distinguished friend and colleague [Mr. BLAND], and of course he is opposed to any more courts in the State of Missouri; and every single one of the clerks of these courts and every one of these local deputy marshals has been deluging Congress since the beginning of the Forty-sixth Congress in order to make some capital against this bill simply in the interests of their own pockets.

But, Mr. Speaker, what are the facts in connection with the matter? We ask the House to divide the eastern district of the State of Missouri and establish a court in it over a stretch of territory extending from the Iowa line to the Arkansas border in that State. That proposition has three several times received the approval of the Judiciary Committee of this House, and in the Forty-seventh Congress when it was reported this statement was given in its support. Now listen a moment:

In relation to the northern division of the eastern district the following facts are collected:

It embraces seventeen counties; contains 9,470 square miles; 3,627,100 acres of improved lands besides 1,537,759 acres of woodland, forest, and other unimproved farm lands, supporting a population of 302,963.

It embraces a region noted for its rich and varied agricultural products, as the following partial tables taken from the census reports of 1880 will show:

	Number of acres.	Production.
		Pounds.
Tobacco	4,533	7,410,006
		Bushels.
Buckwheat	3,415	38,044
Indian corn	1,057,826	39,312,471
Oats	209,452	5,046,084
Rye	17,684	187,937
Wheat	180,238	2,551,120

LIVE STOCK.

Horses	138,820
Mules	27,429
Milch cows	130,462
Other cattle	289,586
Sheep	327,503
Swine	802,075

The magnitude of the territory embraced in the proposed northern division and the necessity of the proposed legislation become the more apparent when compared with the following tables: It contains 9,470 square miles, while the State of Connecticut has 4,990; Delaware, 2,050; Massachusetts, 8,315; New Jersey, 7,815; Rhode Island, 1,250; New Hampshire, 9,305.

It contains 302,993 population, while the State of Delaware has 146,608; Rhode Island, 276,531; Florida, 269,493; Colorado, 194,327; Nevada, 62,266; Oregon, 174,768; and New Hampshire and Vermont but a fraction more, the former having 346,991 and the latter 332,286. It is very much larger in population than any one of the Territories, as will appear by the following table: Dakota, 135,177; Utah, 143,963; Wyoming, 20,789; Washington, 75,116; New Mexico, 119,565; Idaho, 32,610; Montana, 39,159.

The city of Hannibal, where it is proposed that two terms of the circuit and district court of the United States shall be held annually, is the largest city in population, and the commercial emporium of the proposed northern division, and also the center of the railroad system of the northeastern part of the State. It has direct railroad communication with every county seat in the seventeen counties except two, and all of the principal towns. Shelbyville, the county seat of Shelby County, is six miles north of the Hannibal and Saint Joseph Railroad, and Monticello, the county seat of Lewis County, is six miles north of the Quincy, Missouri and Pacific branch of the Wabash. It is situated on the west bank of the Mississippi River, and in addition to railroad facilities has the advantage of steamboat and packet lines.

We insert these facts as illustrative of much that can be said for each division provided for, and will not cumber the report with similar statistics of each one.

This division of the State therefore is larger in territory than five of the States of this Union which are mentioned in this report. It is larger in population than any single Territory of the United States where Federal courts now exist.

Mr. BLAND. And will not the gentleman also admit that only thirty days in the year are required for the transaction of all the judicial business of the district?

Mr. HATCH. No, sir. I am talking of the eastern division of the State, and I say that Judge Treat's court is in session two-thirds or three-fourths of the time; practically in session all the year.

Mr. BLAND. I am not talking of Saint Louis, but of the district proposed to be divided by this bill.

Mr. HATCH. No; I am not talking about Southwest Missouri. We have had enough of that too, and my colleague [Mr. STONE] and my colleague [Mr. WADE] can talk about Southwest Missouri. I am talking about Northeast Missouri, which is larger than five of the States of the Union, and having a larger population than any Territory. And is it to be said that such a country as that, with a railroad through every single county in the division, shall not have a Federal court simply because the bar of Jefferson City and the clerks and deputy marshals want to keep up the fees and make our people travel 150 to 300 miles to court and then travel back to the northeast after being half starved at Jefferson City, which is one of the poorest places in the State to get anything to eat; they are kept there, as I say, on half rations till they have got every dollar taken from them, and are then compelled to walk home. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLAND. I think my colleague [Mr. HATCH] when he comes there always gets something good to eat and always goes away looking fatter and better than when he came. [Laughter.] These attacks upon Jefferson City are made when my time is exhausted and I can not reply.

Mr. HATCH. When time shall gratify the ambition of my friend by putting him in that capacious mansion as governor of the State, I hope he will not only have a good bill of fare at the governor's mansion, but that he will improve it at the hotels. If he does he will have taken one step in the right direction.

Mr. BURNES. This is not a matter concerning which there should be any misunderstanding or any feeling. The issue is simply a plain business proposition involving public convenience. My esteemed friend from the Jefferson City district is not, in his argument quite as fair as is his usual custom, for he takes up the question and considers it as if the bill proposed to extend the jurisdiction of the United States courts. That question is not involved and has nothing to do with this bill. The distinguished gentleman in his effort merely to discharge his duty to a small portion of his constituents seems to oppose this bill on the ground that he is opposed in general to United States courts; but he has such a court at Jefferson City, and the love of its advantages and conveniences drives the boarding-house keepers in that place to insist upon his denying to others equality of right thereto.

The people of Jefferson City are very charming; but their necessities are numerous and great. The bar association of that place, like the bar, has become a ghastly joke. The bar association of Jefferson City! Will wonders never cease?

Professor Parsons, in Harvard law school, gave his class one morning an illustration of the absolute barrenness of the "absolute rights of persons" as defined by Blackstone, saying that he once read a book entitled Wolves in Iceland, and the first paragraph declared "there are no wolves in Iceland." So of the bar association of Jefferson City, substantially. There is no bar association of Jefferson City—I had almost said there is no bar in Jefferson City.

Jefferson City, it must be stated, is a very small town. If it were not the capital of the State and the site of the penitentiary it would be the solitary and unbroken abode of innocuous desuetude; for business or industrial pursuit there would be as profitless as on a lone rock in the vast center of the great sea.

But there are hash-houses there—and hash-houses; they demand the able and distinguished Representative of that district to protect them from the loss they may sustain if they should lose the patronage of the few witnesses, jurors, and lawyers whom the exigencies of the meager docket, which has been described, require semi-annually to attend.

Of course there is but little business on the docket of the Jefferson City court. Why should there be any? But ask my esteemed colleague, who so ably represents the Kansas City district, as to the business on the docket at Kansas City. You will find in his response that the court is in session almost continually. Ask my other esteemed colleague from Saint Louis [Mr. O'NEILL]—the life and light of the House—as to the volume of business in the court of Saint Louis. You will hear in response that the court is crowded all the year round with lawyers, litigants, jurors, and witnesses, many of whom have to travel several hundred miles from their homes in order to obey the process of the court and discharge their professional or public duties.

But my friend representing the Jefferson City district, whose district lies in that part of Central Missouri south of the Missouri River, was born, Congressionally, to a better estate. It was a sort of "Cæsarian operation" that delivered Cole County into his jurisdiction and made him feel that it was his duty to compel unwilling citizens to sojourn beneath the scrubby oak and dwarfed pine growing doubtfully on the yellow clay of that inhospitable soil. To stop the "hash-house" business of Jefferson City, or in the slightest to diminish it, will create more commotion in that city than ever agitated the Ephesians in their manufacture of wooden gods.

But my distinguished colleague sees no necessity for courts at Saint Joseph, Hannibal, or Springfield. He sees no public demand for them. Of course not; why should he? Jefferson City can not see beyond her municipal limits. The public demand for these courts is not in Jefferson City, nor with the alleged barristers of its bar association. Go to the great communities of the State—to Saint Louis, solid, great, and grand city of the great valley in which the seat of empire and the center of commerce are now recognized throughout the world, if you would learn of the public wants. Go to Kansas City, marvel of progress and incarnate spirit of enterprise, if you would seek more knowledge of Missouri than we or the able and distinguished Representative of that city on this floor can give you. My distinguished colleague [Mr. O'NEILL], representing a city of more than half a million of people, can be depended upon for a knowledge of the popular will.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Will the gentleman permit me for a moment?

Mr. BURNES. Yes, sir.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Two years ago there was a strong protest from my city against the bill then presented. The present bill, I am informed, has been shorn of many of the features then deemed objectionable. I presume the present bill is not obnoxious to my people, as I have not up to the present hour received a single protest against this bill.

Mr. BURNES. I might add, the gentleman from Saint Louis will be found voting for the bill.

May I not safely conclude that my distinguished and esteemed colleague from the Jefferson City district, in the faithful discharge of his duty to a portion of his forlorn constituents, has found some demand for these courts in the public estimate. Saint Louis is not objecting, and that city represents a large and respectable portion of the State. Kansas City is not objecting, and that city represents a large and respectable portion of the State. Saint Joseph, the third city in the State, and making rapid strides to pre-eminence, and the people all around in the districts of my colleagues from the second and third districts, as well as in my own, are earnestly demanding these courts. Hannibal, the fourth city of the State, and Springfield and the great southwest joining hands in support of this bill ought to inspire some slight belief that the demand was general and popular in Missouri. But poor old Jefferson City, with its "bar association" and its meager court docket, is fighting for its "hash-houses" and contending against equality of right in court business with three great quarters of the State, and while doing so painfully aware that the capital of the State must very soon be removed elsewhere.

If senators and representatives now in session at Jefferson City representing the great communities interested in this bill should come to understand the selfish and unjustifiable wrongs that Jefferson City and its "bar association" would inflict upon them, the capital-removal question would have at once irresistible reinforcements. [Applause.]

Mr. BLAND. The gentleman knows, or ought to know, that the present Legislature has recently voted that proposition down.

Mr. BURNES. Yes; but the General Assembly is still in session.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 184, noes 3.

Mr. BLAND. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. The point of no quorum being made, the Chair will appoint the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. BLAND, and the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. BURNES, to act as tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 184, noes 2.

So (more than two-thirds having voted in the affirmative) the motion was agreed to, and the bill was passed.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURTS—JUDGES' SALARIES.

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 6) fixing the salaries of the several judges of the United States district courts at $5,000 per annum, and for other purposes; and I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the salaries of the several judges of the district courts of the United States shall hereafter be at the rate of $5,000 per annum.

SEC. 2. That no person related to any justice or judge of any court of the United States by affinity or consanguinity, within the degree of first cousin, shall be appointed by such court or judge to or employed by such court or judge in any office or duty in any court of which such justice or judge may be a member.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. SENEY. I shall ask for the reading of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. SENEY. I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. If a second is ordered debate will be in order and the report can be read in the time of some gentleman.

Mr. BAYNE. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

Mr. OATES. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The Chair will appoint to act as tellers the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SENEY].

The House divided; and there were—ayes 122, noes 52.

The SPEAKER. The ayes have it and there is a second. Under the rules thirty minutes are allowed for debate; fifteen minutes in support of the motion and fifteen minutes in opposition to it.

The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] to control the time in support of the motion, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SENEY] to control the time in opposition to it.

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Speaker, this is a Senate bill which has been passed by the Senate almost unanimously, as I understand, and has been reported to the House by the majority of the Judiciary Committee. Its purpose is to equalize the salaries of the judges of the district courts of the United States. It appears that there is but one such judge who receives a salary of $5,000, the judge for the district of California. The next highest salary paid is to the judge of the district of Louisiana, $4,500 a year. Then come ten judges who are paid $4,000 a year each. Three of these are in New York State, two in Pennsylvania, one in Massachusetts, one in New Jersey, one in Maryland, one in Southern Ohio, and one in Northern Illinois. Then there are forty-four judges who receive $3,500 a year each. The anomaly of the situation is that there are judges in various parts of the country doing infinitely more work than those in other sections, yet receiving a less salary; and, in view of the salaries paid by the States to their judiciary, it seems to be a niggardly policy on the part of the United States to pay the judges of these district courts so meagerly.

Another anomaly of the present situation is that one of the judges of the district of Illinois, for instance, gets a salary of $3,500 a year, while the judge of the other district of Illinois gets $4,000 a year, and yet I am told that the one who gets but $3,500 has more onerous duties to perform than the one who gets $4,000. It is needless for me to say to a body like this that members of the United States judiciary ought to receive at least such a compensation as will enable them to live upon their salaries. It is unfair of this Government to place the judicial positions that are within the gift of the President beyond the reach of all who are not men of means. Now, if a salary of $5,000 a year be allowed it will enable a man, whether he has means or not, to accept such a position and to maintain his family upon his salary; but as it is now, there is no temptation to anybody to accept such a position. On the contrary, there are good reasons why those who are not men of means should decline them, because the salary is insufficient for the support of the judges and their families.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. And they are not permitted to engage in other business.

Mr. BAYNE. As suggested by my friend from Iowa, they are not permitted to engage in any other business, nor should they engage in any other business; they should receive an adequate salary, on which they could live respectably, and I think that Congress should not hesitate to grant it. I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has ten minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. SENEY. Mr. Speaker, this bill proposes to make the salaries of the United States district court judges uniform at $5,000 per year. Under the law now in force one of the district judges gets a salary of $5,000 a year; another gets $4,500; ten of them get salaries of $4,000, and forty-five are paid $3,500 each. In view of the fact that these salaries were fixed some seventeen or eighteen years ago, and that the Republican party so long had in their own hands the power to raise them if they saw proper to do so, it seems to me a little strange that it has not been done.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Has not the country been growing in business and wealth during these eighteen years?

Mr. SENEY. The country has been growing in business; and the men who now sit on the Federal bench have been growing in years. My information is that the great body of them are now of such age that they may retire now under the law on their salaries; but many of them are looking forward to the passage of this bill in order that they may retire at an increased salary.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Only a very small percentage of them.

Mr. SENEY. That is one of the reasons why I am opposed to the increase of these salaries.

Mr. HERBERT. If the gentleman from Ohio will permit me right here——

Mr. SENEY. Certainly.

Mr. HERBERT. I wish to say that the salaries allowed to these judges have been growing more and more valuable all the time. The salary of a judge will purchase to-day about twice as much as it would ten years ago.

Mr. HOPKINS. It costs a judge twice as much to live as it did ten years ago.

Mr. SENEY. I regard the office of a district judge of the United States as one of the most lucrative and desirable in the public service.

Mr. HOLMAN. At the present salary.

Mr. SENEY. At the present salary of $3,500 there is no office in the public service more desirable or lucrative. We hear of very few Federal judges who resign. Occasionally one dies. From these facts it would appear that the men who hold these places are quite content to hold them at the salaries which they are now receiving.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Two United States judges in the circuit in which I live—Judge Dillon and Judge McCrary—have resigned.

A MEMBER. To become attorneys for railroad companies.

Mr. STORM. And we can not pass any bill giving such men large enough salaries to induce them to remain on the bench when a railroad company is competing against the Government for their services.

Mr. SENEY. I think that the salaries now received by these judges will compare favorably with the salaries paid to the judges serving under State authority. I think that the average of the salaries paid in the States to nisi prius judges is about $3,000, so that the salaries paid to these Federal judges are $500 in excess of that average. I think they are also in excess of the average salaries paid to the governors of the various States. You may go through the entire list, and I think you will find that there are no officers in the public service who get more for the labor they perform than do the district judges of the United States.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. And they have a life tenure.

Mr. SENEY. I am aware that in some districts there is a large amount of business, and the duties imposed upon these judges are onerous and exacting. But I am not informed that the judges in general are overworked. If any of them are not content with the salaries now paid, the plain and easy course is for them to resign their places, and give to others who are willing to fill them the opportunity they have so long been denied. I will undertake to put upon the Federal bench the best legal talent of this country at a salary of $3,500. If any one of the gentlemen now on the district court bench should resign, I am quite sure that many of the best lawyers in any one of the States would be asking at the hands of the present Executive a nomination to the vacant place.

Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the increase of these salaries because I am unwilling to impose upon the people of this country an additional burden in the shape of taxation. They already bear enough. The party to which I belong stands pledged to the people that taxes shall be reduced; that there shall be no unnecessary increase in the number or salaries of Federal officials.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the residue of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has eight minutes remaining.

Mr. BAYNE. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG].

Mr. BRAGG. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to putting excessive taxation upon the people, and am in favor of relieving them whenever I can. I have voted repeatedly in this House to consider that question. I believe my distinguished friend from Ohio [Mr. SENEY] had the honor to vote the other way.

I am opposed to raising the salaries of political offices. This is all that our people ask of us. I have the honor to live in a judicial district that has upon its bench, as one of its brightest ornaments, a young man who in the discharge of his official duties as judge of that district sits almost uninterruptedly from the 1st day of January to the 31st day of December in each year.

I am told by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SENEY] he can resign if he does not like it. I can say to him if that judge had been permitted to follow his own inclination he would have resigned years ago. But he did not resign, at the request of the bar and those having business in his court, because we assured him the time would come when officers like him, who devoted their time in the discharge of their judicial duties properly, and who did them with credit to the State and bar as he had done, would have their claims heard in Congress, and provision would be made for him.

He lives in the little town of Racine, unable to move to the city where his court is held because he has not the means to buy a home in Milwaukee. And therefore he occupies his own homestead in the little town where he lives, and goes, and comes every morning and evening to attend to the duties he has to discharge.

It may be from time to time during the season there may be two weeks, or three weeks, or four weeks he is not called upon by active business in his own court. Then he is called to go to Chicago to help share the burdens of Judge Blodgett, the judge of that district, who is overloaded, and can not by working every day in the year bring up his calendar. He kindly comes down and shares the labor of his brother judge.

There are two districts where, to my own personal knowledge of the men, they do as much, or more, as any circuit judge in the United States, and I would not cut them down because, forsooth, you may find some other district which has an incompetent judge, or some other district which has not sufficient business to occupy the attention of the judge. If such cases as those present themselves it is the duty of the Judiciary Committee to prepare a bill which will grade the judges, when we find discrimination exists and men are receiving larger salary under this bill than perhaps they ought to receive.

Now, when we have given us a Senate bill, and we have an opportunity to reach those men who earn their money, and more too, men as able as any lawyer at the bar who earns thousands where they get hundreds, I say we ought not to hesitate under any little plea of economy. The people do not want economy in that direction. They want economy, as I have said, in political offices. They do not ask for economy which will deprive them of men on the bench who stand at the head of the bar in the districts over which they preside—men in whom they have confidence—men whom suitors know when their cases are submitted to them they will be fairly tried, justice will be honestly administered, and the law will be the guide and rule of action. Let us remember those men, and let us try to pass this bill notwithstanding the cry of economy.

I will yield now to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES].

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this bill in part for the reason the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] has given why he is in favor of it. If there is a necessity to increase the salarys of any of those judges on account of the large amount of work they have to perform that is an argument simply in favor of a bill grading their salaries and compensating them in accordance with the amount of work they do. But, sir, these instances are but exceptions to the rule. There are some judges, as the gentleman from Wisconsin has stated, who are employed all the year round and who have little or no time for rest or relaxation. That is simply an argument why those particular men should have their salaries increased, but it is not a good reason for increasing the salaries of all the other judges. Many of them are not employed for more than two months in a year, and because one or two or a half dozen judges are employed all the year round is no reason why all the others who are not thus employed should have their salaries increased to $5,000 a year.

Mr. HOPKINS. Can the gentleman state whether any judge included in this bill does not sit more than two months in the year?

Mr. OATES. Take the little State of Nevada with 62,000 people, the judge there does not sit that long. He is a good man, and no doubt could realize three times the amount of his salary at his profession, but he prefers the judgship. There is no hardship forced upon him. I speak of Judge Sabin in illustration, because I am his friend.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. In my district the judges do not get two months' recreation in a whole year. They have to hold circuit as well as district courts.

Mr. OATES. That is the fault of the circuit judge.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. But the circuit judge has an empire to preside over.

Mr. OATES. I must decline further interruption, as I have but a moment of time. I agree with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SENEY] that the office of United States district judge at a salary of $3,500 a year is a very desirable office. His term is for life or during good behavior, and when he reaches the age of seventy years he can retire and still draw his salary. There is no compulsory service; they can resign if they do not like it.

The general complaint of nearly all officers and employés of the Government is that their salaries are too low. Mr. Speaker, but few die, and none resign on account of the salary being too small. It is said that the best lawyers can not afford to take a district judgeship at $3,500 a year. I know of but few who would refuse it if it were tendered to them. Sir, I do not concur in the opinion of those who hold that the best lawyers make the best judges. Some remarkably successful practitioners have, when elevated to the bench, made very ordinary judges, while many men who were considered quite ordinary lawyers—almost complete failures as practitioners—have greatly distinguished themselves on the bench.

Sir, I deny the assertion that the best lawyers—as the most successful practitioners are always called—make the best judges. A judge who esteems himself wiser in the law than any of the lawyers who practice before him is too dogmatic to hear with patience and duly weigh the arguments adduced on each side of the question to be decided. The ablest advocates are the enthusiasts who see no other than the side of the cause they espouse.

This country is governed by the people, and while the majority of them may go wrong, may be temporarily swayed by false clamor or the want of a clear understanding of the question in hand, yet their institutions which have stood the test of time and met their approval may safely be taken as a clear indication of the popular will. None of the State judges except in New York and some of the old, wealthy, and populous States of the East are paid large salaries.

The salaries of the judges in all the other States—in nine-tenths of the States of the Union—range from $1,600 in Virginia to $4,000 in California, so that the average may be fairly estimated at $3,000 per annum. This, then, may be taken as a fair expression of the general opinion of the American people as to the amount of salary a judge should ordinarily receive. Gentlemen must remember that the salary attached to a judicial office is not the only allurement to the lawyer; the power and honor it confers are much more esteemed than the salary. The State judge holds but for a term of years—usually about six—when he has to run the gauntlet of a re-election, yet in every State, with an annual salary of $3,000, there are always men of fine judicial capacity anxious to obtain a judgeship. How much more acceptable to such aspirants would be a United States district judgeship with its higher salary and life tenure?

The tendency of this bill is to dwarf the judiciary of the States and heighten the desire of mere salary-seekers to obtain these Federal judgeships. What if they do have to work the year round? How many millions of less fortunate men have to do the same thing for less than half the salary a judge receives? The purity, ability, and dignity of our Federal judiciary does not depend upon the amount of salary they receive, but upon their conduct as judges.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SENEY. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN].

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Ohio has very truly said that the salaries of the district judges are already up to the average of the salaries paid by the Government for all other services performed for the people of this country.

Mr. HOLMAN. About the average.

Mr. MCMILLIN. And in verification of that fact I wish to call the attention of the House to this point, that in three States of this Union your governors, who work from one year's end to the other, and when they go out of office at the end of their terms retire to private life without any life pay, such as the judges receive on retirement, yet they receive but $1,000 a year.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. But the governors work most of the time at politics.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I do not care what he may do while there, that is the compensation he gets; and I ask the gentleman does he claim that there is no politics in the judges?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I do, sir; I have never been able to find anything of the kind in a judge.

Mr. MCMILLIN. The gentleman's experience has been different from that of some others. Rhode Island gives her governor $1,000 a year; New Hampshire $1,000, and also Michigan. Oregon and Vermont pay $1,500; Delaware, $2,000; the State of Maine, $2,500; Nebraska, $2,500; West Virginia, $2,700; the nine governors of the Territories get $2,600 each, and out of all of the States and Territories there are only fifteen who pay their governors more than $4,000 a year.

Now if there are particular instances where there are hardships or inequalities of salary owing to an excess of work done by the judges, let us remedy that. But will any man claim that all of the judges do the same amount of work and are entitled to the same salary?

It should not be forgotten also that the retired-pay of a judge is a great deal, while other officials when they retire to private life must support themselves.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. But they can engage in any kind of private business; there is nothing to prevent it, even while holding office. But with a judge this is very different.

Mr. MCMILLIN. But he has his retired-pay to fall back on.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SENEY. In the time remaining to me I ask that the report of the minority be read.

The minority report (by Mr. SENEY) was read, as follows:

These bills are substantially alike. They propose to increase the salaries of the United States district court judges to $5,000 per annum. The salaries of these judges, under existing law, are as follows: One (California), $5,000; one (Louisiana), $4,500; ten at $4,000 each, as follows: In New York, three; Pennsylvania, two; Massachusetts, New Jersey, Maryland, Southern Ohio, and Northern Illinois, one each. Forty-four are fixed at $3,500 each. These salaries now aggregate $203,000. Increased, as the bill proposes, they will aggregate $280,000. This increase in the public expenditures ought not, in our opinion, to be made.

We favor a liberal salary to these judges. If those allowed by existing laws are less than they ought to be, cheerfully will we vote for an increase.

Perhaps these salaries ought to be made uniform. It may be wrong to have the salary of one judge at $3,500, of another at $4,000, still another at $4,500, and another at $5,000. The fact that all of these salaries except twelve are fixed at $3,500 each is a strong reason in support of this sum as the proper compensation to be paid. Why twelve of these salaries were fixed at a sum above $3,500 we are unable to state. We have no information as to the reasons for making a difference in the salaries of the twelve judges who receive more than $3,500. The difference, it will be observed, ranges from about 15 to 42 per cent.

Forty-four of these salaries the bill proposes to increase nearly 50 per cent. These salaries were fixed about nineteen years ago. We have reason to believe that the subject at that time was fully considered. That these salaries were then thought to be sufficient we feel bound to presume. If fixed too low, long ago they ought to have been raised. That they were not induces the opinion that the law-making power for many years past was satisfied that they were reasonable, and that more ought not to be paid. If too low now, they were too low when they were fixed, and were too low during all of the time intervening.

Legislation to increase or to equalize the salaries of these judges has not, until a very recent period, been seriously pressed. In the last Congress, bills for that purpose were introduced in the House, but that body closed its labors without giving them consideration. In the Congresses preceding, as far back as 1869, we know of no earnest endeavor to raise these salaries above the amount originally fixed in 1867. The necessity for an increase, if any there be, was as real in the past as it is alleged to be in the present.

To recommend an increase at this time, in the aggregate 38 per cent., in the absence of a single petition or disinterested request, is a responsibility which, with our convictions of duty to both the judges and the people, we are not willing to assume.

We indulge the belief that $3,500 is a liberal salary for a district court judge. It is nearly $300 per month, and more than $11 for each working day in the year. Compared with the salaries of others engaged in the public service, it is all that ought to be paid. The office of district judge at $3,500 per annum is more than a living. This can not be said of every $3,500 Government office. It can not be said of many the salary of which is above $3,500. The position of district judge is by no means the least lucrative or desirable in the Government, State or Federal.

For nearly a hundred years the position has been held by gentlemen distinguished for their integrity, learning, and ability. Few resign. When a vacancy occurs the best talent at the bar offers for the place.

In considering this subject we must not overlook the fact that a judge of the district court holds his office during good behavior. It is a life office at more than a living salary. This is to be said of but few of the many official places in the Government.

There is another consideration to be borne in mind. The Congress in 1869 enacted that a Federal court judge, at the age of seventy years, after ten years of service, might resign, and for the remainder of his life receive the same salary which he received at the time of his resignation. This provision is still in force, and, in our judgment, more than compensates for any supposed inadequacy in salary while in active service.

Still another consideration is worthy of mention. The duties of a district judge, as a rule, are performed in the city where he resides, and for this reason he is at less expense than if he held court at places distant from his home. When official duties are to be performed elsewhere, usually the courtesies known to railroad management come to the relief of the judge and enable him to travel through his district free of expense.

If we increase the salary of the district judge we ought, to be consistent, to increase the salaries of others engaged in the public service. We feel unwilling to increase the compensation of those now holding office unless it be made to appear that what they receive is below what is reasonable, and below what, in justice to those who are not of the office-holding class, ought to be paid.

We find that in twenty of the States the salary of the governor is less than $3,500. A judge in the highest court in twelve of the States is paid less than $3,500. The average salary in courts of last resort in the States is about $4,000; but a district judge is a nisi prius judge. Consider, then, his salary at $3,500, saying nothing about his expectancy, in connection with salaries paid to nisi prius judges in the State courts.

We have not at our command exact information as to the salaries allowed nisi prius judges in the States. The average salary, it is safe to say, is less than $3,000. These judges, in the discharge of their duties, it is believed, do as much, if not more, work each year than is done by a district court judge; that the labor of the State judge is done at more inconvenience and at a greater expense we think there can be no doubt.

Maturely reflecting upon this subject, we are induced to believe that, all things considered, there are few, if any, positions in the public service more desirable for its honors or for its emoluments, present and prospective, than the office of judge of the district court of the United States.

It is suggested that the majority of these judges are now, by reason of age and length of service, entitled to be retired upon their present salaries for the remainder of their lives. If this be true, we ought not, it seems to us, to add their names to the civil pension-roll at salaries far in excess of what they now receive. We pension our country's defenders, but there are few, however deserving, that are on the rolls at $3,500 per annum.

To our minds there is a moral if not a legal difficulty in the way of increasing the salary of a district court judge. Under the Federal Constitution the salary of these judges can not be diminished during their continuance in office. Under this provision, it is believed, there is the power to increase. Several of the State constitutions provide that the salary of a judge shall be neither increased nor diminished during his official term. These provisions, of course, are not legal objections to increasing the salaries proposed by this bill. They furnish, however, some evidence of the state of the public mind upon this subject. The public judgment, as we believe, rests upon the conviction that one who takes an office by election or appointment, at a specified salary, agrees to do its duties for that salary; and that it is a breach of faith and breach of contract to ask or take more.

The minority of the committee entertain the opinion that an increase in the salaries of the judges of the district courts of the United States, particularly at this time, when the business of the country is seriously depressed, labor scarce, and wages low, is not in the interest of good government; nor will the use of the public revenues for such a purpose satisfy those who believe that the expenses of the public service ought to be kept within economical limits.

I concur in this minority report, but not in all the reasoning in its support.

N. J. HAMMOND.

During the reading of the report the hammer fell.

The undersigned can not concur with the majority of the committee in reporting the Senate bill, for the following reasons:

The present salaries of district judges are as follows: District of California, $5,000; eastern district of Louisiana, $4,500; district of Massachusetts, northern, eastern, and southern districts of New York, eastern and western districts of Pennsylvania, $4,000; district of New Jersey, district of Maryland, southern district of Ohio, and northern district of Illinois, $4,000; all other districts, $3,500.

Now, if these salaries were properly graded nineteen years ago, there can be no good reason for the increase of the lower salaries to the maximum salary then allowed without any increase of that maximum salary. If the minimum salaries have been inadequate, upon the gradation then established, the same proportion of increase should be allowed to all.

But it will be found by reference to the report of the Attorney-General for 1885 that there is a singular disproportion between the salaries now allowed and the labor done in the several courts.

There should be a carefully graded bill for these salaries, having regard to the labors of the judge and the different expenses of living in different localities, and the travel required in attendance on courts.

The undersigned is in favor of adequate salaries for judges. That is the best repaid outlay of the money of the people which induces the largest ability to seek the bench and frees judicial life from the cares of family and home, which distract from public duty, and, above all, which will make the judge truly independent of all influences to disturb the balance of his judgment and unfit him to be an impartial arbiter between all men and all interests in society.

The undersigned thinks the bill which equalizes these salaries does more than is just to some and less than is just to others.

For these reasons the undersigned declines to concur in reporting the Senate bill favorably, and reserves the privilege of moving to amend it so as to do justice to all by proportioning salary to labor, and not equalizing rewards between those who have unequal claims.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

J. R. TUCKER.

During the reading of the report the hammer fell.

Mr. SENEY asked and obtained unanimous consent that the remainder of the report be printed as above.

Mr. BAYNE. I now yield two minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS].

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, the principal arguments urged against this bill concede that there are districts in the United States where the salaries of the judges are too low, and some follow this concession up by the statement that there should be a graduated bill providing for these salaries.

The history of legislation or attempted legislation upon this subject during the past five or six years demonstrates one fact, and that is that no bill increasing the salary of a single judge, or which undertakes to graduate the salaries of the judges, can receive a majority vote of either branch of Congress. There is, therefore, left but one proposition for consideration: whether or not the salaries are too low, and if too low, whether we are willing to increase them to $5,000.

So far as I am personally concerned I should prefer it if it were possible to pass a graduated bill; but it is not certain by any means that a bill of such a character would operate more justly or equitably than this bill, even if it were passed, for the simple reason that a circuit judge may, at any time where the business has accumulated or is urgent in any district court, require any district judge in the circuit to come to such point and assist in the disposing of the business by holding separate courts. Such is now the practice in many circuits, and I apprehend if the subject were carefully examined into it would be found that some of the very judges who, it is said, do but little work in their own districts are doing large amounts of work in other districts.

In this way their work is equalized. However this may be, I have long believed that the salary of most of the judges is too small, and I have grave doubt whether any bill graduating the salaries would operate for any considerable length of time more equitably than the bill under consideration. In a country developing and undergoing changes as rapidly as ours, new inequalities would arise constantly, and the result be as it is now under the present system—complaints and jealousies. The practice in every State in the Union is to give the circuit judges the same salary, while no one pretends that their work is equalized.

No new argument has been adduced against this bill. One intimates that there are practically no Democrats on the bench. It is true. I trust it will not be so always. We have some chances now to get some Democrats appointed, and I hope we shall not throw them away by the adoption of such narrow views and policies as that statement suggests. If we must have Republicans we want the ablest and best we can get, men of ability and courage and standing. It is said the judges never resign. It is a mistake. The circuit in which I live has had three judges to resign in the last ten years, and the Government sustained a severe loss in each instance. I do not know of any money spent so wisely and so economically as that spent in securing brains and integrity for the bench. I know of no duty so grave, so solemn, so important as that which devolves on the conscientious and upright judge.

It is not pretended the work of the judges has not increased and increased largely in the last two decades. I venture the assertion, and it is not without facts to sustain it, that either of the two judges in the State I in part represent does more work annually than the single judge who presided over the court prior to 1861, and which then exercised jurisdiction over a larger territory, did in five years. Why is this so? First, the general development of the State. Second, the introduction of railroads; but more especially because the jurisdiction of these courts has been increased; yes, I suppose, doubled since 1861.

Sir, the history of legislation for a decade or more after 1865 was a constant extension of the jurisdiction of the United States courts. Until recently the uniform practice of the Democratic party was to protest against and antagonize all this character of legislation. But of late we are beginning, I sometimes think, to put the other side on the defensive in this regard. With oleomargarine and pleuro-pneumonia and lottery statutes, indeed with the absorption and usurpation of the entire police powers of the States by Congress, we shall soon need a Federal court for every county, and the nearer you get them to the people in their every-day affairs the more important to have good judges.

But the judges are not responsible for this legislation. Congress is responsible for it. It has imposed the additional work, and I believe it to be its duty to pay salaries commensurate with it. The law prohibits a judge from engaging in the practice of his profession. Most of them know nothing else. Their lives have been devoted to its study. They have no time for other business, however well fitted for it. If they had ample time to engage in other matters, it is wiser and better that they should not.

I do not believe any of the judges can live as becomes their station and educate their children and save anything from their salaries. True, they are retired at seventy years of age on full pay. But what if they do not reach seventy? There is no provision for widows or uneducated children. I am convinced that it is wisdom, justice, and the highest interests of the country to put our judges beyond all anxiety, necessity, or temptation. We shall secure better talent, greater learning, purer courts, greater safety to the citizen, and better protection to property; and I submit if we can do this, the measure is economical also. I therefore support this bill from a sense of duty. I do not believe my constituents will complain; I do not think they will object to pay commensurate with the work done—good substantial pay for good substantial work. "The laborer is worthy of his hire."

Mr. BAYNE. I now yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Speaker, the bill now presented to the House has passed the Senate and was considered by the Judiciary Committee at the last session of Congress and reported favorably. It is due to the committee to say that there was great difference of opinion there about the character of this bill; and I confess that my own judgment was in favor of a bill graduating the salaries according to the necessities of the case growing out of the labor performed by different judges, and the expensiveness of living at the place where the judge was to perform the duties of his office. But that was found to be impossible. I was the only member of the committee who favored such a proposition; and that being out of the case, the question now is, what are we to do?

I feel that there are cases in which judges, district judges, perhaps, are paid enough by thirty-five hundred, four thousand, or four thousand five hundred dollars a year; but there are a large number of cases which have come to my attention where the judges are paid insufficiently at these rates.

Mr. OATES. Let me ask my friend from Virginia if the majority of the judges are not paid enough in his opinion?

Mr. TUCKER. I really do not think so. I think the great defect in our economy is that we start at the wrong point. There never should be economy in commanding the best brains to adjudge cases between man and man. [Applause.] I believe that the judicial brain is the worst paid brain in this country. It is paid less than for most any other purpose; and I favor this bill not because it may be perfect in its provisions, but because it is a move in the right direction. I would rather give a judge a high salary to compensate him for his arduous labors, so as to command the best ability for the bench, than to give high salaries to any other class of people in any other Government employment in this country.

The truth is the men whose brains are intent upon the almighty dollar are paid in this country greatly over the men whose brains can adjudge causes between man and man, and I am in favor of this bill as the best that can be done.

It will be said it is very expensive. Mr. Speaker, the cost will not be over $50,000, and you pass a bill by a three-fourths vote to spend a million dollars on some job.

Mr. SYMES. Do you not think that judges of the Federal courts, who work the year round, are worth as much as Congressmen, who work only a portion of the year?

Mr. TUCKER. Some of them are worth more than some Congressmen.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

Mr. DUNN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question being taken on the motion to adjourn, it was not agreed to; there being—ayes 32, noes 98.

Mr. SENEY. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 45 members voting therefor.

Mr. BURROWS. There seems to be a misunderstanding as to the question on which the yeas and nays are ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SENEY] to demand the yeas and nays on the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

Mr. SENEY. Yes, sir; I called for them upon that question.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 146, nays 110, not voting 62; as follows:

PUBLIC BUILDING AT AUGUSTA, GA.

Mr. BARNES. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules so as to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of the bill (S. 712) for the erection of a public building at Augusta, Ga., and pass the same with the amendments reported by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The bill, with the amendments, was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase a site for, and cause to be erected thereon, a suitable building, with fire-proof vaults therein, for the accommodation of the United States courts, post-office, internal-revenue service, and other Government offices, at the city of Augusta, in the State of Georgia. The plans, specifications, and full estimates for said building shall be previously made and approved according to law, and shall not exceed for the site and building complete the sum of $150,000; nor shall any site be purchased until estimates for the erection of a building which will furnish sufficient accommodations for the transaction of the public business, and which shall not exceed in cost the balance of the sum herein limited after the site shall have been purchased and paid for, shall have been approved by the Secretary of the Treasury; and no purchase of site, nor plan for said building, shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury involving an expenditure exceeding the said sum of $150,000 for site and building: Provided, That the site shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire in adjacent buildings by an open space of not less than forty feet, including streets and alleys; and no money appropriated for this purpose shall be available until a valid title to the site for said building shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Georgia shall have ceded to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. BARNES. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The motion of Mr. BARNES was then agreed to.

RIGHT OF WAY THROUGH INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. PETERS. I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8594) to grant the right of way through the Indian Territory to the Chicago, Kansas and Nebraska Railway, and for other purposes.

Mr. PETERS. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the bill be dispensed with. It is in the usual form.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I object.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Chicago, Kansas and Nebraska Railway Company, a corporation created under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Kansas, be, and the same is hereby, invested and empowered with the right of locating, constructing, owning, equipping, operating, using, and maintaining a railway and telegraph and telephone line through the Indian Territory, beginning at a point on the northern line of said Territory at or near the south line of the State of Kansas crossed by the one hundred and first meridian, thence in a southwesterly direction by the most practicable route toward El Paso, N. Mex., and also beginning at a point on the south line of the State of Kansas near the city of Hunnewell, in Sumner County, thence running on the most practicable route to or near Fort Washita, and thence in a southerly direction to the south line of the Indian Territory in the direction of Galveston, Tex., with the right to construct, use, and maintain such tracks, turnouts, sidings, and extensions as said company may deem it to their interest to construct along and upon the right of way and depot grounds hereby granted.

SEC. 2. That said corporation is authorized to take and use for all purposes of a railway, and for no other purpose, a right of way 100 feet in width through said Indian Territory, and to take and use a strip of land 200 feet in width, with a length of 3,000 feet, in addition to right of way, for stations, for every 10 miles of road, with the right to use such additional ground where there are heavy cuts or fills as may be necessary for the construction and maintenance of the road-bed, not exceeding 100 feet in width on each side of said right of way, or as much thereof as may be included in said cut or fill: Provided, That no more than said addition of land shall be taken for any one station: Provided further, That no part of the lands herein authorized to be taken shall be leased or sold by the company, and they shall not be used except in such manner and for such purposes only as shall be necessary for the construction and convenient operation of said railroad, telegraph, and telephone lines; and when any portion thereof shall cease to be so used, such portion shall revert to the nation or tribe of Indians from which the same shall have been taken.

SEC. 3. That before said railway shall be constructed through any lands held by individual occupants according to the laws, customs, and usages of any of the Indian nations or tribes through which it may be constructed, full compensation shall be made to such occupants for all property to be taken or damage done by reason of the construction of such railway. In case of failure to make amicable settlement with any occupant, such compensation shall be determined by the appraisement of three disinterested referees, to be appointed one (who shall act as chairman) by the President, one by the chief of the nation to which said occupant belongs, and one by said railroad company, who, before entering upon the duties of their appointment, shall take and subscribe, before a district judge, clerk of a district court, or United States commissioner, an oath that they will faithfully and impartially discharge the duties of their appointment, which oath, duly certified, shall be returned with their award to and filed with the Secretary of the Interior within sixty days from the completion thereof; and a majority of said referees shall be competent to act in case of the absence of a member, after due notice. And upon the failure of either party to make such appointment within thirty days after the appointment made by the President, the vacancy shall be filled by the district judge of the court for the western district of Arkansas or the district of Kansas, upon the application of the other party. The chairman of said board shall appoint the time and place for all hearings, within the nation to which such occupant belongs. Each of said referees shall receive for his services the sum of $4 per day for each day they are engaged in the trial of any case submitted to them under this act, with mileage at 5 cents per mile. Witnesses shall receive the usual fees allowed by the courts of said nations. Costs, including compensation of the referees, shall be made a part of the award, and be paid by such railroad company. In case the referees can not agree, then any two of them are authorized to make the award. Either party being dissatisfied with the finding of the referees shall have the right, within ninety days after the making of the award and notice of the same, to appeal by original petition to the district court for the western district of Arkansas or the district of Kansas, which courts shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the subject-matter of said petition, according to the laws of the State in which the same shall be heard provided for determining the damage when property is taken for railroad purposes. If upon the hearing of said appeal the judgment of the court shall be for a larger sum than the award of the referees, the cost of said appeal shall be adjudged against the railroad company. If the judgment of the court shall be for the same sum as the award of the referees, then the costs shall be adjudged against the appellant. If the judgment of the court shall be for a smaller sum than the award of the referees, then the costs shall be adjudged against the party claiming damages. When proceedings have been commenced in court the railway company shall pay double the amount of the award into court to abide the judgment thereof, and then have the right to enter upon the property sought to be condemned and proceed with the construction of the railroad.

SEC. 4. That said railroad company shall not charge the inhabitants of said Territory a greater rate of freight than the rate authorized by the laws of the State of Kansas for services or transportation of the same kind: Provided, That passenger rates on said railway shall not exceed 3 cents per mile. Congress hereby reserves the right to regulate the charges for freight and passengers on said railway and messages on said telegraph and telephone lines until a State government or governments shall exist in said Territory within the limits of which said railway, or a part thereof, shall be located; and then such State government or governments shall be authorized to fix and regulate the cost of transportation of persons and freights within their respective limits by said railway; but Congress expressly reserves the right to fix and regulate at all times the cost of such transportation by said railway or said company whenever such transportation shall extend from one State into another, or shall extend into more than one State: Provided, however, That the rate of such transportation of passengers, local or interstate, shall not exceed the rate above expressed: And provided further, That said railway company shall carry the mail at such prices as Congress may by law provide; and until such rate is fixed by law the Postmaster-General may fix the rate of compensation.

SEC. 5. That said railway company shall pay to the Secretary of the Interior, for the benefit of the particular nations or tribes through whose lands said main line and branches may be located, the sum of $50, in addition to compensation provided for in this act for property taken and damages done to individual occupants by the construction of the railway, for each mile of railway that it may construct in said Territory, said payments to be made in installments of $500 as each 10 miles of road is graded: Provided, That if the general council of said nations and tribes through whose lands said railway may be located shall, within four months after the filing of maps of definite location as set forth in section 6 of this act, dissent from the allowances provided for in this section, and shall certify the same to the Secretary of the Interior, then all compensation to be paid to such dissenting nation or tribe under the provisions of this act shall be determined as provided in section 3 for the determination of the compensation to be paid to the individual occupant of lands, with the right of appeal to the courts upon the same terms, conditions, and requirements as therein provided: Provided further, That the amount awarded or adjudged to be paid by said railway company for said dissenting nation or tribe shall be in lieu of the compensation that said nation or tribe would be entitled to receive under the foregoing provision. Said company shall also pay, so long as said Territory is owned and occupied by the Indians, to the Secretary of the Interior the sum of $15 per annum for each mile of railway it shall construct in the said Territory. The money paid to the Secretary of the Interior under the provisions of this act shall be apportioned by him, in accordance with the laws and treaties now in force between the United States and said nations or tribes, according to the number of miles of railway that may be constructed by said railway company through their lands: Provided, That Congress shall have the right, so long as said lands are occupied and possessed by said nation or tribe, to impose such additional taxes upon said railroad as it may deem just and proper for their benefit; and any Territory or State hereafter formed through which said railway shall have been established may exercise the like power as to such part of said railway as may lie within its limits. Said railway company shall have the right to survey and locate its railway immediately after the passage of this act.

SEC. 6. That said company shall cause maps showing the route of its located line through said Territory to be filed in the office of the Secretary of the Interior, and also to be filed in the office of the principal chief of each of the nations or tribes through whose lands said railway may be located; and after the filing of said maps no claim for a subsequent settlement and improvement upon the right of way shown by said maps shall be valid as against said company: Provided, That when a map showing any portion of said railway company's located line is filed as herein provided for, said company shall commence grading said located line within six months thereafter, or such location shall be void, and said location shall be approved by the Secretary of the Interior in sections of 25 miles before construction of any such section shall be begun.

SEC. 7. That the officers, servants, and employés of said company necessary to the construction and management of said road shall be allowed to reside, while so engaged, upon such right of way, but subject to the provisions of the Indian intercourse laws, and such rules and regulations as may be established by the Secretary of the Interior in accordance with said intercourse laws.

SEC. 8. That the United States circuit and district courts for the western district of Arkansas and the district of Kansas, and such other courts as may be authorized by Congress, shall have, without reference to the amount in controversy, concurrent jurisdiction over all controversies arising between said Chicago, Kansas and Nebraska Railway Company and the nation and tribe through whose territory said railway shall be constructed. Said courts shall have like jurisdiction, without reference to the amount in controversy, over all controversies arising between the inhabitants of said nation or tribe and said railway company; and the civil jurisdiction of said courts is hereby extended within the limits of said Indian Territory, without distinction as to citizenship of the parties, so far as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 9. That said railway company shall build at least 50 miles of its railway in said Territory within three years after the passage of this act, or the rights herein granted shall be forfeited as to that portion not built; that said railroad company shall construct and maintain continually all road and highway crossings and necessary bridges over said railway wherever said roads and highways do now or may hereafter cross said railway's right of way, or may be by the proper authorities laid out across the same.

SEC. 10. That the said Chicago, Kansas and Nebraska Railway Company shall accept this right of way upon the express condition, binding upon itself, its successors and assigns, that they will neither aid, advise, nor assist in any effort looking towards the changing or extinguishing the present tenure of the Indians in their land, and will not attempt to secure from the Indian nation any further grant of land, or its occupancy, than is hereinbefore provided: Provided, That any violation of the condition mentioned in this section shall operate as a forfeiture of all the rights and privileges of said railway company under this act.

SEC. 11. That all mortgages executed by said railway company conveying any portion of its railroad, with its franchises, that may be constructed in said Indian Territory, shall be recorded in the Department of the Interior, and the record thereof shall be evidence and notice of their execution, and shall convey all rights and property of said company as therein expressed.

SEC. 12. That Congress may at any time amend, add to, alter, or repeal this act; and the right of way herein and hereby granted shall not be assigned or transferred in any form whatever prior to the construction and completion of the road, except as to mortgages or other liens that may be given or secured thereon to aid in the construction thereof.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. BUCHANAN. It is.

Mr. PETERS. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered?

The SPEAKER. Does the Chair understand the gentleman to move to suspend the rules and pass the bill, or to pass it with the amendments?

Mr. PETERS. With the amendments.

Mr. RANDALL. Let us hear the amendments.

The amendments were read, as follows:

In section 1, line 14, strike out "Hunewell" and insert "Caldwell." Also strike out "Washita," in line 16, and insert "Reno;" and after the words "in the direction of Galveston, Texas," in lines 17 and 18, insert "and also in a southwesterly direction to the southern line of said Territory in the direction of Cisco, in the State of Kansas."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

Mr. RANDALL. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The Chair will appoint the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PETERS] and the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN] to act as tellers.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 159, noes 4.

The SPEAKER. The ayes have it, and there is a second. Under the rules thirty minutes are allowed for debate, fifteen minutes in support of the motion and fifteen minutes in opposition to it. [Cries of "Vote! Vote!"]

Mr. PETERS. I reserve my time, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I shall occupy but a few minutes in calling the attention of the House to what seemed to me to be some defects in this bill. In the first place the bill seems to be open to the objection which is sometimes made to bills in chancery, the objection of multifariousness. It seems to give not merely the right of way for a single railroad through the Indian Territory, but as printed it gives a right of way for two railroads within that Territory, and as proposed to be amended it gives a right of way for three railroads.

The starting and the stopping points are not located with the definiteness that ought to be found in a bill of this character. It is true that the location when once made and filed with the Secretary of the Interior can not be changed; but I do not hesitate to say that under the language of this bill we give a roving commission to this company to go almost anywhere they please within the confines of the Indian Territory. During the present Congress we have passed seven or eight bills granting rights of way through that Territory.

We have some ten or twelve more upon the Calendar awaiting action. This is one of a series, the effect of which must necessarily be to destroy the Indian Territory as a reservation to the Indian tribes. Last summer it was my privilege to make a journey through that Territory, and as I rode along in the cars in conversation with the chief of the Creek Nation I asked him why it was that no more improvements were visible along the line of the railroad. He said that ever since the railroad has gone through the Territory our farmers have been compelled to move miles away because of the destruction of their cattle by the cars.

There is in this bill no provision for fencing this railway anywhere along its line from one end to the other. There is no provision by which an Indian farmer whose crops may be destroyed by fire communicated by the locomotives may be recompensed. He is driven to seek his remedy in a United States court in Kansas or in Texas, far from his home, is thus subjected to great expense for witnesses, and is obliged to have his case tried by a strange jury in a strange place.

The provision with reference to the condemnation of improvements is not guarded as it should be. We all understand, I suppose, the peculiar nature of title in the Indian Territory, the fee being in the United States, the collective use in the tribe, and the title to the improvement in the individual farmer. Whilst this bill makes provision for recompense to the tribe—small it is true, but nevertheless something by way of recompense—it provides that for the improvements of the Indian farmer there shall be a condemnation by three persons—appointed how? One by the President of the United States, one by the railroad company, and the third by the chief of the tribe. If the railroad company is to have a representative upon that board, I ask why, in common fairness, the Indian farmer should not have his representative as well? The chief may not be his choice; and we do know that sometimes chiefs are liable to be used for purposes other than proper.

There is another question deeper than all these matters of detail—a question as to the right of the Congress of the United States to grant this right of way through this Territory without the consent of these Indian tribes. I read from a memorial presented to the present Congress by the representatives of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations. They say:

Although it is clear that the right of eminent domain over the Indian Territory is vested in the United States, and that this right is incapable of alienation while the Territory remains subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, it is, at the same time, certain that in the treaty of April 28, 1866, the United States gave their implied promise not to exercise that right any further for the benefit of railway corporations. Only in a case where great and urgent public interests require a line of railway between given points through the Indian Territory can the United States be justified in exercising the right of eminent domain in favor of a railway corporation, even in the absence of this implied promise of the treaty of 1866.

I say that if this bill passes without some provision for obtaining the consent of the tribes through whose territory this road is to be extended it will pass in violation of treaty obligations.

I have nothing more to say upon this subject. I have no hope of defeating the passage of the bill. So many bills of this character have already passed without question, so many are pressing behind this, with their great and their allied interests, that I have no doubt this bill will pass, making the way easier for those which are to come after it. But I feel that my duty as a representative of the people would not have been discharged if I had not uttered here my protest against the spoliation of the domain granted to these Indians and the violation of the plighted faith of the United States of America.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Speaker, this bill, which has been carefully examined by the Committee on Indian Affairs, is identical in form with bills passed by this House in the Forty-eighth Congress, and which received the Executive approval. It has been urged that we shall have an immediate vote upon this measure, and therefore I will not occupy any more time but will call for the vote.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Will the gentleman state why it is that this one railroad company desires three different directions for its tracks through the Territory?

Mr. PETERS. The bill embraces provision for only two different tracks——

Mr. BUCHANAN. Three.

Mr. PETERS. I beg the gentleman's pardon; only two—one directly south through the Territory in the direction of Galveston, Tex.; the other through what is known as "No Man's Land," in the direction of Sisco, Tex.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. PETERS to suspend the rules and pass the bill with the amendments, there were—ayes 106, noes 36.

Mr. RANDALL. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint as tellers——

Mr. PETERS. I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER (after a count). In the opinion of the Chair, a sufficient number have risen to order the yeas and nays.

Mr. PETERS. I withdraw the demand.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I renew it.

The SPEAKER. In the opinion of the Chair, a sufficient number have risen; and the yeas and nays are ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 159, nays 44, not voting 115; as follows:

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, in compliance with the request of the House, furnished a duplicate engrossed copy of the bill (S. 2225) to indemnify certain subjects of the Chinese Empire for losses sustained by the violence of a mob at Rock Springs, in the Territory of Wyoming, in September, 1885.

ENGROSSED BILL MISLAID.

The SPEAKER. An engrossed bill has been mislaid, and the Clerk will read the resolution which is rendered necessary.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate be requested to return to the House of Representatives a bill of the House (H. R. 8976) to incorporate the Washington Cable Railway Company of the District of Columbia.

The resolution was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING, DETROIT, MICH.

Mr. MAYBURY. I move that the rules be suspended and the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 1131) entitled "An act to amend an act to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Detroit, Mich.," approved March 2, 1885, and the same be passed, with amendments proposed by the House Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. This bill amends the bill passed by the last Congress, and increases the limit of that bill by $125,000.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted &c., That an act entitled "An act to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Detroit, Mich.," approved March 2, 1885, being chapter 314 of volume 23 of the Statutes of the United States, be amended so that the first section of said act shall read as follows:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase a suitable lot of land in the city of Detroit, county of Wayne, and State of Michigan, and cause to be erected on the ground so purchased a building suitable for the accommodation of the courts of the United States, of the custom-house, post-office, pension-office, and other Government offices in that city. The plans, specifications, and full estimates for said building shall be previously made and approved according to law, and shall not exceed for the site and building complete the sum of $1,025,000: Provided, That the site shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire in adjacent buildings by an open space of not less than 40 feet, including streets and alleys; and no money appropriated for this purpose shall be available until a valid title to the site for said building shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Michigan shall have ceded to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the ownor thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein: Provided, That if the Secretary of the Treasury shall deem it advisable to use for said purpose the site now owned by the United States, upon part of which the post-office and custom-house building now stands, he may do so; and should he further deem said site insufficient, he may enlarge the same by the purchase of additional adjoining ground: Provided, however, That if a new site shall be purchased for said building as hereinbefore authorized, it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury, after the site for said building shall have been purchased, to cause a plan and specifications of said building to be prepared, which said plan and specifications shall not involve an expenditure in the erection and completion of said building, and the approaches thereto, exceeding the portion of said $1,025,000 remaining after the site of said building shall have been paid for; and no plan of said building shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury involving an expenditure exceeding the sum so remaining after paying for the site of said building: And provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be construed in any event to increase the cost of the new site and building, including approaches, when completed, beyond the sum of $1,025,000, as provided in this section."

Mr. COWLES. I move that the House do now adjourn. [Cries of "No!"]

The House divided; and there were—ayes 10, noes 86.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. BLAND. There is a misunderstanding as to the amount in the bill. Some say it is a million of dollars and some $1,125,000.

Mr. RANDALL. What is the increase?

Mr. MAYBURY. One hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars, as recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury, who stopped the work in order that the increase might be made by Congress.

The SPEAKER. If no second is demanded the question will be put on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan to suspend the rules and pass the bill as amended by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The rules were suspended and the bill was passed (two-thirds voting in favor thereof).

Mr. COWLES moved that the House do now adjourn.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 27, noes 64.

So the House refused to adjourn.

PUBLIC BUILDING, TROY, N. Y.

Mr. BURLEIGH. I move to suspend the rules and discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of a bill (H. R. 7775) to increase the appropriation for the erection of a public building at Troy, N. Y., and pass the same.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the amount heretofore fixed as the limit of cost for the erection of a public building by the United States Government at Troy, N. Y., be, and the same is hereby, increased to $300,000, and that sum is hereby fixed as the limit of cost for the erection of said building and for the payment for the site thereof; and said additional sum is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be used and expended for the purposes provided in this act.

SEC. 2. That the officers of the United States Government having charge of the erection of public buildings are required to be governed by the limitation hereby prescribed in making plans and contracts for the erection of said building.

The SPEAKER. Is there a second demanded?

Mr. COWLES. I demand a second.

The SPEAKER appointed as tellers Mr. COWLES and Mr. BURLEIGH.

Mr. BURLEIGH. I ask, by unanimous consent, that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. COWLES. I do not object if it is the distinct understanding after this bill is disposed of the House will adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not entertain any such condition.

Mr. RANDALL. I object to any bargain, as the next is a public bill which ought to be considered.

The SPEAKER. The second will be considered as ordered; and under the rule, thirty minutes will be allowed for debate. [Cries of "Vote!"]

The rules were suspended and the bill was passed (two-thirds voting in favor thereof).

And then, on motion of Mr. MCMILLIN (at 5 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

Joint resolution requesting Congress of the United States to remove the arrears-of-pension limit, and to pension survivors of rebel prisons, and soldiers and sailors who are disabled and dependent or who are sixty-two years of age.

Whereas the arrears-of-pension act passed by the Congress of the United States in the year 1879 provides that all pensions granted on application filed on or after July 1, 1880, shall commence from the date of filing such application; and

Whereas many brave and disabled soldiers were denied arrears under this act, and without any cause for this exclusion; and

Whereas pensions granted should be commensurate with the period of disability, without regard to the time of filing such application: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the senate and house of representatives of the State of Michigan, That the Congress of the United States be requested to repeal so much of the pension laws of 1879 as relates to the arrears limit, and that the act be so amended as to remove the limit altogether; and further, that the laws be so amended as to grant pensions to survivors of rebel prisons, without asking proof that disability was due to imprisonment, and to pension all honorably-discharged soldiers and sailors now disabled and self-dependent, or who are sixty-two years of age, or who may hereafter become disabled and self-dependent or arrive at the age of sixty-two years.

And be it further resolved, That we indorse the recommendations of the national pension committee of the Grand Army of the Republic.

Resolved, That the governor be requested to forward copies of this resolution to our Representatives in the Congress of the United States.

GOVERNMENT GROUND IN NEWPORT, R. I.

Mr. HAWLEY. I report from the Committee on Military Affairs the bill (S. 1154) to authorize the city of Newport, R. I., to use the site of Fort Greene as a public park, which came from the House of Representatives with an amendment, in which the committee recommends concurrence. I ask unanimous consent to have that concurrence adopted by the Senate now.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the amendments of the House of Representatives, which were, in line 6, after the word "park," to strike out "during the pleasure of Congress;" and at the end of the bill to insert:

Provided, That such use of said property shall cease and be terminated whenever the Secretary of War shall elect and give notice of such election to the public authorities of said city; and upon such termination the United States may enter and reoccupy the same as upon a lease terminated; but no right or claim to damage by reason of such termination and reoccupation, nor for any cause growing out of any improvement made or other thing done by the said city under the right conferred by this act, shall accrue to said city or to any person against the United States, or any agent or officer thereof;

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to allow the city of Newport, State of Rhode Island, to use the land belonging to the United States upon which is situated Fort Greene, in said city, as a public park, and under such conditions as the Secretary of War may prescribe: Provided, That such use of said property shall cease and be terminated whenever the Secretary of War shall elect and give notice of such election to the public authorities of said city; and upon such termination the United States may enter and reoccupy the same as upon a lease terminated; but no right or claim to damage by reason of such termination and reoccupation, nor for any cause growing out of any improvement made or other thing done by the said city under the right conferred by this act, shall accrue to said city or to any person against the United States, or any agent or officer thereof.

Mr. HAWLEY. The amendments are eminently proper and I ask that the Senate concur in them.

The amendments were concurred in.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask that the joint resolution be read at length. It is very brief.

The joint resolution was read the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled, That any and all diplomatic and consular correspondence and accompanying documents, which shall have remained on file in the legations or consulates of any of the diplomatic or consular representatives of the United States, upon any subject which shall have been finally determined and settled for the period of one year, shall be forwarded by the head of any such legation or consulate to the State Department at Washington, D. AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon, submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

SURVEY OF RAILROAD LANDS IN MONTANA.

Mr. VAN WYCK submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations be requested to present and have read in the Senate any communication received from the Commissioner of the General Land Office showing the disposition of moneys appropriated heretofore for survey of public lands bearing upon the survey of railroad lands and of lands in the State of Nevada referred to in the debates in the Senate reported in the RECORD of February 2 and 3.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. ALLISON. I have none whatever. I have a letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office; I suppose that is what the Senator refers to. Does the Senator desire to have it read?

Mr. VAN WYCK. In the discussion of the question referred to in the resolution, as recorded in the RECORD of the 2d and 3d of February, appeared a statement which I at the time thought was strange, and I so expressed myself, because I thought the sympathies of the Commissioner of the General Land Office were in the direction of surveys such as we were seeking to have made. Therefore, upon desiring to know from the Commissioner of the General Land Office his attitude in that matter, I was informed that a letter had been written to the Committee on Appropriations fully explaining his position and what he had done in the matter; and I thought the easiest way to get that information before the country was to have the letter produced so that it might be read in the Senate and then go into the RECORD, as the charges had gone out, which were specific charges, that he had neglected his duty in using the money for certain surveys, and it was due to him and due to the public that a statement or explanation of the fact should be made known and appear in the RECORD.

Mr. ALLISON. I was not aware that any charges or statements had been made derogatory to the administration of the Land Office in that particular. I received a letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, addressed to me as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and if any Senator desires I will very gladly bring it in to-morrow morning and have it spread on the record.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I will not press a vote on the resolution after the statement of the chairman of the committee. The resolution can go over until to-morrow, when the letter can be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will go over.

Mr. VEST. I want to say a word before the subject is dismissed.

I was very much surprised to receive a letter day before yesterday referring to an amendment which I had offered to the sundry civil bill appropriating $25,000 for the survey of railroad lands in Montana. The writer of the letter seemed to think that the amendment had been offered in the interest of the railroads. Instead of being in the interest of the railroads, it was just exactly what the railroads did not want and what they had been seeking to prevent. Those railroad lands now inside of the railroad grants are not subject to taxation by the Territory of Montana. The amendment was prepared by the Delegate from Montana, and I offered it at his request in order to subject the lands to taxation.

I wish to say further that I was not in the Senate at the time. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, raised the point of order on the amendment and it went out. Afterward the Senator from Nebraska (I happened to be absent on committee service) offered the amendment again, and I see from the RECORD it was adopted in a nebulous sort of fashion. I mean by that that it was not specified that $25,000 additional was to be appropriated for the survey of the railroad lands in Montana. It is not specified that the money shall be applied to that purpose, but the Senator from Nebraska said that the intention was that this additional appropriation should go to that purpose, and the chairman of the committee said that he so understood it.

Now, the important point is to know whether the Commissioner of the General Land Office will apply the money to that purpose or not. All that is obligatory upon him in the matter is what was said here in debate, and of course that is not mandatory, and he can follow it or not, as he chooses.

If anything that I can say will have any effect in making that money available for that purpose I want to say it; but I regret very much that the appropriation was not put in such terms that the money would be appropriated for that particular purpose specifically.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say in response to the Senator from Missouri that it is perfectly competent for the Commissioner of the General Land Office or the Secretary of the Interior to assign any money that we may appropriate for the survey of public lands to the survey of these particular lands, and it is a matter of administration. My objection to the amendment, as I stated at the time, was——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair must remind the Senator from Iowa that there is nothing before the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. So I understand. I ask unanimous consent just to finish the sentence.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa will proceed, there being no objection.

Mr. ALLISON. I was aware that I was not quite in order, but the Senator from Missouri raised the question, and I desired to respond.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will not raise the question of order.

Mr. ALLISON. If we undertake to make special appropriations for particular land surveys we shall be constantly making these special appropriations. I think it is wiser to make general appropriations and let the Land Office under a wise administration of its duties survey the lands which ought to be surveyed.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I think I was misunderstood by the Chair. I do not desire to withdraw the resolution, but only ask that it may go over until to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution goes over until to-morrow.

FORT BROOKE MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. CALL. If there is no further routine business I will move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 2814, Order of Business 1665. I desire to ask the indulgence of the Senate that the bill may be considered if it shall provoke no argument or discussion. I wish to state that it relates to the donation of a small piece of land immediately adjacent to the town of Tampa, in Florida, for educational purposes, and that it is very important that the land should be disposed of in some way so that access may be had to it by the people there, and that it may be available for purposes of settlement.

Mr. INGALLS. Is it part of the Fort Brooke Military Reservation?

Mr. CALL. Yes, sir.

Mr. INGALLS. Will not the Senator be good enough to state the facts in connection with it?

Mr. CALL. The only facts that I know of in connection with it are that the town has petitioned for this donation for educational purposes and that there is a scrip location upon it which it has been proposed to settle by some arrangement if it should be approved by the Interior Department. The bill provides for the land being taken up, and an amendment which I propose to offer also provides that the town, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, may sell a portion of the reservation and apply it to the compromise settlement of any homestead or other claims which may be alleged to be against it.

Mr. INGALLS. Is the bill before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Florida rose to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. INGALLS. Could we have the bill read for information first?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The business now in order is House bills under the rule adopted on motion of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], pending which the Senator from Florida moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 2814) to donate to the town of Tampa, Fla., the Fort Brooke Military Reservation for the benefit of free schools, and for other purposes.

Mr. VOORHEES. I desire to call up——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is not debatable nor amendable. The question is on the motion to proceed to the consideration of the bill. [Putting the question.] The noes appear to have it.

Mr. CALL. I ask for a division.

Mr. HARRIS. I hope the Senator from Florida will not insist on wasting time.

Mr. CALL. I have——

Mr. INGALLS. Is there not a pending order for the consideration of House bills?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is a pending order, but the pending order may be set aside, on motion, by the Senate.

Mr. CALL. I shall not press the motion at this time in view of the circumstances.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF WASHINGTON TERRITORY.

Mr. VOORHEES. I do not pretend to know enough about the rules to know exactly where my resolution is, which I offered on Saturday. It went over to Monday, and yesterday it went over until to-day, and it is on the Calendar. It is a resolution to discharge the Committee on Territories from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 6966) to change the time of the meeting of the Legislative Assembly of Washington Territory. If it is in order, I ask that the resolution may be taken up and considered at this time.

Mr. HARRISON. I wish to say to my colleague with reference to the resolution, that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] who is not in his seat this morning, was the chairman of the subcommittee of the Committee on Territories having that matter in charge, and he desired to be present when the resolution was considered. I understand that he is detained at home by reason of the sickness of his wife.

Mr. BUTLER. I was on the subcommittee with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT]. Of course I do not want anything done in his absence if he will be back in a reasonable time. Will the Senator from Indiana indicate when the Senator from Connecticut will be likely to be in his seat?

Mr. HARRISON. He was in the Senate yesterday and expected the resolution to come up. He said to me then that his wife was ill. He did not know whether he would be in the Senate to-day. His colleague can probably answer for him.

Mr. HAWLEY. Two afternoons after the morning business was over he has gone home because of the illness of his wife, and I do not know whether he is going to be here this afternoon. I have no doubt his absence is due to the same cause.

Mr. BUTLER. As I am a member of the Committee on Territories, and a member of the subcommittee with the Senator from Connecticut, I should like very much indeed to have the matter disposed of. Therefore, if the Senator from Indiana will permit me, I give notice that the resolution will be called up to-morrow morning if possible. I am very anxious to get rid of it, as far as I am concerned.

A bill (S. 712) for the erection of a public building at Augusta, Ga.

MAJ. G. W. CANDEE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first House bill in order under the special order will be stated.

The bill (H. R. 633) for the relief of Maj. G. W. Candee was announced as first in order.

Mr. INGALLS. Was there not a House bill reported from the District Committee passed over yesterday to await the arrival of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE]? If so, I ask that it may now be taken up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There was a bill passed over yesterday, which will be now considered if it is called for.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator from North Carolina I see is in his seat.

ST. MARK'S PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1993) for the relief of St. Mark's Protestant Episcopal church.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill was read yesterday, and also the report of the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. HARRIS. The trouble yesterday grew out of the fact that the printed report showed apparently the necessity of an amendment in the description of a certain lot, and the bill contained no such amendment. The report did not give the information which enabled any member of the committee to supply it. I therefore asked that it go over until the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] who reported the bill should be present.

Mr. VANCE. I have not seen the bill since it was reported. I do not know what the objection was.

Mr. HARRIS. I suggest that the bill be informally passed over until the Senator from North Carolina can look at the report.

Mr. VANCE. I have just sent for the papers.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over for the present.

MAJ. G. W. CANDEE.

The bill (H. R. 633) for the relief of Maj. G. W. Candee was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to Maj. G. W. Candee, paymaster United States Army, of $2,650, being the amount stolen from him at Fort Arbuckle, Indian Territory, in the fall of 1869, and restored by him out of private funds; but the Court of Claims is to first find the loss of the funds to have been without fault or negligence on the part of the officer.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRYOR N. LEA.

The bill (H. R. 79) for the relief of Pryor N. Lea was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to Pryor N. Lea of $1,919, in full discharge of his claim against the Government of the United States for rescuing three United States soldiers from a sandbar on the Mississippi River on the 1st of January, 1864, and for board, medical aid, and nursing given them while unable to return to their command, and also for board furnished other United States soldiers while guarding these sick soldiers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NATIONAL CEMETERY NEAR DANVILLE, VA.

The bill (H. R. 9918) to provide for grading and paving the approaches to the national cemetery near Danville, Va., was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It makes an appropriation of $10,000 for the purpose of grading and paving Lee street, Danville, Va., along the entire front of the national cemetery, to its intersection with Jefferson street, and Jefferson street to its intersection with Paxton street, and Paxton street to its intersection with Holbrook street. Before any of the money shall be expended the city council of Danville is to pass and enter of record an ordinance pledging the city to keep in good condition and repair the approaches to the national cemetery thus improved by the Government.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DONATION OF CONDEMNED GUN-CARRIAGES.

The bill (H. R. 1143) authorizing the Secretary of War to deliver to the Somerville Grand Army of the Republic, of Somerville, Mass., four condemned gun-carriages, to be used for monumental purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

J. R. MARTIN.

The bill (H. R. 707) for the relief of J. R. Martin was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to direct the Postmaster-General to credit the account of J. R. Martin, late postmaster at Perry, Kans., with the sum of $125.62, on account of moneys received from the sale of postage-stamps and the rent of boxes, and the further sum of $278.35, on account of moneys received from the sale of money-orders; these amounts having been stolen from the safe in the post-office at Perry on the night of December 22, 1883.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to inquire if there is a provision there to refund money lost which had been received for the sale of postage-stamps.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be again read.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

Mr. SAULSBURY. It has not been customary in the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads to make any allowance for losses of money arising from the sale of postage-stamps. That is a subject over which the Postmaster-General himself has complete control, and this bill proposes to reverse the practice of Congress in that regard for a number of years. When postage-stamps have been sold the receipts become the money of the postmaster, and he can deposit it in bank if he sees fit. It is different from postal-order money, because the postmaster is compelled to keep the postal-order money on hand to meet the postal orders that come to his office; but if the postmaster fails to take proper precautions to take care of the money arising from sales of postage-stamps, that is his own loss. To that provision of the bill I am opposed. I move to strike out that provision which applies to money from postage-stamps.

Mr. SAWYER. I hope that will not be done. The committee have examined the case very carefully. Frequently they have not reported bills where postal money was lost, but within the last few months they thought they were too severe in that respect, and hence adopted a different rule from that heretofore prevailing. I hope the bill will not be amended.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I have no doubt that the loss has been sustained as represented by the postmaster, but for the twelve years that I have been connected with the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads we have invariably refused to pass bills in that committee to restore the money lost which had been received for postage-stamps for two reasons. First, it removes the precaution from the postmasters to guard well their funds, and if you pass this bill then all the claims that we have rejected in the last ten, fifteen, or twenty years will come up, having as much equity and claim on Congress as this. It will open up all the back cases which have been disposed of, and they will be coming back to Congress for the same relief that is given in this case. I therefore move to strike out that provision relative to postage-stamps.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 5, after the word "sum," it is proposed to strike out "of $125.62, on account of moneys received from the sale of postage-stamps and the rent of boxes and the further sum;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Postmaster-General of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to credit the account of J. R. Martin, late postmaster at Perry, Kans., with the sum of $278.35, on account of moneys received from the sale of money-orders; the above amount having been stolen from the safe in the post-office at Perry, Kans., on the night of December 22, 1883.

Mr. SAWYER. Before that is voted on I should like to have the report of the committee read. ["Oh, no!"] I withdraw the request. We have reported no bills from that committee where the Postmaster-General did not say that the loss occurred without any fault or negligence on the part of the postmaster. Of course, it is immaterial to me; but I obeyed the instructions of the committee in reporting the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Delaware. [Putting the question.] The nays appear to have it.

Mr. SAULSBURY. This is a precedent now which, if set, will come up hereafter to plague us. Innumerable claims of this character have been passed by. The general policy of the Post-Office Department is not to allow them, and the general law provides that it shall not allow them. This is an alteration of the general law on that subject. We have now for the last twelve years to my knowledge, in the Post-Office Committee, refused to depart from the general provisions of the law in that regard. This is to become a precedent not only to bring back all the cases we have passed over where there has been a disallowance for loss of money arising from the sale of postage stamps, but if we pass this bill of one hundred and odd dollars it will cost the Government thousands upon thousands of dollars. Besides, it will tend to remove that precaution from the postmasters which they ought to exercise over their funds.

In reference to postal money-order funds, they are compelled to keep those by them in order to meet the money-orders that come to their offices, but they are not compelled to keep over the money which they have derived from the sale of postage stamps. They can put it in the vaults of a bank. That becomes their own money. It is a very small matter, but it will be a precedent that will cost this Government a large amount of money, not only for the losses that may occur in the future, but in bringing back all the cases which have been heretofore disposed of and refunding losses of this character. I hope, therefore, the bill will not pass.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator object to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I object to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the next case will be reported.

Mr. SAWYER. I move to proceed with the consideration of the bill notwithstanding the objection.

Mr. HARRIS. That is legitimate under the rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is in order. The Senator from Wisconsin moves that the Senate proceed with the consideration of this bill, the objection to the contrary notwithstanding.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Mr. President, this case is not without merit. The committee considered it carefully, and in view of the possible opposition that might be assumed in the Senate that it would be establishing a dangerous precedent, among other documents submitted to the committee was a letter from the assistant attorney-general for the Post-Office Department, and that letter, which briefly condenses the preceding subject-matter that is embraced in the committee's report, is as follows:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF ASSISTANT ATTORNEY-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., March 2, 1886.

SIR: In compliance with your verbal request of this morning, I have the honor to transmit herewith a copy of the report made February 28, 1884, by John M. Crowell, post-office inspector, concerning the burglary of the post-office at Perry, Kans., December 22-23, 1883.

It appears from the records of this office that Joseph R. Martin, who was postmaster at said office at the time of the burglary, made claim for credits of $423.51, on account of money-order funds, and of $96.93 on account of postage-stamps lost by the said burglary.

The amount claimed for stamps was allowed by Postmaster-General Gresham, March 28, 1884, and $145.16 was allowed for the money-order funds. From the memoranda in the case, it appears that the remainder of the amount claimed on account of money-order funds was disallowed, for the reason that Mr. Martin had failed to remit the same to his depository, as required by section 1081, Postal Laws and Regulations of 1879, the failure to so remit being so regarded as having contributed to the loss.

It appears from the records of the Auditor's Office that Mr. Martin had made a remittance December 20, 1883 (two days previous to the burglary), and it is alleged, as a reason for not making remittances on the 21st and 22d of December, that he was ill, which statement seems to be supported by the statement of the inspector.

The disallowance of $298.33 of the amount claimed appears to have been the result of a very strict application of the regulation referred to, and not because of any willful delay or negligence on the part of Mr. Martin.

Very respectfully,

EDWIN E. BRYANT,
Assistant Attorney-General, Post-Office Department.

Hon. WILLIAM WARNER,
House of Representatives.

I submit, Mr. President, that that letter of the Assistant Attorney-General presents a fair case, under the facts of which we may very properly extend the relief proposed by this bill to that postmaster.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will put the question again on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY].

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RE-ARRANGEMENT OF ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S DEPARTMENT.

Mr. SEWELL. I ask to take from the table the bill in relation to the Adjutant-General's Office, for the purpose of reference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will lay before the Senate the bill referred to by the Senator from New Jersey, being the bill (H. R. 10804) to effect a rearrangement of grades of office in the Adjutant-General's Department of the Army.

Mr. SEWELL. That bill has been lying on the table. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SEWELL. I now report the bill favorably from the Committee on Military Affairs, a Senate bill on the same subject in the same terms having been previously reported by the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

FRANCIS M. BELL.

The bill (H. R. 2086) for the relief of Francis M. Bell was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment of whatever claim may be found due and audited by the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department in favor of Francis M. Bell, postmaster at Tyrone, Pa., for clerk-hire from April 30, 1877, to June 30, 1878, not exceeding $525.41.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES W. GOODRICH.

The bill (H. R. 5652) for the relief of James W. Goodrich was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to James W. Goodrich $403.97, to indemnify him for loss of postal funds sustained by him and caused by the robbery of the post-office in Haverhill, Mass., in February, 1884.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SAWYER], who reported this bill, or the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON], why not put in a clause giving the Postmaster-General authority to pass upon and adjudicate claims for losses of this character, the same as for the other kind of losses in the general bill which we passed some years ago? That would relieve Congress of the labor of considering all these individual cases.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I would say in reply to the Senator from Missouri that it may be very well to pass some general bill of that kind, but such a proposition as an amendment to a private bill of this character would hardly be in place. It is a subject, however, that may very well be considered in the committee, and it is possible that it may conclude to report some general bill under which the Postmaster-General may act.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is perfectly in order upon this bill.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Yes, but it would be very much out of place.

Mr. COCKRELL. It would secure the enactment of it at this session and relieve Congress hereafter.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. A general proposition of this kind on a private bill would be hardly germane to it.

Mr. COCKRELL. It has often been done here.

Mr. SAWYER. The committee are considering that subject, and I think they will perhaps report such a bill at this session, and I am decidedly in favor of it, so as to reach these cases.

Mr. COCKRELL. The easiest way is to just put an amendment on one of these bills which has been passed by the House, and then after a conference the matter may be settled.

Mr. SAWYER. I have no objection if the Senator has an amendment prepared.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have sent for a copy of that law, but the page has not got back yet with it.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I think it would be a dangerous proceeding to put an amendment of that kind prepared on the spur of the moment upon a bill of this character, involving as it would such great interests of the Government.

Mr. COCKRELL. It would simply extend the provisions of the existing law to losses of this kind. The other law has been guarded and has been passed upon and acted on for years; and now to simply extend the provisions of that law to this class of cases could, it seems to me, do no possible harm. It would not be enacting a new law, but would be simply making the existing law applicable to this class of cases.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DAVID W. LOW.

The bill (H. R. 5651) for the relief of David W. Low was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for paying to David W. Low $603.90, to indemnify him for loss of postal funds sustained by him and caused by robbery of the post-office in October, 1883.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there a report in that case?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is. The report will be read

The Chief Clerk read the following report submitted by Mr. SAWYER January 12, 1887:

The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5651) for the relief of David W. Low, have examined the same, and report:

That the committee have examined the proofs in this case and are satisfied that the report of the House committee is correct. It is adopted, and is as follows:

"On the night of October 1, 1883, the office of David W. Low, postmaster at Gloucester, Mass., was entered by burglars, who broke into the safe and took and carried away the following property, namely:

Postage-stamps	$584 42
Money-order funds	659 93
Postal funds	727 36

"The postmaster appears to have used due care in the protection of the property, and the loss was through no fault of his.

"The Postmaster-General, on proof of the facts, has credited the postmaster at Gloucester with the loss of stamps and money-order funds, and certifies that he has not allowed the item for postal funds simply because he has no authority in law to make such allowance.

"In view of the premises, the committee are of opinion that this item should be allowed, and report back the bill with a favorable recommendation."

The bill is herewith reported to the Senate with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LYSANDER H. CARROLL.

The bill (H. R. 1455) for the relief of Lysander H. Carroll, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It appropriates $194.24 to reimburse Lysander H. Carroll, late postmaster at Concord, Merrimack County, New Hampshire, for money received for stamps stolen by burglars from the post-office at that place on the night of September 5, 1883.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report in that case be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. SAWYER January 12, 1887:

The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1455) for the relief of Lysander H. Carroll, have examined the same, and report:

That an examination of this case satisfies the committee that the House report is correct. It is adopted, and is as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom House bill 1455 was referred, having considered the same, respectfully report the same back with a recommendation that it do pass.

The accompanying documents are made a part of the report:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF ASSISTANT ATTORNEY-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., January 29, 1884.

SIR: In reply to your inquiries concerning the burglary of the post-office at Concord, N. H., I have the honor to state:

(1) That this Department has absolutely no means of ascertaining the amount of "postal" funds in the possession of a postmaster at a given date.

(2) From the evidence filed in the case, it appeared that the loss occurred through no fault or negligence of the postmaster; and he was therefore allowed a credit of $86.18 for money-order funds, and $534.11 for postage-stamps lost by the burglary referred to.

(3) There has been no evidence filed to show that the postmaster was guilty of any violation of law or regulation touching the custody of such funds.

(4) All papers filed in the case were transmitted on the 12th instant to Hon. ELI SAULSBURY, of the Senate Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, for consideration in connection with a bill similar to the one inclosed.

Very respectfully,

A. A. FREEMAN,
Assistant Attorney-General, Post-Office Department.

Hon. OSSIAN RAY,
House of Representatives.

CONCORD, N. H., January 25, 1886.

SIR: I wish to present, through you, to the House Committee on Claims, a statement relative to my loss by burglars, which occurred September 5, 1883. The Concord post-office is a depository office. A hundred and eighty or more fourth-class postmasters deposit at this office the balance due the Government from them quarterly. The money so received, and when received, is placed in the safe with other postal funds, and deposited in the bank as frequently as the amount is sufficiently large for a deposit. I usually kept my cash deposited up very closely. The safe in the office was purchased and put there by the Post-Office Department, and was placed in the most exposed position, being near the sidewalk, and a gas-jet kept burning during the night within 6 feet of the safe-door. This office is also a paying office of railway postal clerks, who register at this office.

On the last day of August, 1883, I drew my check and took money from the bank sufficient to meet the demands of my monthly pay-roll. Previous to the burglary I had paid all who were on the pay-roll except John E. Skinner, a postal clerk running on the route from Richford, Vt., to Concord, N. H. It being his week off duty, he had not received his pay as usual. The amount, being $75.82, was placed in an envelope and put with the pay-roll, and locked in an iron vault in the safe. This amount, $75.82, was a part of the $194.24 in cash which the burglars took from the safe. Of course it is impossible for me to tell whether the money so stolen was a part of it, postal funds, or money that had been received on deposit from other offices, as my practice was to keep but one package before depositing in the safe-vault. As the $75.82 had been once deposited in the bank and drawn therefrom, it could not possibly be the same money received by me as postal funds.

L. H. CARROLL.

Hon. J. H. GALLINGER,
Washington, D. C.

STATE OF NEW HAMPSHIRE, Merrimack, ss:

JANUARY 25, 1886.

Personally appeared the above-named L. H. Carroll, and made oath that the above statement by him subscribed is true.

Before me,

ROBT. A. RAY, Justice of the Peace.

The bill is herewith reported to the Senate with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRANK SHUTT.

The bill (H. R. 8297) for the relief of Frank Shutt was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to Frank Shutt, postmaster at Litchfield, Ill., $193.40, to reimburse him for postal funds stolen out of his safe on the 10th of November, 1885.

Mr. COCKRELL. I would now suggest to Senators on the Post-Office Committee that a new section be added to this bill which shall authorize the Postmaster-General to adjust claims of this character under the law approved March 17, 1882, giving him the same authority in regard to claims of this class that he has over claims of the class specified in that act. That law was well guarded; it has been in operation now nearly five years, and this would simply extend an existing law without any new provisions or new machinery.

Mr. CULLOM. This bill covers a very small sum of money, and I know all about the merits of the case. It is a House bill, and I hope it will not be amended so as to interfere with its passage.

Mr. COCKRELL. The amendment I suggest does not affect the passage of the bill at all. A conference committee will be appointed, and the matter will of course be adjusted at this session, and two or three days can make no difference. Here are five or six cases now that we have had, and we probably shall have every session of Congress increasing numbers of these cases until the committees will be overburdened with them. We passed, in 1882, a general law covering certain claims for losses. Now why not extend it? It does not interfere with the passage of the bill.

Mr. HALE. If you put on this amendment why not have a committee of conference appointed at once?

Mr. COCKRELL. That is what I say. As soon as the amendment is agreed to there can be a committee of conference, and the matter can be adjusted.

Mr. CULLOM. I do not know that I have any objection—certainly not to a general provision of law on the subject—but it occurs to me that that general provision ought to be outside of a private bill like this.

Mr. COCKRELL. It can not make any difference. Some of the most important legislation in the annals of this country has been on bills of that kind.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri will send up his amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is another bill that I can put it on.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope this bill may be passed.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TERRITORY SOUTH OF KANSAS.

The bill (H. R. 679) to extend the laws of the United States over certain unorganized territory south of the State of Kansas was considered in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and in lieu thereof to insert:

That the laws of the United States, except those providing for pre-emption, timber-culture, and desert-land entries of the public lands, are hereby extended over the unorganized territory south of the States of Kansas and Colorado, and between the Indian Territory and the Territory of New Mexico, and north of Texas, known as the public-land strip; and that for the purpose of the execution of said laws said public-land strip is hereby created a land district, and is attached to the judicial district of Kansas; and the subdivisional lines of townships in said public-land strip may be surveyed under current appropriations for the surveying service, the work to be done under the direction and supervision of the Secretary of the Interior. Until the establishment of civil government in said territory, lands therein may be entered for town-site purposes, for the several use and benefit of the occupants of such town-sites, by such trustee or trustees as may be named by the Secretary of the Interior for that purpose, such entries to be made under the provisions of section 2387 of the Revised Statutes, as near as may be; and when such entries shall have been made, the Secretary of the Interior shall provide by regulation for the proper execution of the trust in favor of the inhabitants of the town site, including the survey of the land into lots, according to the spirit and intent of said section 2387 of the Revised Statutes, whereby the same result would be reached as though the entry had been made by a county judge, and the disposal of the lots in such town-site, and the proceeds of the sale thereof, had been prescribed by the legislative authority of a State or Territory: Provided, That no more than 320 acres shall be embraced in one town-site entry.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] who reported the bill was here just a moment ago, and I called his attention to it, and he said he was awaiting a report from the Interior Department and desired that the bill should keep its place on the Calendar and not be considered this morning. I therefore make that request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the bill will be passed over without prejudice.

CONNECTICUT PORTS OF ENTRY.

The bill (H. R. 9859) to amend sections 2533 and 2534 of the Revised Statutes, and making Hartford, in the State of Connecticut, a port of entry instead of Middletown, was announced as next in order.

Mr. PLATT. The Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] who reported the bill from the Committee on Commerce may as well state the reason why that bill can not be acted on this morning.

Mr. FRYE. The Senator from Connecticut has requested that there be some delay in the consideration of this bill on account of a hearing which is to be had before the Committee on Commerce by vote of the committee touching this bill. Therefore I ask that it may be passed over without objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made if there be no objection.

MOBILE AND OHIO RAILROAD COMPANY ACCOUNTS.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 72) to provide for the settlement of accounts with the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company was announced as next in order.

Mr. CAMERON. I think that bill had better go over in the absence of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. WALTHALL. I appeal to the Senator from Pennsylvania to withdraw his objection. The joint resolution has gone through the Senate once; it has been reported upon twice favorably in the Senate and three times in the House of Representatives.

Mr. CAMERON. I withdraw my objection.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The preamble recites that by act of Congress approved February 27, 1875, entitled "An act to provide for settlement with certain railway companies," the Secretary of War and the Attorney-General were authorized to make such abatements in the accounts of the companies named in the act as they might find just; that the Secretary of War and the Attorney-General having determined and agreed upon a basis for such abatements and settlements, it was found that the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company had so far paid its accounts that the abatements determined upon would not only extinguish the balance claimed against the company, but would also require the return of a portion of the money already paid by it; and that the act not making any appropriation or provision for the return of any money, no settlement was made with the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company as contemplated by the act, and its accounts still remain unadjusted and unsettled.

The resolution therefore authorizes the Secretary of War and the Attorney-General jointly to adjust and finally settle the accounts of the United States with the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company for property received from the United States in the years 1865 and 1866, as provided for in the act of Congress approved February 27, 1875.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

SURETIES OF JOHN HOW.

The bill (H. R. 7648) for the relief of the estate of the late John How, Indian agent, and his sureties, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to release Samuel T. Glover, James O. Broadhead, and Gerard B. Allen, sureties of the late John How, formerly Indian agent at the Western Shoshone agency, Nevada, on the official bond of How, from any and all liabilities of every kind and nature on or growing out of the bond.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ESTATE OF JOEL C. FRAZIER.

The bill (H. R. 898) for the relief of the estate of Joel C. Frazier, deceased, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment of $1,908 to Caleb W. West, administrator de bonis non of the estate of Joel C. Frazier, deceased, late of Harrison County, Kentucky, for quartermaster's stores, consisting of horses, wood, &c., taken from Frazier by the military forces of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

YOUNG WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN HOME.

The bill (H. R. 7083) to incorporate the trustees of the Young Woman's Christian Home in Washington, District of Columbia, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

E. B. DAWSON.

The bill (H. R. 5326) for the relief of E. B. Dawson was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to appropriate to E. B. Dawson $66.52, as relief for damages sustained by him through the breaking open of his safe and stealing therefrom the Government money, in April, 1883, while Dawson was postmaster at Boonton, N. J.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS EASTERN BRANCH OF POTOMAC.

The bill (H. R. 4806) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Eastern Branch of the Potomac River at the foot of Pennsylvania avenue east, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE W. COUSINS.

Mr. HARRIS. Yesterday Order of Business 1717, being the bill (H. R. 4839) for the relief of E. P. McNeal, was informally laid aside because of the absence of a Senator. I now ask that the Senate proceed with its consideration.

Mr. CAMERON. Will not the Senator give way until we take up the next bill on the Calendar?

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator desires it I will postpone my request until that has been disposed of.

The bill (H. R. 2173) for the relief of George W. Cousins was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It is a direction to the Secretary of War to cause the records to be so amended as to remove the charge of desertion from the record of George W. Cousins, late a private in Company K, One hundred and fourth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, and to grant an honorable discharge to him, with all the pay and emoluments due him at date of expiration of his term of service.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

E. P. M'NEAL.

Mr. HARRIS. I move now to proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 1717, passed over informally yesterday.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 4839) for the relief of E. P. McNeal.

Mr. HARRIS. The claimant in this case has died within a month or two. I therefore propose, in line 4, after the word "to," where it occurs the second time, to insert "the personal representatives of," and after the word "McNeal," in the same line, to insert "deceased, late of;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the personal representatives of E. P. McNeal, deceased, late of Hardeman County, Tennessee, the sum of $12,781.81, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the same to be in full compensation for all property taken from the said McNeal by the United States Army during the war.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read "A bill for the relief of the personal representatives of E. P. McNeal."

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments and ask for a conference thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. DOLPH, Mr. SPOONER, and Mr. HARRIS were appointed.

TRANSFER OF APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. HALE. I ask now to take up a bill which was passed over informally in my absence yesterday, Order of Business 1866.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 4083) to empower the Commissioner of Agriculture to transfer certain appropriations.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Appropriations with an amendment, after the word "eighty-five," in line 8, to insert:

And the accounting officers of the Treasury are authorized and directed to allow the suspended account of George B. Loring, late Commissioner of Agriculture, the several sums which were expended by him in the purchase of sorghum seed and beet seed, and for labor in the distribution of the same, from October 1, 1884, to September 30, 1885, inclusive, which expenditures were made from the laboratory fund, so called, and which the First Comptroller of the Treasury has decided not to be properly chargeable to said fund, said allowance not to exceed the sum of $20,807.80.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Commissioner of Agriculture be, and is hereby, authorized to transfer from the unexpended balance of the appropriation for a laboratory, Department of Agriculture, 1885, a sum not to exceed $1,800, to the appropriation for purchase and distribution of valuable seeds, 1885; and the accounting officers of the Treasury are authorized and directed to allow the suspended account of George B. Loring, late Commissioner of Agriculture, the several sums which were expended by him in the purchase of sorghum seed and beet seed, and for labor in the distribution of the same, from October 1, 1884, to September 30, 1885, inclusive, which expenditures were made from the laboratory fund, so called, and which the First Comptroller of the Treasury has decided not to be properly chargeable to said fund, said allowance not to exceed the sum of $20,807.80.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments and ask for a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. HALE, Mr. DAWES, and Mr. GORMAN were appointed.

HENRY A. PAUS.

The next House bill on the Calendar was announced to be the bill (H. R. 1261) for the relief of Henry A. Paus.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I ask that Order of Business 1975, being the bill (S. 1049) for the relief of Clement A. Lounsberry, be taken up. It is a small bill, but it is important to the claimant. It is the next in order on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That can only be done by unanimous consent. The Senator from Iowa moves to proceed to the consideration of the Senate bill named by him.

Mr. MANDERSON. I hope the Senator from Iowa will let the bill be considered that has been stated by the Secretary. It is now regularly in order.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask the Senator from Iowa if there is a House bill he wants to consider similar to the Senate bill he proposes to take up?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I withdraw the motion until after the pending bill is disposed of.

Mr. CONGER. I was rising to inquire about Order of Business 1975. Is it passed?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. That is the bill I just moved to proceed to the consideration of.

Mr. HARRIS. That is a Senate bill.

The bill (H. R. 1261) for the relief of Henry A. Paus was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It is a direction to the Secretary of War to remove the charge of desertion resting upon the military record of Henry A. Paus, late a private in Company K, Nineteenth Regiment Illinois Volunteers, and to issue to Paus an honorable discharge from that organization as of the 20th day of April, 1862.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ST. MARK'S PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

Mr. VANCE. Order of Business 1696, being House bill 1993, was passed over informally on account of my absence from the Chamber. I ask now that it be taken up and passed.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1993) for the relief of St. Mark's Protestant Episcopal church in the District of Columbia.

Mr. VANCE. I wish to say that the statement in the report that there was an amendment needed is a mistake. The bill was reported, as the RECORD shows, without amendment, as it came from the other House; and it was stopped on its passage before in order to make an inquiry as to the discrepancy between the report and the bill in that respect. I have investigated it, and that is the case. It was not amended in the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has already been read at length.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INDIAN NEGOTIATIONS.

Mr. DAWES. I move to take up Order of Business 1637, being the bill (S. 2789) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to negotiate with the Shoshone and Bannock tribes of Indians for the relinquishment of their title to so much of the lands of the Fort Hall reservation, in Idaho Territory, as is required for the uses and purposes of the Utah and Northern Railway Company and the Oregon Short-Line Railway Company, either separately or conjointly. It will involve no debate, I presume.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate is acting under a special order which limits consideration to House bills.

Mr. HARRIS. I think we can get through with them to-day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next House bill will be stated.

FARAN & M'LEAN.

The bill (H. R. 1776) for the relief of Faran & McLean was announced as next in order.

Mr. MILLER. Let us have the report read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the report submitted from the Committee on Claims by Mr. SPOONER, January 19, 1887, but before concluding was interrupted by—

Mr. MILLER. I object to the consideration of the bill. It is unnecessary to continue the reading,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. MORRILL. The last case that has been considered I should like to make an objection to for the present. I want to look at it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has been objected to.

RACHAEL J. FLOYD.

The bill (H. R. 2053) for the relief of Rachael J. Floyd was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The preamble recites that Frank B. Floyd entered the United States naval service as a machinist December 6, 1873; served on the Intrepid and Alarm; was discharged February 21, 1876; immediately re-enlisted as a machinist; served until he was discharged, May 5, 1879; immediately re-enlisted and served until he died, April 25, 1882; and that the deceased at the time of his death had but one month and fourteen days' additional service to perform in order to complete the term of his last enlistment, and in order to entitle him to the gratuity provided under the act approved June 16, 1880, entitled "An act relating to machinists in the Navy." Therefore the bill provides for the payment to Rachael J. Floyd, widow of the deceased, $510, being the proportion earned during the time served of the gratuity for continuous services of the deceased as a machinist in the Navy provided for under the act of June 16, 1880.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

CONVICT LABOR.

The bill (H. R. 1622) to prohibit any officer, agent, or servant of the Government of the United States of America to hire or contract out the labor of prisoners incarcerated for violating the laws of the Government of the United States of America, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It declares that it shall not be lawful for any officer, agent, or servant of the Government of the United States to contract with any person or corporation, or permit any warden, agent, or official of any State prison, penitentiary, jail, or house of correction where criminals of the United States may be incarcerated, to hire or contract out the labor of said criminals, or any part of them, who may hereafter be confined in any prison, jail, or other place of incarceration for violation of any laws of the Government of the United States of America.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. BLAIR January 19, 1887:

The Committee on Education and Labor, to whom was referred House bill 1622, prohibiting the hiring or contracting of convict labor to private individuals, having considered the same, report it favorably, and recommend its passage.

This bill is designed to relieve the law-abiding laborers and producers of this country from the burden of competition with the production now thrown upon the market by combination between private capital, assisted by the State, and cheap labor, made so by its involuntary servitude for crime. It is not aimed at production which may be placed upon the market by virtue of the employment on behalf of the State of criminals whose support would otherwise be wholly charged upon the honest industry of the country.

It is not meant to relieve criminals from hard labor, but to substitute employment by the State itself, with its common interest for all and its responsibility for the humane and reformatory policy toward the criminal classes for the abuses which are invited, and which too often arise from the contract system of which there is such general complaint.

This bill has passed the House of Representatives three times, and the committee feel that public sentiment requires early action by the Senate.

The report of the House committee is appended as a part of the report of your committee.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask unanimous consent that the House report be printed in connection with the Senate committee's report, which has been read, and it makes the House report a part of it, but that has not been read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection it will be so done.

The report of the Committee on Labor of the House of Representatives is as follows:

[House Report No. 217, Forty-ninth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Labor, to whom was referred House bill 1622, respectfully report:

That the bill is identical with the amended bill as it came from the Committee on Labor of the Forty-eighth Congress; that it was accompanied with a carefully drawn report (Report No. 1064, Forty-eighth Congress, first session), and was placed on the Calendar, but failed to be reached. The same reasons which then called for the enactment of such a law still exist. Your committee therefore unanimously recommend its passage.

The Committee on Labor, to whom was referred House bill 995, respectfully report that the object sought to be accomplished by said bill is the abolition of what is known as the contract convict-labor system, so far as the prisoners of the United States are concerned.

The United States Government does not own or maintain jails and penitentiaries for its criminals, except as noted below, but its prisoners are sent to the jails, penitentiaries, State prisons, or houses of correction belonging to the several States, under different arrangements as to cost of maintenance to the Government.

The exceptions spoken of are as follows: The Government owns a penitentiary in each of the following Territories: Idaho, Montana, Utah, Washington, and Wyoming, and a jail in Western Arkansas and in the District of Columbia. The number of prisoners of the United States confined in the penal institutions of the several States, according to the Department of Justice, is about as follows:

California	25
Connecticut	11
Illinois	138
Indiana	45
Iowa	15
Kansas	10
Kentucky	1
Maine	5
Minnesota	19
Massachusetts	4
Michigan	250
Missouri	16
Nebraska	2
New Hampshire	19
New Jersey	13
New York	319
Ohio	10
Oregon	11

Pennsylvania	50
Rhode Island	3
Tennessee	5
Texas	10
Vermont	4
West Virginia	28
Wisconsin	18
Total	1,021

The system of contracting out the labor of the criminals obtains in most of these States. The State of California, under a provision of its new constitution, prohibits the employment of convict labor under the contract system, and requires the employment of such labor after January 1, 1882, on behalf of the State. The State of Michigan also has the State account system. The State of Maine and the penitentiary in Eastern Pennsylvania have non-contract systems. In the penal institutions of these non-contract States there are about three hundred of the criminals of the United States Government.

In the State of New York, at the last annual election the question of the abolition of the contract system was submitted to the popular vote. The result was as follows: A total of 673,534 votes were cast, with a majority for the abolition of the system of 138,856. This was the largest vote ever cast in the State of New York upon any proposition submitted to the people by nearly 50,000. During the present session of the Legislature of that State the following law has been enacted:

"The superintendent of State prisons, or any other authority of this State, shall not renew or extend any existing or pending contract, or make any new contract for the employment of any convicts in any of the prisons, penitentiaries, or reformatories of this State."

In the penal institutions of the State of New York, as has been stated, are over three hundred of the criminals of the United States Government. Add this number to those now in the prisons of non-contract States, and we have over six hundred, or three-fifths of the United States' prisoners, now serving sentences in the various penal institutions of the country.

At a convention of the National Prison Reform Association, held in New York on February 26, 27, and 28, this year, various schemes of reform were advocated, and the contract system was generally denounced.

Mr. Eugene R. Smith, of the New York Prison Association, said that it would be cheaper for the State of New York to board all of its prisoners at the Fifth Avenue Hotel, if it could insure their reformation, than to maintain the present system.

The advocates of the contract system were unable to refute the statements of those who maintained that under the contract system the reformatory character of the prisons has wholly disappeared, and that by it the tendency is that the convicts are confirmed in their evil ways.

Hon. Charles F. Peck, commissioner of the bureau of labor statistics of the State of New York, in his report of January 10, 1884, says:

"Notwithstanding the fact that this order was made by the Attorney-General of the United States"—

The order sending to the several penal institutions of the State its convicts—"under a law of Congress, I was unable to reconcile the idea that there was not some more potent reason behind all, and pursued the line of inquiry till I discovered the disgraceful fact that both the officials of our State prisons and the county penitentiaries had openly bid for the privilege of maintaining United States convicts free of all expense to the National Government."

And further:

"As the result of the contract between the Erie County penitentiary officials and the Department of Justice at Washington, the State of New York is to-day supporting United States criminals free of all expense to the National Government, and in their inhuman greed to make their penitentiary pay in dollars and cents two convicts are crowded into one cell, and the rights of honest, free laborers outraged."

The evils of the contract system are many, but your committee deem it necessary to only mention the following:

1. The contract system is wholly adverse to reform, and therefore should be abrogated. The prisoners are treated as if they were so many dumb beasts, being driven to their daily tasks by men whose aim is to get a certain amount of work out of them each day.

Dr. Wines says:

"It places for the entire working day all the prisoners contracted for, to a great extent, under the control of men with no official responsibility; men who see in the convict only so much machinery for making money; men whose only, or, at any rate, whose chief recommendation to the positions they hold in the prison is that they are the highest bidders for the human beings hired by them. It introduces into the prisons agents of the contractors, who, for the most part, have not only no interest in aiding reform of the convicts, but are too ready to oppose it, by offering mischievous indulgences to the convicts as an inducement to further industrial efforts."

Dr. Wines says further, to show that no reform is possible under this system:

"In former times, especially conspicuous in New York, was the fact of the establishment in the prisons of a power behind the throne greater than the throne; a power well-nigh omnipotent within its sphere; a power that coerces, bribes, and threatens in pursuit of its selfish ends; a power that makes and unmakes officers, imposes and remits punishment through agents whom it has been able to bend to its will, and even stoops to mean devices to get the poor prisoner who has incurred its wrath into straits and difficulties, that its revenge may be gratified by the sight of his punishment."

2. The contract system works great injury to honest labor in many branches of industry. Investigations by committees of State Legislatures have shown this fact repeatedly. The special committee of the sixty-third General Assembly of Ohio on prison labor in their report say:

"The testimony shows conclusively that the contract system carried on in our penal institutions is directly responsible for a large percentage of the reductions which have taken place in the wages of thousands of mechanics during the past four years. Nearly every manufacturer who testified before your committee attributed a large percentage of the reduction in wages to the system which enabled manufacturers who have prison contracts and who have large forces of convicts at cheap rates to go into the market and undersell them. There is little or no room for doubt as to the evil effect of this system upon the interests of free labor. It not only tends to pauperize honest labor, but it is, in a great measure, responsible for the overcrowded condition of many of our penal institutions."

The result of the investigations by the commissioner of the bureau of labor statistics of the State of New York is:

"The contract system of prison labor is directly responsible, to a great extent, for the reduction of wages and loss of employment suffered by mechanics engaged in the same branches of industry which are carried on under the contract system in the prisons."

In the testimony recently published by the Senate Committee on Education and Labor, taken by said committee last summer, are the statements of men representing various trades and trade organizations, which are unanimously in favor of the abolition of the contract system.

Your committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill (H. R. 995), with amendments as follows:

Insert in section 1, line 5, after the word "corporation," the following words: "Or permit any warden, agent, or official of any State prison, penitentiary, jail, or house of correction where criminals of the United States may be incarcerated." In line 6 strike out the word "prisoner" and insert the words "said criminals;" and in the same line, after the word "who," strike out the words "are now or."

JOHN R. HARRINGTON.

The bill (H. R. 4594) for the relief of John R. Harrington was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is adversely reported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. An adverse report is in the nature of an objection. The bill will be passed over.

IMPORTED MERCHANDISE.

The bill (H. R. 9653) to amend section 3058 of the Revised Statutes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to amend section 3058 of the Revised Statutes so as to read as follows:

SEC. 3058. All merchandise imported into the United States shall, for the purpose of this title, be deemed and held to be the property of the person to whom the merchandise may be consigned; but the holder of any bill of lading consigned to order and properly indorsed shall be deemed the consignee thereof; and in case of the abandonment of any merchandise to the underwriters, the latter may be recognized as the consignee; and, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, merchandise saved from a vessel wrecked or abandoned at sea, or on or along the coasts of the United States, and promptly brought into a port of the United States by or in possession of the salvors of the same, can, for the purpose of its title, be regarded as the property of such salvors, and the valuation thereof and payment of duties thereon can be made accordingly, and with due reference to the condition of the said merchandise as thus saved and the necessities of the case: Provided, however, That such bringing in by salvors shall be in good faith and without intent to evade the just payment of duty: And provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to prejudice in any other respects the right of property, or of or through abandonment or allowance of the owner, or any other person interested in said merchandise.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

IMMEDIATE TRANSPORTATION OF DUTIABLE GOODS.

The bill (H. R. 7860) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend the statutes in relation to the immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes," approved June 10, 1880, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to amend the provisions of the act entitled "An act to amend the statutes in relation to the immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes," approved June 10, 1880, so as to allow merchandise liable to specific rates of duty only to be entered for immediate transportation without appraisement to any of the ports mentioned in the seventh section of that act, although the same may not appear by the invoice, bill of lading, or manifest of the importing vessel to be consigned to or destined for either of these ports, when the consignee at the port of first arrival shall make written application therefor to the collector, giving the name of the person at the port of destination to whom he desires the merchandise to be consigned; and whenever such application and entry shall be made, the original invoice presented by the consignee at the port of first arrival shall be forwarded, with a copy of the transportation entry, to the collector at the port of destination; and a copy of such invoice shall be retained on file at the port of first arrival.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

THE MACKEREL FISHERY.

Mr. PALMER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 1833, being the bill (H. R. 5538) relating to the importing and landing of mackerel caught during the spawning season, which was passed over informally yesterday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER [Mr. INGALLS in the chair]. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business of yesterday, which is the bill (S. 2288) to incorporate the Atlantic and Pacific Ship-Railway Company, and for other purposes.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] in charge of the unfinished business to allow the Senate to proceed with the execution of the order for the consideration of House bills. I am satisfied that within an hour or two that order can be fully executed, and I shall be obliged to the Senator and to the Senate if they will allow us to proceed under the rule.

Mr. VEST. I am very anxious to go on with the unfinished business, but I am notified by several Senators on both sides of the Chamber that they desire to speak on it and are not prepared to-day to do so. To-morrow, as we all know, will be devoted to obituary addresses on the death of General Logan. Therefore if this bill is laid aside now it will not come up until the day after to-morrow. In consideration of these facts I shall make no objection to the unfinished business being laid aside with the understanding that when it is taken up again, which I hope will be the day after to-morrow, I shall ask the Senate to remain in session until it is disposed of, as I think we ought to get through with the bill this week.

Mr. ALLISON. The day after to-morrow the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], who is in charge of the Post-Office appropriation bill, desires to call that up.

Mr. VEST. How long will it take?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not think it will take a long while; it may take an hour or two.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] asks unanimous consent that the pending order may be informally laid aside for the purpose of completing the order of the Senate touching the consideration of House bills. Is there objection?

Mr. PALMER. I object for this reason, and the Senator from Tennessee will see the propriety of it: Yesterday, when the bill that I have moved be taken up was reached on the Calendar, being a House bill, it was suggested that it be passed over informally because it was on the list of special orders. To-day I understand that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] is willing to give way, and in that case it will come up among the special orders. I do not care how it comes up if it only comes up; but it is getting late in the session, and time is important.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from Michigan will allow me to suggest to him that if the request I have made, and which the Senator from Missouri consents to, is agreed to by the Senate, the bill to which he refers is the next thing in order and will come up upon the request that the Senator has already made, and come up immediately.

Mr. PALMER. I was aware of that, but I wished to have it impressed upon the Senate that I so regarded it; and with that understanding I make no objection, but insist upon the motion that I made, that we now proceed to take up Order of Business 1833, being the bill (H. R. 5538) relating to the importing and landing of mackerel caught during the spawning season.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from Michigan allow me to suggest to him that the unfinished business is the order now, and unless we consent that that may be informally laid aside it will be proceeded with unless displaced by motion. He may displace it by a motion if the majority agree with him.

Mr. PALMER. With the understanding that this bill comes up I shall consent to whatever is proposed.

Mr. MORRILL. There is one bill more that is a public bill, Order of Business 2062, a House bill that I should like to have acted on by the Senate at the present time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending business before the Senate is the request of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] that the unfinished business be informally laid aside for the purpose of executing the order of the Senate touching House bills. Does the Senator from Vermont object to that?

Mr. MORRILL. I do not, but I ask the Senate to consider this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the suggestion of the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. MILLER. I desire to ask for information. If that request is granted do we not go on with the Calendar regularly instead of going back to the special orders? The bill referred to by the Senator from Michigan is a special order, and it is not, therefore, under the ordinary Calendar rule.

Mr. PALMER. Then I ask that my rights be regarded which were observed yesterday by passing over the House bill informally, and I move that that now be taken up. Either horn of the dilemma will suit me if it suits the Senator from New York.

Mr. MILLER. Almost anything will suit the Senator from New York that will defeat the consideration of this bill or that will defeat it after it comes up, if the Senator from Michigan succeeds in getting it up. I am not particular how it is done.

Mr. HARRIS. The House bill mentioned by the Senator from Michigan, though a special order, is within the order under which we are acting, and if the Senate will consent to informally lay aside the unfinished business upon the request of the Senator from Michigan and go back without a motion, there is no question whatever that the Senate proceeds at once to the consideration of his bill.

Mr. PALMER. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senate will proceed with the execution of that order, it will not be three hours, I do not think it will be one hour, until we have completed the call of every bill on the Calendar.

Mr. PALMER. As I said before, under these circumstances——

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, I rise to inquire whether the order under which we consider House bills is not a continuing order from day to day before 2 o'clock? I so understand it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair so understands.

Mr. PLATT. Then we have twenty-three or twenty-four days of the session remaining, during which I am sure we can act upon the few House bills which remain. I will therefore take the liberty of objecting to the consent to extend the time this morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will lay before the Senate the unfinished business, being the bill (S. 2288) to incorporate the Atlantic and Pacific Ship Railway Company, and for other purposes.

Mr. FRYE. I move that that be laid aside.

Mr. PALMER. I understand that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] will give way to the consideration of the bill which I have moved should be taken up, and which, if he withdraws, has the right of the way as a special order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A motion to take up another bill, if adopted by the Senate, would displace the unfinished business and throw the bill to the Calendar.

Mr. PALMER. Then I insist on my rights under the special order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unfinished business has priority of the special order, and is now before the Senate.

Mr. VEST. I do not want this bill to lose its place. According to the rules of courtesy that prevail in the Senate I am perfectly willing to let it be laid aside. I am prepared to go on; but five Senators have notified me that they wish to deliver speeches on this question and are not ready to go on to-day. All my brother Senators will see the situation in which I am placed in regard to it. I am willing to let it be laid aside informally so as not to lose its place.

Mr. HALE. I ask that that be done. Under the conditions which have been stated by the Senator from Missouri no one would wish to drive him to complete the bill now.

Mr. VEST. I am ready to go on; but I ask unanimous consent that the bill be laid aside informally without losing its place.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER] objected to that.

Mr. PALMER. I withdraw my objection.

The PRESIDING OFFCER. The Senator from Missouri asks that the unfinished business may be informally laid aside.

Mr. ALLISON. For what purpose?

Mr. HALE. Let the Senator from Michigan make his motion afterward.

Mr. VEST. The Senate may do as it pleases so that my bill does not lose its place. I am acting simply under a sense of courtesy to brother Senators. I am ready to go on.

Mr. SEWELL. I move to amend the motion for the purpose of considering the bill (H. R. 2075) to provide for the location and erection of a branch home for disabled volunteer soldiers west of the Rocky Mountains.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no motion pending. The question is whether unanimous consent shall be given to lay aside the unfinished business.

Mr. HALE. I may state what my object is. The Senator from Michigan has been already recognized to make a motion and withdraws it temporarily. I have no doubt under these conditions, if this consent is given to lay aside informally the measure under the charge of the Senator from Missouri, the Chair will recognize the Senator from Michigan, who has already been recognized, as the next moving Senator to bring his bill before the Senate if the Senate chooses to take it up. I do not couple it with any condition that the Senate shall take that bill up, but leave it to the Senator from Michigan, who can make his motion. In that way every right of the Senator from Missouri is preserved.

Mr. VEST. Now, in order to settle the matter, after the statement I have made, I repeat I want to go on with this bill myself; I am ready to do it and anxious to do it, but I ask now unanimous consent to lay aside the pending business informally so as to bring it up to-morrow at 2 o'clock. Let the bill be laid aside informally, not losing its place, and then the Senate can go on with what business it pleases for the rest of the day. I have discharged my duty to Senators who have asked me to lay it aside. If that is refused, I shall ask to go on to-day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If unanimous consent should be given to lay aside informally the bill which is the unfinished business, the Senator from Missouri would have the right to call it up at any time; but unanimous consent is undoubtedly in order that it may be laid aside until Thursday at 2 o'clock, if the Senator so desires.

Mr. HARRIS. And be the unfinished business at that time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. And be the unfinished business at that hour. The Chair will submit any proposition that may be offered to the Senate. The Chair did not understand the Senator from Missouri to ask that the bill might be laid aside informally subject to his call or until an hour at some day in the future.

Mr. VEST. I ask unanimous consent to lay it aside informally until 2 o'clock on Thursday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. To be the unfinished business at that time?

Mr. VEST. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to that request? The Chair hears none. The unfinished business is informally laid aside, its consideration to be resumed on Thursday at 2 o'clock.

Mr. PALMER. I now renew my motion that we take up Order of Business 1833, being the bill (H. R. 5538) relating to the importing and landing of mackerel caught during the spawning season.

VESSEL FISHERIES OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. FRYE. Order of Business 2053, the bill (S. 2287) for securing statistics of the extent and value of the vessel fisheries of the United States, is one of very great importance, and it is very necessary that it should be passed at once so as to secure action in the other House. The Fish Commission here have sent in the bill. The statistics heretofore have been very defective, and collectors have refused to keep them. In view of the fact that there are sixty-seven vessels which have been interfered with on the Canadian coast line beyond the forty already reported by the Secretary of State to the Senate, and of the pending legislation before Congress likely to become a law, it is still more necessary that this bill providing for statistics shall be passed. It will create no discussion, and I ask unanimous consent that it may be taken up and put on its passage.

Mr. PALMER. I ask if it will lead to any discussion?

Mr. FRYE. It will not.

Mr. PALMER. I then shall not object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2287) for securing statistics of the extent and value of the vessel fisheries of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FISHING RIGHTS OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Referring to the fisheries reports of unjustifiable treatment, &c., I have just received from the Commissioner of Fisheries a communication in answer to an application I made to him some time ago for such information as the Fisheries Bureau had received from the owners of vessels on the coast that had not been reported to the State Department as harassed and where probably the owners felt that the amount of damage that an international tribunal would award them would be small; but still they have reported them all, which adds some sixty-seven or more to the list of the State Department. I ask that the letter of the Commissioner of Fisheries, together with the report made to him by one of his officials, and this list, be printed for the use of the Senate and laid on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the order to print will be made.

THE MACKEREL FISHERY.

Mr. PALMER. I renew my motion.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5538) relating to the importing and landing of mackerel caught during the spawning season, which had been reported from the Committee on Fisheries with an amendment, in section 1, line 10, after the word "from," to strike out the words "open row-boats of less than 20 feet keel" and insert the word "boats"; so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, however, That nothing in this act shall be held to apply to mackerel caught off-shore with hook and line from boats and landed in said boats.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MILLER. The Senator reporting the bill proposes to offer some other amendments, I understand. If so, I should be glad to have them offered now.

Mr. PALMER. I was about to do that when the Senator from New York arose. In section 1, line 4, I move to strike out the word "March" and insert "July;" so as to read:

That for the period of five years from and after the 1st day of July, 1887, no mackerel, other than what is known as Spanish mackerel, caught between the 1st day of March and the 1st day of June, inclusive, of each year, shall be imported into the United States or landed upon its shores.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Michigan.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PALMER. In section 1, line 10, after the word "caught," I move to strike out the word "off-shore;" so as to read:

That nothing in this act shall be held to apply to mackerel caught with hook and line from boats and landed in said boats.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PALMER. At the end of section 1, I move to add:

Or in traps and weirs connected with the shore.

So as to make the proviso read:

Provided, however, That nothing in this act shall be held to apply to mackerel caught with hook and line from boats and landed in said boats, or in traps and weirs connected with the shore.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. Before the Senator passes from the first section, in regard to the matter of date, I should like to move to strike out, in line 4, "1887" and insert "1888," so as to leave the period of this year and the next open to the fisheries. There are a great many persons who have large contracts for vessels, and have crews and so on, extending over one year in some cases. I move that amendment.

Mr. FRYE. That has already been done by the amendment which the Senator from Michigan offered.

Mr. HOAR. No; that amendment extended the time to the first of July, 1887. I propose to extend it to the first of July, 1888.

Mr. FRYE. The amendment adopted on motion of the Senator from Michigan takes care of this season.

Mr. HOAR. I know that it takes care of this season, but it does not take care of contracts which may have been made extending into next year.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. INGALLS in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

Mr. PALMER. I hope that amendment will not be agreed to. The committee made this concession because they thought that owing to the late passage of the bill some hardship would be worked upon those who had made preparation to do fishing this year. But that will not apply to those who are notified and who will not make any preparation, if the bill passes, for fishing next year between March and June.

Mr. MILLER. I should like to ask the Senator from Michigan if he does not think it would be doing a little justice to the large number of fishermen who are engaged in mackerel fishing to give the men who have their capital invested, owning the boats, a little more than three months' notice before you destroy their property and their business? That is what the bill proposes to destroy anyhow, and what it will do eventually if it passes. It will give them a day of grace if we put it off a year or two years. Five years would be still better.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator from Michigan to state, when he answers the question, at what time——

Mr. PALMER. Let me answer the Senator from New York.

Mr. HOAR. I want to know at what time in the season, according to the information of the Senator, the right of catching the fish terminates the season.

Mr. PALMER. Of the whole season?

Mr. HOAR. Yes.

Mr. PALMER. About the 1st of December.

Mr. HOAR. No; I refer to the catching of mackerel.

Mr. PALMER. I mean the catching of mackerel. Does the Senator refer to the spring catch?

Mr. HOAR. I refer to the spring catch.

Mr. FRYE. I suggest to the Senator from Michigan that there is no difference between the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts and the amendment already adopted. One extends the time to July 1, which extends it over the season to which he refers.

Mr. MILLER. There is just the difference of a year; that is all.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Maine does not understand it.

Mr. PALMER. The Senator from Maine will see that it makes a difference of one year. If it is extended to the month of March, 1888; then it is equivalent to the same thing as extending it to July without changing the year, but if you change it to July, 1888, it extends the time another year.

Mr. FRYE. The bill as amended extends the time to July, 1887; but I understood the Senator from Massachusetts to move to change the date to 1888 instead of 1887.

Mr. HOAR. Exactly.

Mr. FRYE. The Senator from Michigan has already stricken out March and made it July.

Mr. HOAR. That is true.

Mr. FRYE. That covers all the Senator from Massachusetts desires, which is this entire season.

Mr. PALMER. No; the Senator from Massachusetts wants to extend it another year.

Mr. HOAR. No one knows it as well as I do myself, if the Senator will pardon me and will wait a moment. The bill has already been amended by striking out "March" and inserting "July." I propose to amend it further by striking out "1887" and inserting "1888."

Mr. FRYE. That is giving two years.

Mr. HOAR. So there will be practically two years before the bill takes effect.

Mr. FRYE. I am decidedly opposed to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

Mr. PALMER. I hope the amendment will not be agreed to for this reason: The committee have made the concession which has been offered and accepted because they thought otherwise a hardship would be inflicted upon those who had made preparation for this year.

In answer to the Senator from New York as to whether I think it proper that these men should have notice so that their property can be protected, I will say that the bill was drawn and is being urged by all the mackerel fleet, as far as the Committee on Fisheries know, engaged in the spring catch of mackerel. Their vessels and their equipments have run down in valuation from twenty-five to fifty cents on the dollar, and it is to save them from commercial destruction, and also to see if the fisheries can not be regulated so that the mackerel will not be driven entirely from our coast and our people deprived of the chief food on which they rely, and upon which they lay very great stress, that this bill is being pushed.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Will the Senator from Michigan——

Mr. PALMER. If the Senator from New Jersey will permit me I will say that I think it would be well to have the report of the Committee on Fisheries read, which was unanimous.

Mr. MILLER. That will only take up time.

Mr. PALMER. Did the Senator from New Jersey wish to ask me a question?

Mr. MCPHERSON. If the Senator from Michigan will permit me, I wish to ask him a question. I see the bill proposes that during a certain season of the year, which I presume is the spawning season, there shall be no catch of mackerel, and this restriction is to continue for a period of five years. Let me ask the Senator if the testimony before the committee, of which I understand him to be chairman, was not to the effect that it was impossible under any condition of circumstances to deplete the sea fisheries? Certain years you have a run of fish of a certain kind and character. For instance, along the Atlantic coast one year we have a great run of blue fish. Again, for a year or two there will be scarcely any blue fish. In certain years we have a great run of the menhaden; and then for a year or two we shall see very many less of them. In my opinion, and my opinion is very largely sustained by experts in fishery matters, there is no amount of catch of fish which can be taken from the water by any process, whether it be by seines or otherwise, that can in any sense or form affect the supply of fish. I think that is a reasonable view to take of the question.

I wish to know why in certain seasons of the year when there are in some years extraordinary runs of mackerel at the particular season to which the bill relates it is necessary to prevent the people of the country from having cheap fish food, as they now have in the absence of any law governing and controling the matter, when it does not and can not in the least particular affect the supply of fish?

Mr. PALMER. Is the Senator through with his question?

Mr. McPHERSON. I suppose it is very well established that not one in a hundred of the germs ever becomes a living fish.

Mr. PALMER. Excuse me. Is the Senator asking me a question or making an argument?

Mr. McPHERSON. I am asking a question, and when I am through with my question I shall be very glad to have the Senator answer me.

Mr. PALMER. I shall try.

Mr. McPHERSON. Will the Senator answer the question I have asked him, and inform me whether it was not stated before the committee that it was impossible to deplete the sea fisheries? If he will answer that question I think he will simply state what ought to be the fate of the bill. Therefore, I will await the Senator's answer.

Mr. PALMER. We know that the first question scientifically, so far as the fish supply is concerned, is not thoroughly understood, and unless scientists are perfectly sure and can demonstrate a fact so that it can not be disproved they are not going to assent to a proposition. The whole theory of the impossibility of the spoliation of the sea has arisen from Professor Huxley's report on the herring fisheries of Great Britain. He spent five years in his investigations, but he did not make a report that is applicable here. He said that nothing that man could do would tend to deplete the sea of fish; but that is not the question here.

We do not contend that there will not be just as many mackerel without this proposed legislation, but we contend that the mackerel will be reduced in quality, that they will be driven off to other feeding-grounds.

It is a well-known fact that the anadromous fishes, those fishes that go into the mouths of rivers to spawn, are protected by State laws. The large schools of fish that come upon our coast every year and feed upon the food that they get near the shore are not protected. The result is that the old and the wise fish that are subjected from year to year to this persecution, which commences at Hatteras and which extends clear to the Bay of Fundy, become wiser, and they are deflected from the ordinary route; they go outside; and the fishermen are catching an unprofitable fish, a fish that is not anything like the mackerel that was caught fifty years ago.

Right here I should like to refer to a table which was prepared by the Boston fish bureau, and which more than anything else it seems to me establishes the fact that the fish are being degraded by the persecution to which they are subjected upon the coast before they reach Nova Scotia. I shall show that it is fairly deducible from the facts I am about to state. According to the report of the Boston fish bureau, in 1819 the catch with the hook and line was 19 per cent. of No. 1 mackerel; in 1829 it was 25 per cent. of No. 1 mackerel.

Mr. MILLER. On what page is the table to which the Senator refers?

Mr. PALMER. It is found on page 59 of the statement made before the Committee on Fisheries. In 1839 it was 30 per cent. In 1859 it was 61 per cent. In 1869 it was 31 per cent. In 1879 it was 6 per cent. I will state right here in parenthesis that the use of the purse-seines commenced in 1873, and from 1875 down to the present time the degradation of the quality of the mackerel on the coast has been so marked as to call for legislative action. From 17 per cent. in 1877 it has gone down to 9 per cent. one year, to 6 per cent. the next year, then to 8 per cent., then to 6 per cent., to 15 per cent., to 14 per cent., to 8 per cent., and to 7 per cent. in 1885, showing a remarkable decrease in a very few years.

I think it is fairly deducible from this table that from some cause or other the larger fish are driven from the coast, and unless some remedy is found the fish eventually will not be worth the catching for anything except for fertilizers; they will be nothing but spikes, as they are called in the market.

There is no doubt in my mind that these fish by the way they are harassed (and I will bring evidence to bear on that point) are being driven off from the coast. The men who have come and asked for this legislation are unanimous upon the subject with the exception of one man. They ask protection from each other. They ask the enactment of a law that shall prevent one from getting the start of the others. If they were perfectly sure of each other's good faith they would all stay at home; but if nine-tenths of the fleet remain at home one-tenth may go South and get in a very large mackerel catch and carry it into New York and get an advantage over their brethren.

There is no restriction to be placed on the catching of mackerel by hook and line. No one is to be damaged at all except the very men who ask for this legislation. They are the men who supply our navies with our sailors. We are now agitated in an attempt to protect them in their rights; and it seems to me that their voice should be heeded in legislation which tends to their prosperity and the prosperity of the fisheries. Unless something of this kind is done, I am perfectly certain that there will be no mackerel fisheries with purse-seines—possibly that would be a blessing—in less than ten years.

I should like to read from some of the testimony presented to the committee. These letters are from men who have pursued fishing or have been connected with it in one way or another all their lives. Here is a note from W. A. Wilcox, manager of the American Fish Bureau. I read an extract from his letter of June 15, 1886:

> From personal conversation with a number of the most reliable masters of vessels engaged, I find they estimate the aggregate amount thrown away by all vessels engaged at from 75,000 to 100,000 barrels.

That is, from 75,000 to 100,000 barrels a year. It shows how the catch has deteriorated. The fish could not be marketed. They are thrown over at sea, the most of them, and that is another crying evil.

Mr. MILLER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. PALMER. Yes, sir.

Mr. MILLER. How does this bill prevent the catching of mackerel by purse-seines? How does it enable the fishermen to catch only the good fish and to leave out the poor ones?

Mr. PLATT. It is in order to prevent the glutting of the market.

Mr. PALMER. If the Senator from New York can tell me why they should catch fish when they can not sell them, then I can tell him how it would prevent it. The bill proposes to enact "That for the period of five years from and after the 1st day of July, 1887, no mackerel other than what is known as Spanish mackerel, caught between the 1st day of March and the 1st day of June, inclusive, of each year, shall be imported into the United States or landed upon its shores——"

Mr. MILLER. But if the bill said that no mackerel caught in purse-seines or in any other way except by hook and line should be imported into the United States, I could then understand how the bill would enable the fishermen, or would compel them, to bring in full-sized fish; but it does not undertake to regulate the methods of fishing at all.

Mr. PALMER. If the Senator from New York had allowed me to read a little further he would not have made that remark.

Mr. MILLER. Certainly I should have made the remark.

Mr. PALMER. "Provided, however, That nothing in this act shall be held to apply to mackerel caught with hook and line, from boats, and landed in said boats, or in traps and weirs connected with the shore."

Mr. MILLER. We understand what that means. That means fishing within the limit of three miles from the shore.

Mr. PALMER. I think the Senator is mistaken; it is not off-shore, it is outside of the three-mile limit. But it does not refer to anything in particular that the committee or the persons who are urging the bill desired to accomplish; they are perfectly willing to let them fish off-shore, in-shore, up the creeks, anywhere they please, as long as they fish with hook and line.

Mr. MILLER. So long as they do not catch any fish before the 1st day of June. After the 1st day of June they can fish anywhere, with purse-nets, and take any sized fish, as they have been doing for years. Is it not true that that can be done under the bill?

Mr. PALMER. If the Senator will allow me, I will explain why the limit was put at the 1st day of June. There were many who wished to have it put at the 1st of July, but they said they were fearful they could not get it through if that limitation was made, and therefore it was fixed at the 1st of June; but practically it amounts to the same thing, for when the mackerel spawn, between the 1st of June and the 1st of July, they sink out of sight, they do not appear at all; so that practically it is a close season for the females and their progeny up to the 1st of July.

Mr. MILLER. I am very glad to have the Senator make that admission. Then, this proposition is that there shall be no fishing for mackerel except during the spawning season, and you may then catch all you like. That is a new way of regulating fishing. In the internal waters of the United States, by the laws of nearly all the States, fishing for the various kinds of fish like trout, bass, and others is prevented during the spawning season. Now, the Senator tells us the spawning season for mackerel is between the 1st of June and the 1st of July, and that is the time persons are to be allowed to catch them, under the bill.

Mr. PALMER. The Senator is a little too technical. I shall have to go into the history of the mackerel from the time he comes on to our shore at Cape Hatteras, and follow him up through New Jersey up by Block Island until you land him in the Bay of Fundy. When the mackerel comes on to our shores from the Gulf Stream, or from the open sea, or wherever he may come from, which is not already established, he is poor; both the male and female are poor. The reproductive process has commenced and they are poor up to the first of July, when the spawn has been distributed and when they commence to feed upon the red food along the coast in Massachusetts and Maine. Then they soon become fat and a good marketable article. I do not see that the inference which the Senator from New York draws can be fairly deduced from anything in the bill.

Mr. MILLER. If the spawning season begins on the 1st of June and extends until the 1st of July or August, in order to make it safe, why does not the committee provide in the bill that there shall be no fish landed upon our shores from the 1st day of August of each year up to and including certain other months, December or January?

Mr. PALMER. The committee did not provide for it because it was not asked for.

Mr. MILLER. The committee certainly ought to provide for what is just and right without any regard to what the salt-mackerel men may ask.

Mr. MCPHERSON. If the Senator will yield to me a moment, he has described the habits of the mackerel——

Mr. PALMER. Not critically.

Mr. MCPHERSON. He has described the mackerel striking the coast on the south about Cape Hatteras. The Senator well knows that from Cape Hatteras to the northern coast of Maine on almost every rod of territory there are constructed, as a sort of permanent investment by the fishermen, weirs and ponds and places of that kind for the convenience and the profit of the fishermen.

Mr. PALMER. If the Senator will permit me, that is provided for in the amendment.

Mr. MCPHERSON. At certain seasons of the year there is a run of mackerel, at certain seasons there is a run of bass, at a certain other period there is a run of bluefish, and so on. The operation of the bill will be to destroy absolutely the occupation of the fishermen during the months of the year in which the bill provides that no mackerel shall be caught.

Mr. PALMER. If the Secretary will read the amendment which relates to traps and weirs the Senator from New Jersey will see that it will cure the evil of which he speaks. The weirs and nets are specially exempted from the operations of the bill. All the men along the coast of New Jersey, Delaware, and Massachusetts who have weirs or nets connected with the shore are particularly exempted from its operations and will derive increased benefits from this legislation.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Do I understand that the bill has been amended in that particular?

Mr. PALMER. Yes; that is one of the amendments which have been adopted.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I should like to have the amendment read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment which has been agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of the first section, add:

Or in traps and weirs connected with the shore.

So as to read:

Provided, however, That nothing in this act shall be held to apply to mackerel caught with hook and line from boats, and landed inside of boats, or in traps and weirs connected with the shore.

Mr. MCPHERSON. In that respect the bill is bettered by the amendment. There is one other question which I should like to suggest. I have somewhere read a statement made by a certain professor in Scotland who has made quite a study of the fish question, and particularly of the question of the herring upon the coast of Scotland. It is well known that there is not to be found elsewhere on the face of the earth in any water anywhere such a great fishery enterprise as the herring fishery on the coast of Scotland. Some years there is a less run of herring than others. This professor goes on to say that as to the amount of herring caught from the water by all the processes which fishermen can employ, whether it be by nets, by seines, by weirs, by hook and line, or what not (and we know something of the quantity caught), the amount of fish taken on the coast of Scotland was as one to a million compared with the amount of herring consumed by other fishes.

I should like to ask the Senator from Michigan what is the necessity of preventing cheap food-fish being obtained for the people, even during the period proposed in the bill, if it be true that for every fish taken from the water at any season (and it is well known that the herring fishery is prosecuted with more vigor and with more profit during the spawning season than any other) a million are consumed by other voracious fishes? We know that one class of fish lives upon another. Then why, upon the seacoast, with an ocean 3,000 miles wide, is it necessary by any sort of system whatever to prevent the free occupation of the fisherman during any months of the year?

Look at the menhaden fishery. Within a year or two we find that the menhaden have very greatly reduced in numbers, so that in some years it is almost impossible for the men employed in the industry of catching the fish for the oil and the fat, which I understand is made into fertilizers, to find enough menhaden to profitably occupy them. In other years again the menhaden come in immense quantities. I think it safe to say that although legislation has been attempted here and elsewhere to prevent fishing for the menhaden along the coast, for every fish taken from the water by the menhaden industries there are a million of them consumed by other fish. If it be best to prevent fishing near the shore in order that the fish may go back into deeper water and be caught there by bigger fish, then there is some justification for this legislation; if not, there is no justification for it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the pending amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 1, line 4, it is proposed to strike out "1887" and insert "1888," so as to read:

That for the period of five years from and after the 1st day of July, 1888, no mackerel other than what is known as Spanish mackerel, caught between the 1st day of March and the 1st day of June, inclusive, of each year, shall be imported into the United States or landed upon its shores.

Mr. FRYE. I ask the Senator from Michigan in charge of the bill to move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was amended by striking out the word "March" and inserting the word "July," in line 4, and then to accept the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. That will cover the same thing.

Mr. PALMER. In deference to the wishes of the Senator from Maine, who has a greater interest in this bill possibly than I have, I will move that the vote by which the amendment was agreed to changing "March" to "July," in line 4, be reconsidered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That can be done by unanimous consent. There being no objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. PALMER. Now, I withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]; which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 1, line 4, strike out the words "1887" and insert "1888," so as to read:

That for the period of five years from and after the first day of March, 1888, no mackerel other than what is known as Spanish mackerel, &c.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President——

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Delaware allow the amendment to be adopted before he proceeds, as the committee agree to it?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I am not certain that I am in favor of the amendment. I am not certain that this proposed legislation is right.

Mr. MILLER. Are you not certain that it is wrong?

Mr. SAULSBURY. During the examination of the fishery question last fall we took considerable testimony before a committee, of which I was a member, on this very subject. I found that the men who own the boats, as a general rule, were in favor of a close time, as they call it, but they stated that their men employed in doing the fishing generally urged that they should send out their boats to the spring fishing. Not willing to lose the time, they urged the owners of vessels to send their vessels down the southern coast in order that they might have employment.

My understanding is that there is a very considerable amount of fresh mackerel consumed in the Eastern cities caught between the months of March and July, which furnish cheap food to a class of people who are not very well able to buy the higher-priced fish. If the bill proposes to restrict that it seems to me that it is wrong. As to whether it affects the mackerel fishery subsequently, the fall fishing for mackerel, I am unable to say.

There are different theories in reference to the mackerel. Some fishermen whose testimony was taken by the committee had an idea that these fish come up from the Gulf along the shore, striking in about Hatteras and going all the way up. There were other persons who had the idea—and I think Professor Baird has that idea—that they come directly into the shore from the sea. If the latter theory is true, then all the argument in reference to diverting the fish is erroneous. If, on the other hand, it is true that the schools of fish come up from toward the Gulf and hug the shore clear up our coast and to Canada, then perhaps the spring fishing does divert to a certain extent the fish from our coast. Which of these theories is correct I am not able to say, but at any rate, if the poor people of the cities are to be deprived of a cheap article of food it seems to me that this proposed legislation is not wise.

As to its effect upon the ultimate catch of the fish I am at a loss to determine, because that depends also upon the theories which are entertained in reference to the habits of these fish. If they make into shore from the sea, striking at Hatteras, striking along the Jersey coast, striking along the coast of Massachusetts and Maine from the sea, then there is no diverting the fish, if that theory be true, simply by fishing down about Hatteras in the spring of the year.

My information is that there are about a hundred vessels that go down from Gloucester and from other points on the New England coast and engage in southern fishing; and that they do not go because the owners of the boats desire that they shall go, but because the men engaged in fishing, the hands who do the catching, do not wish to be lying around Gloucester all the spring waiting for the fall catch, but they desire to be employed. The bill operates to the prejudice of that class of men who are dependent upon their labor in this industry. If it is their wish to go down and fish, and if the poor people of the cities are to be deprived of a cheap food, the bill is contrary in my judgment to what is right. The poor we shall always have with us, and we ought not to legislate against their interests.

I had a good deal of doubt about the justice of this proposed legislation when on the committee last fall, after hearing the testimony of the owners of the boats, for it was the testimony of the owners of boats that we took as a general rule, and not of the men engaged in actual catching, except the captains of the boats. I do not now remember that I heard any expression of opinion from the captains of boats on this subject, but we did hear some opinions adverse to the spring catch by the owners of the boats, and I think very generally the owners of the boats were opposed to that kind of fishing; but I understood distinctly from the owners themselves that they were compelled to engage in spring fishing because their fishermen were not willing to wait, and they had to send them out to gratify the men actually engaged in the fishing.

If the statement of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] is correct, that it is utterly impossible to diminish by any catch the fish, then all the argument in favor of a close time comes to naught. We have an abundance of fish during certain seasons, it is true, of certain kinds of fish, and at certain other seasons there is not so much. I know that in Delaware Bay, along which I live, in some seasons of the year we have the sea trout, which comes in there in great abundance, and perhaps the next year there will be but few of them, so that it alternates, sometimes a full season of fishing and sometimes a scarcity. It is so I believe with shad, and it is so with herring, and I suppose with every other class of fish.

On the whole, I think I shall vote against the bill.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, this is a very ingenious bill. It could have had its birth nowhere except in the fertile mind of a down-east Yankee, and if it is passed into a law it will undoubtedly succeed in accomplishing what it was intended to accomplish, for it is very neatly drawn for that purpose.

The object of the bill is to reduce the catch of mackerel from one-third to one-half of all the mackerel that shall be brought into our American ports during each year. The fishing season begins late in March or early in April and continues uninterruptedly up to the 1st of June, and through June, July, August, September, October, and November, even to December, as the Senator from Michigan says; but during the month of June and a portion of July the fish disappear and the catch is small. Heretofore the principal catch of mackerel has been made off our coast during the months of March, April, and May.

Mackerel fishing has been a very important industry. It has given employment to a very large number of hardy seamen. There are engaged in the business, I think, nearly two hundred vessels, owned largely in Massachusetts and New York, some in New Jersey, and other States. The bill takes off three months of the annual fishing, and three months of the best fishing.

The chairman of the committee, who has made a scientific study of this matter, tells us that the fish first appear off our coast, off the capes, Cape Hatteras, or even further south, opposite Georgia and South Carolina, late in March or early in April, and that from that time on up to the 1st of June they are found going further north, until finally in June they are off Massachusetts and Maine; in other words, that this is a bill to prevent fishing for mackerel save off the coast of Massachusetts and Maine, chiefly off the coast of Maine, for after the first of July the fish are as far north as Maine, and many of them have gone still farther north.

Whether the chairman of the committee took kindly to this measure or not I do not know. It may be that there is some New England blood in his veins, and therefore he took kindly to this proposition of his fatherland. As the State of Michigan does not border upon the Atlantic he has no mackerel fishing off his shores, and he may have been kindly disposed toward New England and been willing to rule out of the fishing business all the Southern States and the States of New Jersey and New York. I will not say as to that, but certainly I was greatly surprised to find that the Senator from Michigan, who usually takes so liberal a view of all these questions, and who desires to legislate in the interests of the people of this country, should have given his sanction to a bill which is simply for the purpose of creating a monopoly in the mackerel fishing off our shores.

This bill is simply in the interest of the men in Massachusetts and Maine who are engaged in the salting of mackerel, and is intended to cut short the fishing which takes place along our shores, and which produces during the months I have spoken of one of the principal food-fishes of this country, being brought into all our ports in enormous quantities, and now by our railroad system distributed all along our coast, even as far west as the Mississippi Valley.

What reason can be given for this bill I do not know. I have waited anxiously for the Senator from Michigan to give us some reason for the bill. He seems to defer those reasons until the opposition to the bill shall be put in, and then I suppose some overpowering and conclusive argument may be produced here which will convince us that we have all been wrong. Certainly, if such reasons are produced by the members of the committee or by any other Senator, and my judgment is convinced, I shall gladly acknowledge my fault and support the bill.

It has been intimated that the fish were not good during the months included in the bill, but the Senator tells us that the spawning season does not begin until June, and he proposes to curtail and stop absolutely the fishing for mackerel until the spawning season begins. I submit to him as an old fisherman and one skilled in the art, and as one knowing the science of the fishes, that it is certainly a very curious provision that he should bring in a bill here regulating fishing which should prevent fish from being caught at any other season of the year save during the spawning season. I shall leave him to explain why he has done this.

Mr. President, this legislation is certainly anomalous. As I said a moment ago, it is in the interest of monopoly. It tends directly to create a monopoly. It proposes to put a fence around the Atlantic Ocean for three months in the year, and say to the poor and hardy fishermen of our coast, "You shall not go out in your boats to catch any mackerel, or if you do catch them you shall not be permitted to land them upon our shores."

Evidently the amendment which the Senator has proposed this morning in allowing these fish to be taken in weirs, nets, and ponds along the shore has been intended to catch the support of the Senators from New Jersey, off which coast much of that kind of fishing is carried on. But if the fishing is injurious, if as he tells us the mackerel are harassed and troubled by the fisherman until at last they are driven away from our coast and we have only the small mackerel of which he complains left, how does he better it by allowing fishing off the shore in weirs and ponds and nets? Will not all the fish be taken, of whatever size they may be? Certainly everything that comes to the net will be taken in, it matters not whether the net is on the shore or off the shore or whether out in the deep sea.

We have allowed American citizens to go out upon our great plains and to fence in the public domain and to drive off and keep off citizens of the United States from settling upon it. We have allowed great corporations to seize upon the public domain, and to-day there remains but little of the public domain which is desirable for settlement and which can be taken under the laws of our Government. We are rapidly making a monopoly of whatever of public land there is left in this country; and now these few men in the States of Maine and Massachusetts who desire to control absolutely the mackerel market of this country and to raise the price of mackerel in our market from 50 to 100 or 200 per cent., as this bill will do if it passes, come here and ask us to put a fence around the Atlantic Ocean and to say to our people, "You shall not fish during March, April, and May."

It seems to me that it ought only to be necessary to read the bill and to call the attention of the Senate to it in order to have it unanimously rejected, for I can not believe that the Senators from any State representing their constituents can for a moment consent to stand here and indorse and advocate a measure which is to make not only mackerel dear in our markets, but which is to make all salt-water fish dear also; for you will find if you go to the great fish markets in New York and other seaports that the price of bluefish, the price of sea-bass, and in fact the prices of nearly all salt-water fish are largely controlled by the amount of fresh mackerel brought into our ports. Mackerel is the principal fish, and if it comes in in greater abundance the price goes down, and that carries with it, of course, the price of all other salt-water fish. If the number that is brought in is decreased necessarily the price of mackerel advances and the price of other salt-water fish advances.

It so happened that about two years ago, I think, a great catch of mackerel was made off our coast. Mr. Blackford, who is one of the fish commissioners of New York, a man who knows as much about the commerce in fish as perhaps any man in the United States, for he has been engaged in it for many years, tells us something about the results which happened upon the price of fish when the great catch was made only a short time ago. Let me read from his testimony which was taken by this committee. Mr. Blackford said:

> As I said when I was before your committee formerly, last year was an exceptional year, there being an enormous catch. The mackerel made their appearance about the 1st of April, and in the sixty days between the 1st of April and the 1st day of June there were some 60,000 barrels landed and distributed, not in New York city alone, but all over the country; that is, within forty-eight hours of New York city by express.

Mr. President, if you will look at the statistics of the mackerel catch of this country you will find that the 60,000 barrels were one-quarter of all the mackerel taken in that entire year. If this bill had been a law those 60,000 barrels of mackerel would not have been taken at all, and they would have been lost to the people, and the result would have been a largely increased price for fish.

Mr. Blackford goes on to say:

> They were sent in large numbers to Chicago, to Cleveland, Saint Louis, and as far south as into Virginia and North Carolina, and I do not know but that a larger quantity were shipped to the State of Massachusetts than any other State; the demand for fresh mackerel there is greater. Those 60,000 barrels do not represent all that were taken in the earlier part of the season. The whole fleet of one hundred and seventy vessels happened to strike the mackerel all at the same time, and New York was the great market. The whole fleet came to New York, with the exception probably of half a dozen vessels that went into Philadelphia or other ports. It glutted all the usual avenues of distribution. They came in such enormous numbers there that they could not be distributed through the usual channels in time to avail ourselves of them before they spoiled. The fact is probably familiar to you that men, women, and children flocked to the docks with their baskets, and it was not a question of price. If they had 5 cents they could fill a basket. If a peddler came here with a wagon he could get his wagon loaded for 25 cents, and in the distribution by rail and express the dealers simply barreled them up and marked the names of reliable dealers in this city and that, and shipped them off for the dealer to take and pay whatever he saw fit. I speak of this in order to show you that during these two months mackerel form a very important factor as a cheap food supply of good quality.

The Senator from Michigan tells us that this is destroying the catch of No. 1 mackerel. Perhaps that may be true, but 90 per cent. of the people of this country do not eat No. 1 mackerel; they do not ask for it in the grocery stores; they can not afford to pay the price for it; the people of this country want cheap food, and under the present system of fishing they are getting it, not only all along our Atlantic coast, but, as I have shown, as far into the interior as the Mississippi Valley itself.

How does this large catch of fish affect the price even of No. 1 mackerel? I might go on and read a long time to show how it reduced the price of a barrel of salt mackerel at that time nearly 50 per cent.

It is not necessary that I should say here that the price of mackerel like the price of other commodities depends upon the supply and demand. The bill proposes to cut off one-half the supply and thereby raise the price of the other half to at least double the present price.

While the catch of mackerel has decreased since purse-seining has been introduced, it does not follow that it should be given up, nor does the bill provide that it shall be given up. If the bill had provided that at no time should any mackerel be landed upon our shores save those taken by hook and line, we could then have understood that the committee and the Senator from Michigan had brought the bill here for the purpose of preserving the species of mackerel and providing that only the large fish should be taken and that the small fish should be left. But it does not do anything of the kind.

Mr. PALMER. Will the Senator from New York permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. MILLER. Certainly.

Mr. PALMER. Is not that essentially the effect of the bill? The Senator seems to be confused on that point.

Mr. MILLER. I do not think I am confused on that point at all, but if I am I am willing to be enlightened.

Mr. PALMER. If the Senator will read the proviso at the end of the first section I think he will be enlightened.

Mr. MILLER. I have read it two or three times, and we all understand it. That permits fishing with hook and line during the three months specified, but after that time is up, for the other nine months in the year, purse fishing goes on uninterruptedly off the coast of Massachusetts and Maine; but it can not take place off the coast of any other of the United States of America, because the fish are not there except during those three months. That is the meat in this little bill.

I say if the committee had come in here with a bill providing that no mackerel should be landed upon our coast at all save mackerel taken by hook and line, it does seem to me the Senator might have stood upon some scientific ground, upon some just ground, and said to the Senate that he was afraid the entire species of mackerel would be blotted out and withdrawn from the sea, and he was doing this to preserve the species. But that is not the case at all. Mackerel can be taken by purse-seine any time after the 1st of June, any time after the fish year given, as high up as Massachusetts or Maine, but not before.

The catch of fish is not falling off at all. The Senator says there have not been as many No. 1 mackerel taken recently as heretofore. Quite likely that is true, but as I have said the masses of our people are not buying No. 1 mackerel; they want cheap mackerel and cheap food of all kinds. I do not know that the entire catch of mackerel is given here. I suppose not, but it is the amount inspected in Massachusetts only that is stated in the report. In 1875 it was 225,000 barrels. The next year it fell to 105,000 barrels. Evidently that was a bad year for mackerel. The next year it went up to 144,000 barrels; and the next year to 155,000 barrels. In 1880 it got up again to 243,000 barrels. The next year it was 256,000 barrels. The next year, another bad year, in 1883, it was 154,000 barrels. The next year it went up to almost its largest point; in 1884 it was 283,000 barrels; and the next year it fell to 215,000 barrels.

There is not anything to show in the statistics of the country (for there are no such statistics) that we are depleting the seas, or that we can in any way destroy or perceptibly affect the supply of food-fish in the sea. What are caught by all the human race constitute a mere nothing in comparison to the vast multitudes that inhabit the sea.

Here is a food suitable to all our people, which costs no man anything to cultivate or raise. It roams at its will through the sea. It costs us nothing and never has cost us anything. We have been appropriating a few thousand dollars from year to year to enable our scientific men to study the habits of sea fish and to see if they can do anything to bring them closer to our shores and to make our fisheries more effective. In the increase of our food-fish in our interior waters they have undoubtedly been very successful, and are doing much to resupply the streams and lakes which were giving out. But thus far they have produced no results whatever upon sea fish. They have been enabled to make some studies which are useful and which I hope will lead to beneficial results, but in regard to mackerel they have not been able even to arrive at any conclusion about their habits. They do not know where they go to nor where they come from. They simply know that during certain months they are off a certain portion of our coast, and that we can then catch them, and that is all they know about them. Let me read from a letter written by Professor Baird on this subject:

UNITED STATES COMMISSION OF FISH AND FISHERIES,
Washington, D. C., February 15, 1886.

DEAR SIR: I have received your letter asking for an opinion as to whether "the preventing of mackerel fishing during the spring months is necessary for the maintenance of an abundant supply of that fish upon our shores."

I have never been convinced that the abundance of mackerel has been in any way affected through the agency of man.

Here comes this committee and it proposes to say that for three months in the year no mackerel whatever shall be landed upon our coast. There can be no possible excuse or demand for such legislation unless it be upon the ground that it is necessary to preserve the fish and to prevent them from being obliterated.

Mr. PALMER. Will the Senator permit me to make a statement?

Mr. MILLER. Certainly.

Mr. PALMER. The Senator seems to have gotten up a fog-bank, and thinks it is a positive clay-bank, and he is pelting that. There is no charge that there has been a diminution in the quantity of mackerel. That is not the charge, although I believe that will follow the purse-seine fishing if kept up for many years, but the charge is in the degradation of the quality.

Mr. MILLER. May I ask the Senator what is the reason for this bill? Why is it brought in here?

Mr. PALMER. In answer I will state that it was brought here at the instance of men who are engaged in the mackerel fishery, who represent 400 vessels and 5,000 seamen, who say that by reason of purse-seine fishing, as they believe, the mackerel fishery has become unprofitable, and that they will sell out at from 25 to 50 cents on the dollar their vessels and all their equipments. They say it is a matter of vital interest to them, and that without some legislation the mackerel fishery of the Northeast will be destroyed entirely, and they will have to go back to the old hook-and-line methods.

The Senator says that what he wants is cheap food for the people. He will have high food for the people without some such enactment, because this matter of purse-seine fishing will cure itself sooner or later. The best thing for him to do is to accept the inevitable. Let these poor and miserable and cheap, and I would say, if I ever used the word, nasty fishes of the spring go, and rely upon the hook and line to supply his constituents, and in the fall get fish that are worthy to eat at a cheaper price than he can get them if the present system is permitted to go on.

Mr. MILLER. The Senator has answered my question as I expected he would. It turns out that this bill is in the interest of the owners of a few fishing vessels, not in the interest of the seamen who go upon them, as the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] told us was disclosed in the investigation which was had before a committee of which he was a member.

I undertake to say, and I do not think it can be gainsaid or disproved, that this bill is desired simply by a few men who stay upon the land in various towns in Maine and Massachusetts and salt down mackerel. They are men of capital, men of means. It is not asked for by the poor fisherman himself. He does not desire to be deprived of three months of his work in each year. It is not asked for by the ten million or the fifty million people who consume this food.

As to the quality of the fish, I do not care to go into that, but I think when every Senator here can get a good fresh mackerel between the 1st of April and the 1st of June he does not hesitate to eat it. I know I do not. I have no doubt but that the Senator from Michigan, although I know he is very particular in regard to his food, eats fine mackerel between the 1st of April and the 1st of June.

But, as I said a moment ago, even if the object of this bill be what the Senator says it is, it effects that object only for three months. It does not stop purse-seining during nine months in the year. Why not? If it were true or if there were any fair probability that by the continuation of purse-seining all the mackerel would be driven off our coast and this whole fishery disappear and our people leave this food fishery entirely, it might be wise for us to pass a law providing that no mackerel should be landed upon our coast at any time save those taken by hook and line; but this bill does not provide anything of the kind. The Senator from Michigan wants to preserve, to take care of the little fish, the weak fish, and the poor fish during three months in the year, and then he turns them loose to the mercy of those men whom he is representing here, the fishermen of Maine and Massachusetts, and allows them to go out with their purse-seines and surround the whole sea and bring them in, and they bring in large and small then just as much in the months of June and July as they do in the months of April and May, do they not? I ask the chairman of the committee if that is not true? There can be no question about it. This bill, then, is not consistent with itself. It does not undertake to accomplish what the Senator says it is intended for.

Mr. PALMER. The Senator asked me a question. I shall be very glad to answer it.

They do not bring the fish in in the same shape in July and August; they are not brought in salted. It is a fact that the fish caught in July are not fit for salting.

Mr. DAWES. I should like to ask the Senator from New York if he has not overlooked the fact that the fish when they first come upon our shores in March, April, and May are poor, small fish; that they become larger and fatter after that time and more fit for the market; and that the object is to preserve the fish until they become fit for the market and not bring them in as he has described, 60,000 barrels at one time, and allow them to be dumped into the docks and thrown away, more than half of them, because it was impossible to consume them at any price or give them away before they were destroyed. Is not that the object of this bill?

Mr. MILLER. I am trying to get at the object of the bill, and we shall be able to fish it out after awhile, even if we have to do it with a hook and line. I have been throwing out a purse-seine and got nothing. The reasons were so small that they slipped through the mesh.

Mr. DAWES. I suppose that a man who recognized the fitness of the game law in his own State and in every other State of the Union that prohibits the taking of game during certain months in the year in order to preserve the game, so that it may be fit for market in other months of the year, would be able to guess, without the benefit of a hook and line, what was the purpose of this bill.

Mr. MILLER. If there was anything of that kind in this bill I might perhaps have guessed at it; but there is not. There is nothing in the bill that will accomplish anything which the Senator from Massachusetts has just stated to be the object of the bill. It will not accomplish it at all.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator will allow me to interrupt him again.

I stated to him that during those months the fish were young and poor fish, that they came up better fish in the after months; and the Senator's attempt to show that this is for the benefit of the men who own shipping craft in Maine and Massachusetts shows that he understands that part of it just as little as he does the game laws of his own State. It does not make a particle of difference with the men in Maine and Massachusetts whether they fish down in New Jersey and off Hatteras, or fish in Massachusetts or Maine. They do not go home at nights; they are out on the ocean; and it does not make one particle of difference where they go for the fish. The effect is upon the fish and the fish market in the long run, not upon a man whose business it is to get 60,000 barrels at one haul, and make a lot of money by dumping them around in the different express offices of the country. That is the difference between the Senator and this bill.

Mr. MILLER. If I did not answer all the questions and all the objections of the Senator from Massachusetts, it was because the questions were so long that I forgot most of them before he finished.

I do not suppose the Senator from Massachusetts or the chairman of the Committee on Fisheries will undertake to say that the mackerel grow from a little fish to a big fish between the first day of April and the first day of June. That is absurd. It takes several years to grow a No. 1 mackerel, the kind that the Senator from Michigan uses upon his table. They are not grown in ninety days.

Undoubtedly it is true that the mackerel in the months of April and May are not quite as fat, not quite as oily as they are in September and October, but it is also true that the mackerel during the three months I have mentioned, March, April and May, are perfectly good food, and are eaten by the greatest epicures in this country, with all due deference to the chairman of this committee and to the Senator from Massachusetts.

If by purse-seining they get too many of the small fish, this bill does not prevent it except for three months in the year; as I have said before, it leaves the other nine months unrestricted. Now, if these fish are unfit for food during March, April, and May, why, I ask in the interest of the health of our people, does the Senator from Michigan come in here and permit you to eat those which are taken by the hook and line, or are taken in a pound net, or in a weir off the coast of New Jersey during these three months? Are those fish which come a little closer to shore any better in March, April, and May than the fish taken out in the open sea? I think not. The fact remains simply that the fish in those three months are not as good as they are during the rest of the year, but they are perfectly good food and are eaten by all our people who can get them at a reasonable price.

The Senator from Massachusetts referred to the game laws of my State and of other States. Sir, we do not have any game law in the State of New York which forbids fishing for trout and bass except during the spawning months. We have not got any such law as that, and that is what this bill is. This bill says you shall not begin fishing for mackerel in the high seas until the spawning season begins, and then you may fish all you like. Who ever heard of such a game-preserving law as that is? It is absurd on the face of it; and I say when a law is made with that absurd provision you must go and look at the selfish interests of the men who brought the bill here and who have advocated it before the committee and who have appeared there and made their arguments. The thousands of poor fishermen who go out in these months and partake in this industry have not been here asking for the passage of this bill, but only the capitalists; and they have found that we are catching so many fish under the present system, that we are so reducing the price even of No. 1 mackerel, that they with their capital may no longer find it profitable; but I have no fears in regard to that. This great industry will not be allowed to die and pass away because of its enormous proportions. It does not cost us, as I said a moment ago, anything to grow these fish. Providence takes care of them, or they do themselves, and all we have to do is to catch them and distribute them among our people.

One other point mentioned by the Senator from Massachusetts I desire to refer to, and that is the enormous catch that took place two years ago of 60,000 thousand barrels taken by a fleet of 170 vessels, nearly the whole of which was brought into the port of New York, and from there distributed, as I have shown, all over the country east of the Mississippi River. The Senator dealt, I think, in a little exaggeration, not intentionally, in stating that one-half of them were dumped off the wharves and allowed to go to waste.

Mr. DAWES. I did not say they were dumped off the wharves. They were taken to express offices.

Mr. MILLER. I said one-half. I did not say the whole.

Mr. DAWES. I say the Senator was mistaken when he said I stated that one-half had been dumped off the wharves. I said one-half of them were disposed of in some way; that is, dumped off the wharves, sent to express offices, and thence away off at a distance in such large quantities that they became useless and could not be eaten at all.

Mr. MILLER. The statement of Mr. Blackford does not bear out that statement of the Senator.

Mr. DAWES. The whole statement in the book the gentleman has before him on that subject bears out what I said.

Mr. MILLER. Perhaps it may; I will not undertake to say in regard to that; but I say the statement of Mr. Blackford, who has more information about it than any other man in this country, does not bear out the statement of the Senator; and even if it did it would be no argument at all in favor of this bill, for there is nothing in this bill that will prevent the one hundred and seventy or the four hundred vessels, as I think the Senator from Maine said, engaged in this business from catching, after the 1st day of June, all the mackerel that go to their seines, it may be one hundred and twenty barrels in one haul. There is not anything in the bill to prevent that.

It so happened that two years ago this fishing fleet went south and off our coast it struck the mackerel as they were coming into our shores, and like wise fishermen they filled their nets and filled their ships, and brought them into port, and they brought in 60,000 barrels and they were distributed over the country, and the estimate of Mr. Blackford is that perhaps 6,000 barrels out of them all were wasted because they were spoiled before they could be properly distributed, but that is a thing that never happened before and may never happen again, and there is nothing in this bill to prevent its happening every year.

I was attempting to show that it was impossible for man, in any way, to control the fishes of the sea and their supply, or that we had any exact information regarding them, and therefore that it was worse than folly, that it was criminal on our part to attempt to curtail the supply of food to our people by fencing in the Atlantic Ocean for three months and preventing our fishermen from fishing. I was reading a letter from Professor Baird when I was interrupted. I will go back in the letter.

> I have never been convinced that the abundance of mackerel has been in any way affected through the agency of man. The catch in 1884 and 1885 was far above the average for the past fifty years.

The Senator from Michigan told us that purse-seine fishing began in 1873. Twelve years after it the catch was the largest that had been made within fifty years. Certainly this purse-seine fishing has not diminished the supply of mackerel very much in the high seas during the thirteen or fourteen years it has been in operation. But that does not prove anything positively. The Senator may be right in his prophecy that if purse-seine fishing goes on uninterruptedly for a term of years it will entirely destroy mackerel fishing. My only answer to that is that if it is true he should have brought in another kind of bill, a bill forbidding purse-seine fishing at all. That he has not done. Professor Baird says further:

> It is not impossible, however, that the continuance of the use of the great purse-seines may in time have an appreciable effect in decreasing their numbers. The statistics of the next few years will doubtless enable us to form a definite opinion upon this question.

Would it not be wise to postpone the operations of this bill, not for one year, but for five or ten years, in order that we may get some statistics to show whether it is decreasing it or not? Only three years ago, perhaps four years ago—the Senator from New Jersey will know—the persons engaged in menhaden fishing, a fish which is taken only for oil and fertilizing purposes, came here and demanded an investigation by this body, and asked that we pass laws curtailing menhaden fishing, if not to entirely suspend it for a term of years, upon the ground that the menhaden were entirely disappearing from our coast, and that a great industry was being destroyed. While that investigation was going on, while this body was considering the proposition as to whether it would limit menhaden fishing or not, the menhaden fishing fleet, which was out looking after its freight, was struck by the greatest school of menhaden that had ever been known off our coast, made the largest catch it had ever made, and made the largest profits it had ever made. And then what? Those wise men who had been demanding of Congress that it should stop that kind of fishing came here and humbly prayed us that we would quit our investigation, and not pass any legislation. That is what resulted that year.

Here I show you that in 1885 the largest catch of mackerel was made that had been made in fifty years, and still gentlemen come here demanding that we shall yard up the Atlantic Ocean and prevent mackerel fishing for three months of the year.

Mr. President, I might go on and read the rest of Professor Baird's letter, but I will not encumber the RECORD with it nor detain the Senate by taking the time to read it. I simply wanted to call attention to that one sentence in which Professor Baird says that he is satisfied the abundance of mackerel has never in any way been affected by man. I infer that it never can be, and I do not believe that it ever will be.

Now, Mr. President, as to the wisdom of Congress undertaking to control this matter by legislation, undertaking to say that our people shall not go out into the high seas and bring in the treasures of the deep for the use of our citizens, it certainly is a very peculiar kind of legislation. Whether or not it is an infringement of the old doctrine of State rights, I do not know. Whether we can say to the people in the Carolinas that during March, April, and May they shall not go off their shores to catch any fish, or if they do, they must eat them on the high seas, they shall not land them in any port, I leave for the constitutional lawyers from that portion of the country to decide. They can say whether that is an infringement of State rights or not. But, as I said at the beginning, it is an anomalous bill. I have been attempting to find out from the chairman of the committee and from other gentlemen who are behind this bill, what are the bottom reasons that moved it and that have brought it here. We have had all sorts of reasons given, in my judgment, save the true reason.

Mr. PALMER. I think I gave the reason. I have given it two or three times. This bill is being pushed at the instance of the fishermen of the northeast coast of the United States who find mackerel fishing unprofitable, and find that their vessels and all their equipments have run down to twenty-five cents on the dollar. That is a sufficient reason.

Mr. MILLER. That may be sufficient for the Senator from Michigan, but that is not sufficient for me. It is no sufficient reason why I should support this bill. It is a pretty plain reason, and I think we are getting to it very closely now.

Mr. PALMER. It is a much better reason than we had for pushing the oleomargarine bill.

Mr. MILLER. All I can say about that is that the Senator from Michigan was my chief lieutenant in that fight, and made the second speech upon it; and he came into this Chamber, getting up off a sick bed to do it, because his people demanded it and because he believed it was right. Has he anything to retract from his action on that bill?

Mr. PALMER. Nothing at all. I merely want to ask the Senator from New York to regard and observe my consistency and go and do likewise.

Mr. MILLER. I am going and doing likewise, but I am not here to legislate, as I said a moment ago, to put a wall around the Atlantic Ocean and to prevent American citizens from going out into the briny deep and fishing and bringing to our shores their fish and selling them to us at any price they can get. If fish are scarce, the price is high. If sixty thousand barrels come in, the price goes down to almost nothing, and our people are benefited by it.

No, Mr. President, I think the chairman has finally, perhaps, given us the chief reason why this bill is brought here. A few men engaged in the packing of salt mackerel in Massachusetts and Maine are finding that the catch is so enormous that the prices are going down, not only upon mackerel but upon all other sea fish, and it will not do; their profits will disappear, the people will get cheap food and these men will not get so rich. If that is a good reason for passing the bill, let those who believe in it vote for it.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, I do not discover anything in this bill that is, in the language of the Senator from New York, at all anomalous; nor do I believe that the committee that reported the bill, of which I happen to be one, have laid themselves open at all in their investigation of the subject and in their presentation of this bill with their approval to the strictures of the Senator from New York that they have presented in its support "every reason except the true one;" or that by advocating this bill they are in favor of monopoly, or are advocating this bill in the interest of any particular class of the citizens of this country.

They may be mistaken, of course, as to the grounds upon which they urge the bill. They may have not got at exactly the truth in regard to the mysterious ways and habits of the fish that swarm the Atlantic Ocean. There was a great deal of testimony on that subject taken before the committee and very patiently listened to, and digested in this report; but whatever the results arrived at by the committee, I am very sure that the object aimed at was an honest one, and that object was to preserve, not for any particular class, not in the interests of any monopoly, but for the great mass of the people of this country, a cheap food product. Certainly it is worthy of the experiment that we should endeavor in the light of the testimony that is presented in this report of the committee to seek some way, some mode by which the diminution of the quantity and the degradation of the quality of this most important food product may be stopped.

It is with that view, and that view alone, notwithstanding the insinuation of the Senator from New York, that this bill is reported back from the committee with a recommendation that it pass with the amendments proposed.

Mr. MILLER. Will the Senator permit me a word?

Mr. GRAY. Certainly.

Mr. MILLER. The Senator states that this bill is brought in here because of the great diminution of the quantity of mackerel. I fail to find any such proof in the testimony submitted by the committee. On the contrary I have read here from Professor Baird a statement showing that the catch of 1885 was the largest of any year for fifty years back.

Mr. GRAY. The evidence taken by this committee and before us to-day shows, if it shows anything, that notwithstanding the improved methods by which fish are taken, notwithstanding the use of purse-seines by which whole schools of fish are taken at one time by a fleet, the catch of fish has not increased in anything like the proportion in which the means of catching them have been improved, but on the contrary there is——

Mr. MILLER. I ask for a reference to the statement showing that the number of fish or the amount of fish caught has decreased.

Mr. GRAY. If the Senator will read the report and if other Senators will read the report—I have not time to refer to it now—he will find and they will find that the proportion of the fish caught is in no wise equal to the improved method of catching them. That is what I mean to say. I do not mean to say that there is an enormous disparity between the actual catch now and the actual catch some twenty or twenty-five years ago; but there has been an enormous improvement in the method of catching these fish by which instead of the old hook-and-line methods they take in a whole school of fish at once, and the degradation in the quality of the fish is established beyond all peradventure, so that the quantity of No. 1 mackerel taken by these fleets ran down from 20, 30, and as high as 35 per cent. to 7 per cent., 8 per cent., and 9 per cent. in the last three or four years.

But, Mr. President, is it not worth while, even if this be a doubtful question, even if there is a difference of opinion—and I admit that there is such a difference among those who are experts in this matter of fishing as to whether anything that man can do can diminish the supply of fish in the Atlantic Ocean—in the face of this difference of opinion is it not worth while to make the experiment for five years as to whether a close season during the period of spawning and up to the time in the summer when the fish drop their spawn will not improve the quality and conserve for the great consuming masses of this country this most important food product of our Atlantic coast? For after all, as I said before, that is the object which this committee have had in view all along in their investigation of this subject and in their approval of this House bill.

I said there was nothing anomalous in this sort of legislation. We are constantly upon the land endeavoring to conserve and protect from destruction the great food supply of the forests and the streams. Our State statute-books are full of enactments that tend to restrict the natural liberty of man in the taking of fish and in the killing of game, in order that the supply may not be recklessly and wantonly destroyed; and it is upon that principle that I am in favor of this bill; and it is upon that principle, as I understand, that this committee have reported this bill favorably that they may in the interests of all endeavor, by the restriction of a few, to preserve a great food supply for the masses of our countrymen.

We heard very fully the constituents of the Senator from New York, who represents a very small portion of this country of ours after all. We heard very fully those gentlemen describe how their interests would be affected by this restriction—I mean the fishmongers of the city of New York. If there is any private interest being advocated upon this floor, as the Senator from New York seems to insinuate, it appears to me it is the interest of those fish merchants in the city of New York and the other large cities of the Atlantic coast that were being advocated by him when he opposed this bill.

Now, sir, special interests must give way. The honest industry of these fish-mongers must be subordinated, I submit, to the interests of the great consuming masses of this country. And if this experiment should turn out to be a failure, I do not think that the price we have had to pay for it will be a very costly one. It is only for five years. I believe that the experiment will result advantageously. I believe that it will vindicate itself and that the restriction of fishing on the Atlantic coast will have the same effect that restrictions upon fishing in our streams in the States by the State Legislatures have had in improving the quality and the quantity of the fish supply to the country at large. It is for this reason that I am willing to vote for this bill, and believe that it ought to pass.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, as I have shown conclusively from the evidence taken before this committee, the amount of mackerel in barrels, the catch has never been so great as it has been since purse-seine fishing began, and as Professor Baird says in his letter the catch in 1885 was greater than that for any one of the fifty years previous. Quite likely the quantity of No. 1 mackerel taken may be less proportionately, because by purse-seining all the fish are taken, large and small; but when these enormous percentages were given by the Senator from Massachusetts showing that 50 or 60 per cent. of the catch was No. 1, you will find if you go over the tables that in those days when there was no fishing except with hook and line the number of barrels taken was a mere bagatelle in comparison to the number taken at present.

In 1809 there were only 8,000 barrels taken. In 1814, when we were not permitted to go upon the high seas because a foreign power kept us off, we took 1,300 barrels; in 1819 only 4,300; in 1839 only 74,000 barrels; and so on down. But as I have shown, in the year 1884 we took 283,000 barrels, or rather that amount was inspected in Massachusetts alone, and last year the amount was 215,000.

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] has been kind enough to suggest that I am opposing this bill in the interest of the fishmongers of New York city and other Atlantic coast cities. Well, Mr. President, I accept that designation. The Senator in his tone of voice and his manner undertakes to imply that fishmongering or selling fish to the people of this country to eat is not a very reputable business. I do not hesitate to stand here and represent those men, and represent all their customers, which means all the people of this country who eat fish and who can not afford to buy No. 1 mackerel. That is what I stand here for.

Then the Senator asks us to make an experiment for five years; to stop this fishing for three months in the year, for five years, for fear that something may happen. Why, the last day may come before that time, and this whole earth may be rolled away, for ought I know. Many of us have no interest in who shall eat fish five years from now.

I undertake to say that in this testimony and in the testimony of the highest scientific authorities in the world there is not a scintilla of proof to show that man by all his appliances in modern fishing has done anything whatever to diminish the supply of fish in the sea. Why, then, shut our people out from the seas? Here is this food free to us all. Thousands, four, five, six, or ten thousand men are engaged in this industry, and they are bringing food to our people and supplying their wants. Because we find that the interest paid upon the investment in the ships and the interest paid to the fish-houses in Massachusetts and Maine in packing salt mackerel was larger when the catch was only fifty thousand barrels than it is when the catch is two hundred and eighty thousand barrels per year, are we to say to our people, "You shall not have two hundred and eighty thousand barrels of mackerel; you shall only have fifty thousand barrels, and you shall not eat anything but No. 1 mackerel?" Are we here to legislate in that way?

Mr. President, there is no similarity between this proposed law and the game laws which we pass in our several States to control the taking of fish in our inland waters. We all know that in our interior small lakes and rivers it is possible for our large population, if not controlled by law, to take out all the fish that may be found in a certain stream, or pond, or lake; but here we have the testimony, as I said before, of the best scientific authority in the world, saying that up to the present time man has done nothing to diminish the number of fish in the sea.

But the Senator from Michigan and the Senator from Delaware, who are doubtless very fond of good fish upon their tables, have a fear that if we do not stop this purse-seine fishing for three months in the year all the good fish will disappear. Without any testimony, without any proof from any reputable source whatever that that will be the effect, we are asked to shut up the Atlantic Ocean, to say to our people that they shall not catch fish there, or if they do catch fish there, that they shall not bring them to our shores.

Mr. President, I thank the Lord that I am not a constitutional lawyer. I am not disposed to go into the constitutional question and to consider whether we have the power to do this thing or not. I am surprised to find that any of our free-trade friends on the other side of the Chamber are willing to go beyond the men on this side in shutting up our ports to anything. You can catch all the mackerel you choose to catch off shore with a hook and line; that is a home industry; but if you go outside the shore, if you go out into the open sea and take fish during three months in the year, you shall not land them here at all! Would not Senators be satisfied with a duty of 50 or 100 per cent. on fish caught beyond the shore line during those three months? Would they go so far as to make protection absolute by making it prohibition?

Mr. PALMER. Does the Senator mean to convey the idea that fish caught with a hook and line outside of the three-mile limit can not, under this bill, be brought into the country?

Mr. MILLER. Well, I will let the Senator tell what the bill means in regard to that.

Mr. PALMER. The Senator seems to be confused on that. I wish he would read the bill over in the next interval he has.

Mr. MILLER. I have read it so many times that I really do not want to do it again and take up the time of the Senate, but if that is what the Senator from Michigan means, if this is for the protection of a home industry against a foreign article, if he puts it on that basis, perhaps I might support the bill. I am trying to find some proper ground on which we can support the measure. I am surprised that the Senator from Delaware should support a measure which will absolutely close our ports to one of the chief products of the world in the way of food.

Mr. GRAY. I am in favor of cheap food, whether it be fish from the sea or other food product, and I think I have made my position clear enough perhaps, if my position is of any importance at all, that my advocacy of this bill and my reason for voting for it is that a cheap food product may be conserved for all the people of this country. I may be mistaken in the mode which I believe now will be efficient to that end, and the committee may be mistaken; but the committee has presented to the Senate this House bill with the evidence which has been taken in support of it, and asked the Senate to read that evidence and to take that bill, and for a period of five years to make the experiment whether we can not, in the interest of the mass of the people of this country, preserve for them a food product which we have reason to think is rapidly diminishing in quantity and being degraded in quality.

Mr. GEORGE. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. GRAY. Certainly.

Mr. GEORGE. Has there been any proof in the case that there is a sensible decline in the supply of mackerel?

Mr. GRAY. I think so. I think the evidence taken before the committee tended to show most unmistakably that there was a very serious decline in the quantity of mackerel taken when you consider the improved appliances now used for catching the fish and, what was more important, and has already been insisted on by the chairman of the committee I think with great force, that the degradation in quality has been more serious still, and though the number of fish taken may not be so very much less now than it was some years ago, yet if you take them pound for pound instead of per capita the diminution in quantity will prove very great.

I do not wish to occupy the attention of the Senate again, except to say what perhaps is plain enough, that, so far as the fishmongers of New York or of any other part of the country are concerned, I think their employment is quite as respectable as that of the Senator from New York or of myself. Anything that I said had nothing to do with the respectability of that calling. I merely contrasted the smallness of their interest in this question with the magnitude of the interest of the great consuming masses of the country, and that was all that I intended to say, and all that I think I did say.

I wish to say one other thing, because it interests the people of my own State, and I think interests the people of the States from Carolina up to the southern line of Massachusetts. The interests or prejudices, or whatever you may choose to call them, of the Senators from those States have been appealed to because the close season that is proposed by this bill is about the time that the fish are found upon the coast from Carolina up to the southern line of Massachusetts. That is about true, but it should be recollected that the boats and the men who take those fish are, after all, the same "Yankee fishermen" that the Senator from New York speaks about. Those great fleets from Gloucester and from Maine sail down the coast in the beginning of the spring to meet these fish off the coast of North Carolina, and follow them all the way up to Massachusetts. So that the fishermen who are principally interested are these same "Yankee fishermen," and it is they whom this bill will principally restrain, because there is an amendment in this bill as brought from the committee which provides that its restrictions shall not apply to mackerel taken by hook and line in boats of any size in the old-fashioned way.

Mr. GEORGE. I desire to ask the Senator another question. Is the Senator to be understood as admitting that this practically prohibits fishing at any time in any waters for mackerel?

Mr. GRAY. I am not able to say in answer to the question of the Senator from Mississippi whether it entirely prohibits it or not or whether at any other time in the year those fish are on that coast. I am inclined to think that is true so far as mackerel are concerned. But what I do mean to say is that the mackerel catch is made in those months when they are on these southern coasts by the very same fishermen that make them in the other seasons of the year. I mean fishermen from Maine and Massachusetts.

So, Mr. President, the people and the fishermen who are particularly affected by this bill are those who live in New England and not those who live upon what we may call our southern coast, for they are fairly protected, as I said, by the amendment of the committee which allows the catching of mackerel by hook and line in boats of any size.

I therefore think that all appeals made by the Senator from New York to the interests, the supposed selfish interests, of the States of North Carolina, Virginia, Maryland, Delaware, and New Jersey fall to the ground as utterly without foundation.

Mr. MILLER. I have made no appeal to the selfish interests of the people of Virginia or the Carolinas. There is nothing in my remarks that warrants the Senator from Delaware in making any such statement here. I do not propose to let that statement go unchallenged.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I can see that when a bill of this kind is presented, which apparently interferes with what has been a recognized liberty for years, fishing in the broad Atlantic, Senators may hesitate in giving it their support unless clear and indisputable reasons are submitted for the passage of the bill.

It is not right that it should be presented to the Senate as a bill in the interest of a monopoly and that the opposition to the bill is in the interest of the great public. Precisely the reverse is true. This bill seeks to perpetuate for the people of the United States a great food supply, not for two or three months but for the entire year. For years the supply of mackerel to the people of the United States, consumed upon their tables throughout the land, has been a considerable part of the every-day consumption of the people. It does not rest with the consumption in March and April and May, but it is a product that is found upon the tables of the people all through the year, and the greater part of the product and the desirable part is the great catch late in the year.

The Senator from New York says that this is a New England measure; that it is simply to help a few Yankee fishermen. Why, sir, the bill was reported in the other House from the Committee on Ways and Means that has but a single member from New England upon it. It was championed there and explained by a member from the State of Arkansas, a member of the illustrious Breckinridge family of Kentucky, who went over the whole provisions of the bill, showing clearly that it was a measure so much in the interest of the people that the House passed it overwhelmingly. It is reported here in this body from a committee that has but one member from New England upon it, the chairman living in Michigan, having no interest whatever in these fisheries.

And, Mr. President, this bill is not opposed by, and the Senator from New York in his opposition does not represent, a fisherman in the United States. There is not a fisherman on the coast of North Carolina, or New Jersey, or Virginia, or Maryland, or New York, or Delaware who opposes this bill. The bill has scrupulously guarded the interests of every fisherman everywhere. There is not a man who goes out from the coasts of the Southern States fishing for these fish, as he has done for years, in his boats, or with traps, or with seines that is not allowed to go on and do as he has done in the past. There is not a man along the coast of the Middle States that is touched; but his rights are on the contrary preserved; nor is there a man in New York or anywhere else affected. The only men—and that has not appeared in the discussion yet except as alluded to by the Senator from Delaware—the only men who are restricted in this case are the New England fishermen that go from Massachusetts and Maine.

Why, sir, every one of these fish that are caught in the months of March, April, and early May and landed, dumped in quantities that can not be consumed into the markets of New York, is caught by these same New England fishermen. The same vessels that are engaged and the same men that catch these fish, taken when they are good to supply the great markets of the country, are the vessels and the men that catch these fish in March and April and May and land them in New York. It is only a restriction upon these men that this bill imposes, and that restriction is imposed upon them because it has been found that their manner of fishing in these months destroys the great good of the mackerel fishery, which is in August, September, October, and November.

Scientific men (as Huxley has discovered, as Professor Baird has discovered, as Professor Collins, who Professor Baird says is the most expert man in all these subjects, has discovered) may discuss as to what the habits of the mackerel may be and their migration, and what effect the coming upon them in spawning time may have, and they may disagree; but one patent fact is that with the immense demand for mackeral, ten times as great as it was fifteen years ago, with the appliances for catching by purse-seines, so that they can catch a thousand where they formerly caught ten, still there is not an increase commensurate with these facilities and with this demand; and all we have been able to do is to barely keep up the supply, or in some abnormal year perhaps increase it. But one fact is plain, and that is, where you take these schools of fish at a time just before the spawning season and you let this fleet of New England fishermen drive into them, as they do, with their purse-seines, landing them by thousands and tens of thousands, whether you diminish the quantity perceptibly or not you do disturb the migration of the fish; you drive them into the outer waters; you drive them, as Professor Collins (who is indorsed by Professor Baird as the most expert man on all these subjects) says, undoubtedly into other feeding-grounds, and the result is that when you come to the good part of the mackerel fishery in which the people of the United States are interested, not the Maine and Massachusetts fishermen alone, then you have got no such product from the fishery as you had years ago, and therefore the fishermen themselves ought to be restricted.

Mr. President, there is only one interest that is opposing this bill. I say again that not a fisherman opposes it, not one upon any coast; they are all cared for. But in March and in April, when this great fleet drives into the schools of fish and lands 60,000 barrels in New York which cannot cake care of 30,000 it may be, a part of which are consumed, then the fishmonger, who is at the bottom of the opposition to this bill, comes in and buys. I have statistics here, which if necessary I will put in before the debate closes. He buys the fish at a cent and a half per pound. The men who are engaged in fishing, who work on these vessels that catch them, do not average $6 a month for their pay; but the fishmongers in New York—three or four there hold control of the market—buy these fish at a nominal rate and retail them out, poor as they are, at 8, 10, 12, and 15 cents per pound, and make that enormous profit, and they form the whole opposition to this bill. I know how it was before the committee. The whole voice that was expressed against it there was expressed by the fishmongers and the men they sent down from New York. It is an attempt to stand in the way of legislation which Congress has adopted for years, which every State has adopted, of having a close time in order to protect the food products.

There never was a time when you attempted in a State to fence round, as the Senator from New York says (using that phrase to prejudice this bill), there never was a time in a State when it was attempted to fence round a lake, or the water of a river, or any water under the jurisdiction of a State, that it was not said it was interfering with the liberty of the citizen, and undoubtedly that raises prejudice; and unless it be shown that it is for the good of the people afterwards in protecting the supply of food, the citizen ought not to be restrained in his liberty. If anything has been shown that has been shown here.

I repeat that the opposition here comes right from the center of New York city, where these fishmongers are. Let anybody examine the document that the Committee on Fisheries has presented to this body, which the chairman holds in his hand, and which every member can get, and he will find that the inspiration of the opposition comes from there and there alone. I for one will not sit here and allow this wise measure to be prejudiced by being placed before the Senate in a wrong manner.

More than one Senator has asked me, "Does not this prohibit the catching of all these fish until they get up to the shore of Maine?" No, sir; not in the least. That is not the theory of it. The Maine fishermen, as I have said, catch these fish at all times, whether good or not, and every fisherman that comes out from the coast below New England is jealously guarded in the provisions of this bill. He will go out and fish and he will catch the larger fish, because in fishing by boat and seine he will get those fish and they will be brought into the market, and Philadelphia and Baltimore and Wilmington and New York and Hartford and the cities along the Sound will get them under these provisions.

Mr. MILLER. Will the Senator permit me to ask a question?

Mr. HALE. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. The Senator has said that this bill does not prohibit the catching of fish until they reach the coast of Maine or Massachusetts. What does the bill do? I would like to have the Senator tell us.

Mr. HALE. The bill leaves all the fishing that the local coasts are engaged in unmolested and protected and guarded. It then provides that at this period when the fish are poor, approaching the spawning season, then outside of our waters (not raising the question of what can be done in the State waters, but dealing with goods imported into the United States as we may deal with any imported product), for the months when the fish are in that condition they shall not be caught. The reasons for this I do not need to repeat, because by so catching them you destroy the great portion of the mackerel fishery, which is the portion that comes later in the year and in which the people of the United States are interested everywhere. The people of New York city and the little neighborhoods around there are interested in the fresh fish that are brought in in those months in great quantities, but the people of the United States are interested, Kansas is interested, Nebraska is interested, Michigan is interested, Iowa is interested in this great food product that is caught later, that is salted, and then finds its way to the table of everybody, and it is the interest of everybody that that should be kept up.

The Senator from New York says it is not everybody that eats No. 1 mackerel. No, sir; but when you destroy the catch of fish that are now produced and that make the supply of No. 1 mackerel small, you bring back the old price at which No. 1 mackerel was put on the table of the inhabitant of Michigan years ago; you apply that same price to No. 1 mackerel which is now paid for No. 3 by the people of the center, the interior of this country, who are eating fish as they always will when they can as a relief to their internal products. They are paying the prices they ought to pay for No. 1 mackerel, under that well-guarded system of fish preservation, for No. 2 and No. 3.

The fish that are brought into New York that the Senator says so much about are a cheap product; they are a poor fish. I know how poor they are, and everybody who has had any comparison knows how poor the fish that is put on your table at the Brunswick or the Fifth Avenue Hotel, or any other hotel there in the months of March and April is, not fit to be eaten compared with the fish that is caught at another time after the spawning season has passed, and when it has become fat. No man who has partaken of the one will buy the other notwithstanding the enormous rates and notwithstanding the enormous profit that the New York fishmonger gets.

I did not mean, for one, that the debate should close without the true attitude of this matter being presented to the Senate. It is a thing in which everybody is interested, Mr. President. It is a restriction upon New England fishermen. It cuts off the work of Massachusetts and Maine fishermen, and is a restriction upon them to which they submit because, as I have said, great gain will come in the increased value of the fish product later in the year.

Mr. SEWELL. Mr. President, to remove the impression created by the chairman of the committee as to this being a unanimous report of the committee, I beg to say that as a member of the committee I dissented from this report entirely.

Mr. PALMER. I will say in explanation that all the members who were present agreed to it, and I supposed that we had a full meeting. The gentleman did not put in an appearance, I think, at the time of the investigation.

Mr. SEWELL. Perhaps not; but I find my name mentioned in the report of the committee on almost every page as having questioned the witnesses.

Mr. PALMER. That must have been the fault of the stenographer, and not of the chairman.

Mr. SEWELL. Here is a question of my own:

Senator SEWELL. This early fishing, is it entirely for sale of the mackerel as fresh fish, or do they salt them?

Mr. BENJAMIN.—

Who was a prominent witness in regard to this bill——

Mr. HALE. What is Mr. Benjamin's business, may I ask the Senator?

Mr. SEWELL. That I do not know.

Mr. HALE. He is the greatest of the fishmongers of New York city.

Mr. SEWELL. He says:

They do not salt any when they can find a market for it fresh. There are probably seventy-five vessels engaged in the Southern mackerel fishing. Out of these there are probably from fifteen to twenty that salt the fish.

I tried for several years to stop what is occurring to-day, the destruction of food-fishes within the three-mile limits on the shores of the Atlantic by what is known as menhaden fishing. I was met in the committee and by the gentlemen engaged in this fishing—who have their capital invested with over one hundred steamers that occupy the entire coast line of New Jersey during the summer time—with the statement, backed up by the evidence of Professor Baird and Professor Huxley, that man has never been able, up to this time, to decrease the product of fish on the broad seas.

The menhaden come along our coast the same as the mackerel do, only closer in shore, and they are taken, converted into oil and fertilizers, and they damage the food-fishes in that sense that dragging a purse-net so close in to shore, almost at the mouth of our inlets where the ordinary bluefish go to spawn, destroys the beds for the feeding of the bluefish. But the majority of the committee became satisfied that nothing that man could do would decrease the product of fish, and no action was taken.

The mackerel strike Hatteras about the time that the menhaden do, and they follow the shores to the northward, arriving at the northern part of Massachusetts and Maine about the 15th of May or the 1st of June.

The object of this bill is to give time for the mackerel to fatten. The great fishing fleets owned in Massachusetts and in Maine have found it unprofitable to carry on what they have been doing for years since the invention of the purse-seine and its substitution for the hook and line, going to the southward and meeting the mackerel off Hatteras; and the whole intent, or if not the intent the absolute result, of the bill if passed will be to fatten up all the mackerel of the Atlantic Ocean, following the line from Hatteras northward until it arrives at the coast of Maine, where the Maine fleet will be ready to take advantage and catch them all. It is legislating for a monopoly of the very worst kind to the exclusion of the natural rights of the people of the Carolinas, Virginia, Maryland, New Jersey, and New York, prohibiting us from taking advantage of the passage of that school of fish during three months of the year.

Mr. HALE. Let me ask the Senator if he knows of a single craft of the State of New Jersey or of either of the Carolinas or Maryland that is equipped for catching this early catch of fish with modern appliances.

Mr. SEWELL. I merely state from the testimony in the report of the committee that there were seventy-five vessels engaged in bringing mackerel during the three months in which you endeavor to prohibit it, into the port of New York. It is not a question with me where they come from.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator know of a single vessel in his own State that is engaged in it?

Mr. SEWELL. I do not.

Mr. HALE. Does he not know of hundreds and thousands of coast fishermen who catch these fish in boats and take them into a market, who are beneficially affected by this bill, and who will catch the big fish that ought to be taken into market because they catch with seines and get the big fish?

Mr. SEWELL. It is a time of the year when fish are scarce practically, when fish command a good price. It is a time of the year when people ought not to be prohibited from their natural right simply because you want to gobble the whole catch.

Mr. President, as I said, the result will be that our friends in Massachusetts and Maine, with their usual foresight, will be enabled to take the fish in the best condition, I grant, but will take all of them to the exclusion of the inhabitants of the United States south of that line. It is a monopoly and a monopoly of the worst kind, one that legislation of the United States has never gone into up to this time to exclude any part of its citizens from the natural right to fish on the high seas.

Mr. PALMER. There seem to be some very queer and diverse views entertained in regard to this bill. One gets up and claims that it is a monopoly. The fact is that the men who are claimed to be seeking possession of a monopoly have it now, and I should call it a bill as much for the protection of the fishermen of New Jersey and Delaware as for the protection of the fishermen of the New England coast. This whole mackerel fleet that uses purse-seines is owned upon the New England coast. The bill is a guarantee that each member of their fraternity will observe the obligation that they all profess to be willing to enter into—to not destroy the fish by harassing the schools as they come onto this coast.

We have not claimed in the pushing of this bill that the catch of mackerel was decreasing; but taking this table from the mackerel chart, showing the Massachusetts catch for the past seventy-five years, you will find that it has positively decreased notwithstanding the immense advantages by the purse-seine and the immensely increased demand by the methods of distribution through the railroads and steamboats and the refrigerator cars throughout the country.

Mr. MILLER. Will the Senator permit me now?

Mr. PALMER. Any time.

Mr. MILLER. I know the Senator does not wish to convey a false impression in regard to this matter. He is altogether too fair to do that. The table he is reading from says this is the "total number of barrels of each quality of pickled mackerel inspected in Massachusetts from 1809 to 1885 and the total value of each year's inspection from 1830 to 1885."

Those gentlemen who are telling the Senate that notwithstanding the wonderfully improved methods of fishing the catch has not increased, certainly are making a misleading statement, because this table has nothing whatever to do with the mackerel that is brought into the port of New York or into any of the Atlantic ports which are consumed as fresh fish. In fact nearly the entire catch of the three months of March, April, and May are thus consumed. They are not salted. Some of the testimony given here in this book undertakes to show that the catch in these three months is not salted at all, that it is all distributed over the country as fresh fish. Certainly the Senator will not undertake to base his statement upon that table, because it leaves out all the catch of the three months which is distributed over the country as fresh fish. For instance, in the year 1885, when 60,000 barrels were brought into New York in one day, that table shows nothing of it at all!

Mr. PALMER. If the Senator will permit me, I will state that the only means we have of coming to a conclusion as to the relative catch of mackerel is by this table prepared by the Boston fish bureau, and there it is shown that in 1831 with the hook and line 383,000 barrels of fish were caught, but at no time since then has any such quantity been caught by the fishermen of Massachusetts.

Mr. MILLER. That does not answer my question at all.

Mr. PALMER. I was going to qualify my remark. As a matter of course this does not take into account the amount that has been marketed in New York fresh, nor does it take into account the 100,000 barrels that are thrown overboard to infect the waters and to frighten the schools of mackerel as they come along the shore. And right here I should like to show what is said on that point. Here is a letter from Capt. Joseph Smith, of the schooner Lizzie M. Center. He says:

For the first four or five years the number of vessels engaged early was small.

That is, engaged in purse-seine fishing.

They did not appear to make much impression on the school, as they were very numerous and large, and the vessels did not start before May, but the last eight or nine years the fleet has increased so very much, and starting, say in March, meeting the mackerel off the coast of Virginia, and at times farther south, while they are moving north toward their spawning-grounds, harass and annoy them by their seines and by sailing through the schools frighten the fish, breaking them up and turn the fish off shore in deep water, on the very edge of soundings, and the result, they shun our bays and small banks, where they formerly resorted to deposit their spawn, and pass along to the south of George's Banks, and striking the southern coast of Nova Scotia, deposit their spawn amongst its numerous islands and bays where they have not been molested to any extent in the early part of the season.

I could go on and read much more of that, but I will not take the time of the Senate.

Now from the same letter:

Also, to give you an idea how sensitive large mackerel are and how easily frightened and driven from their grounds, have often seen large bodies of mackerel, when first coming upon them, anywhere from one to fifty schools at one time may be seen from the mast-head, the fleet would in a few hours break up and drive from sight the whole body of fish. They would not be seen on that ground for days after, and probably not again during the season. Again, vessels sailing along leave a narrow strip of boiling and foaming water after them for many minutes. We sailors call it the wake.

He claims that wake in itself being made through the schools of mackerel frightens them off.

This is from Mr. H. S. Fisher, of New York:

The mackerel caught south early in the season are the poorest fish known to the trade, as you and all other dealers know. They are sold fresh, mostly in this market, and controlled by three or four fresh-fish dealers. When the market is overstocked, if the fish are sound they are split and salted. The largest receipts of fresh mackerel ever known here was in the month of April, 1885, and a large part of them were in very poor condition. The good—that is, the sound ones—brought fair prices, but the poor—soft and broken—were sold for any price they could get, even as low as 25 cents a cart-load.

They are called cheap food for the people. I think all such food should be condemned. They lay there by millions on the docks and were carried away in that promiscuous manner. Here is a letter from J. C. Young, agent of Commercial Wharf Company, Wellfleet, Mass.:

But now, since the vessels go out so early, "say the middle of March," they find the mackerel, break up the schools, drive them from their old spawning grounds, and when caught, put on the market a poor and sickly quality of fish that is ruinous both to the consumer and producer, and is ruining the whole business, "as you well know."

Mr. MILLER. Will the Senator permit me again? I know he will.

Mr. PALMER. Always.

Mr. MILLER. This wonderful witness seems to have found mackerel on the spawning ground.

Mr. PALMER. I have been reading four or five——

Mr. MILLER. This particular one seems to have found them on the spawning ground in the middle of March. What becomes of the theory that they go up the coast of Maine, and perhaps to the Bay of Fundy, and do not spawn till June or July? The witness and the committee disagree on this question. Here the man finds the spawning ground away down South in the middle of March, and says they are frightened away.

Mr. PALMER. I do not know how many explanations I shall have to make to the Senator from New York to give him a clear insight into this mackerel migration. I will say now, and I hope it will be for the last time, that they appear in March off Cape Hatteras; they keep up along the shore harassed and annoyed by those sail vessels till the 1st of July, when they commence to deposit their spawn. The gentleman seems to be a little confused as to what the spawning season is. He thinks it is the last climax of that effort of nature. It is the whole gestative period from the 1st of March to the 1st or last of July, and if he will take into consideration that that time includes about four months, it will save me or other gentlemen a great deal of confusion hereafter in answering ny objection.

Mr. MILLER. The Senator could have saved himself and myself a great deal of trouble if he had drawn this bill so as to cover that period of four or five months.

Mr. PALMER. Is that clear?

Mr. MILLER. Not yet. The first question I asked was, if this wonderful witness found these fish on the spawning-beds, as he tells us, on the 1st of March, and if the Senator tells us they do not spawn until July, must they carry the spawning-bed with them? I think so.

Mr. PALMER. I think I have made it clear that the spawning season is from the 1st of March to the last of July. What was the other question the Senator asked?

Mr. MILLER. I hope the Reporter will get this scientific discussion carefully down, because if the spawning period of mackerel is extended from the 1st of March to the middle of July the scientific world will be surprised, and they will want to have this discussion very carefully reported.

Mr. PALMER. It is getting late and I hope the gentleman will not interrupt any further except as to some point that he has not been informed on. We have here any number of letters and any amount of testimony in regard to the numbers of mackerel thrown away every year. None make it less than 75,000 barrels.

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] spoke of some professor on the coast of Scotland who had given his time and efforts to the herring fishery to determine whether anything man could do could deplete the ocean. I will say that Professor Huxley, if he is the gentleman to whom the Senator refers, does say that nothing man can do in the way of the spoliation of the sea of fish will amount to anything, but Professor Huxley had never seen a purse-seine.

In the testimony before the committee I asked Mr. Blackford, a very intelligent gentleman, the fish commissioner of New York, if the methods were as destructive in the herring fishery, and he said he thought they were. I asked if they had purse-seines. He said he thought not. I do not believe that the purse-seine is used on the British coast; but I think it is fairly deducible from the tables and from the percentages, as shown by the Boston fish bureau, that the tendency of the use of these purse-seines is to break up the schools, frighten the older and wiser fish, the No. 1 mackerel, outside of their ordinary routes, and drive them off onto the banks of Nova Scotia. It is fair to infer that fish have intelligence. The Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER] is too good a sportsman to contend that they have not. They have sufficient, enough to protect themselves, of that instinct of self-preservation.

And right here, it appears in the evidence that codfish on the Banks will go off at the fall of a single barrel on the deck, will some times disappear and be gone for a whole day, that the fishermen on the Banks take the offal 40 or 50 miles out to sea and throw it overboard, rather than to throw it overboard amid the schools of fish. Here are a hundred thousand barrels of dead fish thrown over to frighten these schools away from their ordinary route.

Now these men come to Congress and ask for this act. I think that they are entitled to consideration. It has always been the policy of the Government to lend a willing ear to any of the complaints of the men who have manned our Navy, of the men who fought with Perry on Lake Erie, with McDonough on Lake Champlain, and with old Commodore Hull on the Constitution and on the United States, and in all those naval battles that have given our country its prestige upon the ocean.

I ask that this bill with the amendments made by the committee may pass and that this trial may be made. Its operation is being deferred a year or two. If it is going to work any hardship it can be repealed after there may be a further expression upon the subject.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, there is one thing which has been stated here that I wish the Senate to distinctly understand, and that is that there is not one single mackerel fishing vessel with a seine west and south of Massachusetts—not one. There is not one in New Jersey, or New York, or Pennsylvania, and there is not a fisherman outside of Massachusetts and Maine that has the slightest earthly interest in this bill except as it is intended to preserve the fish. That is a queer monopoly that the Senator from New Jersey and the Senator from New York talk about. Here is a fleet of two hundred vessels, every one of them belonging to Massachusetts and Maine, every one of them proposing to make money in the spring fishing, every one of them fitting out to go down to the fishery off Hatteras and go to fishing, and yet, amazing to say, they unite to a man in asking you to pass a bill which shall absolutely prevent them from going down on the coast to fish. Why do they do that? To create a monopoly in their interest; or is it in the interest of the people of the country? Talk about monopoly! There has not been one single man before the Committee on Fisheries, there was not a man before our Committee on Foreign Relations—and we investigated this to a certain extent—who said one single word against the close time of mackerel, except one or two fish-marketmen; and the fish-marketmen of New York have had one fish-marketman here nearly this whole session of Congress, busy to fill the minds of Senators with the idea that this was a monopoly in the interest of Maine and Massachusetts, the Yankees, as the distinguished Senator from New York with good taste said.

Mr. President, what is the fact? The fact is that these mackerel when they come to the coast are as poor as they can be. The fact is that with the mackerel it is just the same as it is with salmon and trout, and every known fish with known habits, that they eat very little indeed while they are bearing spawn. I hope the Senator from New York has finally got it through his head that spawning time is not the time when they deposit their spawn. These mackerel are bearing spawn from the time they approach the coast in the middle of March up to June, and through June when they deposit their spawn no man can take them with a purse-seine because they are out of sight, they are deep down in the water, and the purse-seine only takes them when they are coming up in shoals on top.

It is another fact which I know myself—for I am something of a fisherman—that twenty years ago, before the purse-seines were invented, you could start down on the coast of North Carolina and you could follow these fish away up to the coast of Maine, and there would be dozens and dozens of little boats of 10, 15, 20, and 25 feet keel catching mackerel for market with hook and line. It is a fact to-day that these things are unknown, that these boats have stopped undertaking to fish with hook and line. It is a fact that twenty years ago I have taken mackerel by the score and score right from the wharf with a hook and line, and the whole bay full of them, and now the mackerel in those bays are almost absolutely unknown. It is fact that all along the bays on this coast used to be full of mackerel and that to-day it is an exceptional thing to take a dozen mackerel in a day's fishing with a boat. What has done it? There is where you were hurting the poor men who want to fish. What has done it? The purse-seine.

Mr. MILLER. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. FRYE. No; I will not yield to the Senator from New York. He has occupied the floor now about half the time of this discussion, and he is going to reply to me.

Mr. MILLER. I am very much obliged to the Senator.

Mr. FRYE. You are entirely welcome.

I say it is a fact, Mr. President, that these poor men are deprived to-day of the rights which used to exist, and why? Because two or three hundred Maine and Massachusetts fishermen in vessels from 75 to 150 tons each, armed with two great purse-seines that can gather in half an acre of mackerel seen on the top of the water, go down in the middle of March off Cape Hatteras; they put a man at the masthead, and day and night, without any cessation, they pursue these schools of mackerel from the time they come to the shore until they go down into the deep water and drop their spawn.

The mackerel is the most timid fish that swims in the sea, more timid than the trout even, or the salmon, and this process of taking these fish with the great purse-seines by a hundred or two hundred fishermen has not depleted them. Nobody on earth knows whether they are depleted. Professor Baird does not undertake to say whether they are depleted or not. He does not undertake to say whether man can deplete them or not; but they are driven away from the shores and from the fishermen accustomed to fish in boats on the shores. So the evidence before our committee was that the large majority of the mackerel taken were taken from 15 to 20 miles from the shore, where the small boats could not venture and do not venture.

The men interested in the mackerel business believe that if you will put a close time on mackerel, run it up to the first of June when they begin to spawn and go to the bottom and out of the way of the purse-seines, your catch of mackerel will come back to its usual haunts, and that the people from North Carolina up to the State of Maine can go back to the old way of fishing, where they can go out in their little boats and catch from one hundred to five hundred mackerel in a day and take them ashore and get their pay and have them in the market all up and down.

What is the operation now? These great fleets of vessels go down into the southern waters. They have an immense draught of fish, and they hie away as quickly as they can to the port of New York in order to land them before they spoil. Then they are landed in the great city of New York by millions, and, as the Senator from New York said, they are sold to the fish dealers for 1 cent apiece or 10 cents for twenty-five, and in one single year 35,000 barrels were thrown overboard into the sea as spoiled.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. MILLER. The Senator puts words into my mouth that I did not use; and therefore I do not ask his courtesy to correct it at this time.

Mr. FRYE. I will put it into somebody's mouth. Somebody said it. It is the fact, notwithstanding, that the fishermen were compelled to sell their fish for a cent apiece to the fishmongers of New York city or twenty-five for 10 cents. Who was it said that they were sold at 10 cents for twenty-five? The Senator from New York I think said it.

Mr. PALMER. No; I said it.

Mr. HAWLEY. A witness said it.

Mr. MILLER. If the Senator will permit me, what I read was the testimony of what the Senator sees fit to call a fishmonger, Hon. Eugene Blackford, of New York, a distinguished citizen of the State of New York, one of our Fish Commissioners, as he has been for years.

Mr. FRYE. He sells fish, does he not?

Mr. HALE. I understand him to be the principal fish dealer in Fulton Market.

Mr. MILLER. In his own testimony before your committee, which I read here, he said the price at which they were sold was the price at which they were sold by the dealers, not by the fishermen themselves. They were handled by the dealers, the whole of them.

Mr. FRYE. And that same year 30,000 barrels of them were thrown away as absolutely useless. Every year, when sudden luck comes to these fishermen, and they are obliged to hasten to port to get rid of their draughts of mackerel, half of them sometimes are thrown away and wasted.

The trouble is that our fishermen are frightening the mackerel away from their haunts, and that the fishermen on the shores can not get the chance to take one a day with hook and line.

Mr. GRAY. Their rights are saved in the bill by an amendment which has been adopted.

Mr. FRYE. The Senator from Delaware calls my attention to the fact that all the old-fashioned fishing is saved by an amendment to the bill.

There is another thing to which I wish to call attention. The Senator from New York says this is a very strange bill; that if the scientists and learned men in fish want to protect the mackerel why do they allow nets and seines on the shore? It ought to be obvious to a man who knows anything about fishing what it is allowed for. The bill absolutely permits the landing of mackerel during the specified length of time all up and down this coast from seines and nets attached to the shore. What for? To take mackerel? Not at all. They are not placed there to take mackerel. They are placed there to take the other spring fish which come upon the shore, but there will be mackerel that will get into the nets and into the weirs, and we do not wish to compel those fishermen with nets and weirs to throw away mackerel and waste them and make them useless. We were protecting the rights of those poor men on shore, so that if a few mackerel did get into their nets and weirs they could sell them and not be compelled to destroy them. There can be no objection to that. That was suggested by Professor Baid himself, the greatest scientist in fishing there is in this country.

Mr. President, it is an experiment worth trying, to see whether, if you will prevent these fishermen from Maine and Massachusetts from pursuing these methods, the mackerel will not come back to our shores once more and enable the poor men up and down the coast to reap the harvest they used to reap years ago, before seine-fishing was invented. It is an experiment, I admit, but we never shall learn anything or gain anything if we do not make experiments. There is one thing to be observed. Every owner of a fishing vessel who testified in relation to this matter testified that in his opinion the experiment ought to be tried. Every one so testified; there was not an exception.

The Senator from New York says that the poor fishermen will be themselves deprived of work. It is not so. They will not be deprived of work. So careful has the committee been to protect in the bill the rights of the poor men that there is a provision in it which protects the fishermen. What is that? It is a provision extending the time when the bill shall take effect up to 1888, as proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. That provision protects the fishermen. I will admit that if the bill went into force to-day it would do harm to fishermen. I admit that all those craft to-day are ready for the ocean and for Hatteras. I admit that their captains and cooks and crews are engaged for a three months' trip to take mackerel, and if the bill took effect to-day they could not change from a mackerel to a cod fisherman in a month's time.

Mr. MILLER. Can they change by next year?

Mr. FRYE. Next year every one of them will have been changed into a cod-fisherman during that time. They will then pursue the cod-fishing occupation.

Mr. MILLER. The codfish will all be destroyed.

Mr. FRYE. I will risk the codfish. I have here a bundle of letters from New York, from Boston, and from Maine touching the matter of close time on mackerel, and there is not a man from New York or anywhere else who says in his letter that you ought not to try the experiment, and every one of them, they being men who have fitted out their vessels for the South, simply asks Congress that it will so amend the bill as to have it take effect next year and not this. That is all they ask. What for? That is in order to give the fishermen time to transfer their vessels from mackerel fishermen to cod and halibut fishermen, and to give them time to fit them for that business. It requires a good deal of time. They want to have time to fit their craft for that business, and then these same fishermen will be pursuing that occupation, instead of murdering the mackerel as they are now doing on the coast from Hatteras up.

Mr. MILLER. Notwithstanding the kind reminder of the Senator from Maine that I had occupied nearly all the time of the Senate on this bill, I have not done it to the exclusion of any Senator who desires to speak, and therefore I will venture even at this late moment to say a few words more regarding to it, unless the Senate want to adjourn.

The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] thought it very important to put the bill in a proper light before the Senate. He stated that it was necessary that he should put the bill in a proper light before the Senate in order that there might be no misapprehension of the objects of the bill and the persons it was intended to benefit. He stated that the bill was desired by all the people engaged in the industry of mackerel fishing, and that it was only opposed by the fishmongers of the city of New York. I am entirely willing to take the bill upon that basis.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will my friend from New York yield to me to move an adjournment?

Mr. HALE. I hope the Senator from Vermont will not make that motion. To-morrow is to be given up to eulogies, and I think we can get through with this bill in half an hour.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is not possible for us to get through with it this evening. I will move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HALE. I wish the Senator would not make that motion.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is perfectly useless to try to finish the bill now. You can not get it through this evening.

Mr. HALE. Then before the motion is put let us have an understanding. I hope the Senator from Michigan in charge of the bill will try to get it up the first thing on Thursday morning before the time comes when the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] will occupy the attention of the Senate with his bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. To that I agree.

Mr. MILLER. You can not make any agreement certainly; you can make the effort.

Mr. PALMER. I shall certainly make the effort, and I give notice to that effect.

Mr. HALE. Directly after the routine morning business.

Mr. PALMER. Directly after the routine morning business.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT HOUSTON, TEX.

Mr. STEWART, of Texas. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 93) authorizing the construction of a public building for a post-office in the city of Houston, Texas, and that the same be now considered.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire by purchase or condemnation a site for, and cause to be erected thereon, a suitable building, with fire-proof vaults therein, for the accommodation of the post-office and other Government offices, at the city of Houston, in the State of Texas. The plans, specifications, and full estimates for said building shall be previously made and approved according to law, and shall not exceed for the site and building complete the sum of $75,000: Provided, That the site shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire in adjacent buildings by an open space of not less than 40 feet, including streets and alleys; and no money appropriated for this purpose shall be available until a valid title to the site for said building shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Texas shall have ceded to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein.

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds recommended the following amendment:

Add to the bill as follows:

"Nor shall any site be purchased until estimates for the erection of a building which will furnish sufficient accommodations for the transaction of the public business, and which shall not exceed in cost the balance of the sum herein limited after the site shall have been purchased and paid for, shall have been approved by the Secretary of the Treasury."

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask to have the report read.

The report (by Mr. DIBBLE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 93) authorizing the construction of a public building for a post-office in the city of Houston, Tex., have considered the same, and respectfully report:

Houston is situated at the head of navigation on Buffalo Bayou, and has a population of not less than 35,000.

The railroads entering Houston are as follows: Southern Pacific Railway, Houston and Texas Central, International and Great Northern, Texas and New Orleans, Gulf, Colorado and Santa Fé, Galveston and Houston, Houston and Columbia, Texas Western, Texas Transportation, and Houston East and West Texas. Besides these roads, two others are now being constructed that will soon reach Houston.

The city of Houston is the first and only tidal point touched by the Southern Pacific Railway between the Mississippi River and the Pacific Ocean, and it is the railroad center of the great State of Texas. It is also a city of commercial importance, there being over 700,000 bales of cotton handled in said city every year.

From the fact that so many railroads concenter at Houston, it is a great mail-distributing point, and is the depository of a great number of other post-offices in the State of Texas. At the post-office in Houston, during one quarter, more than 500,000 mail packages of different kinds were received, delivered, and forwarded from said office, and for the same quarter the money-order department of this office received and paid out the sum of $154,121.18.

Your committee are of the opinion that the public building provided for in the bill should be erected, and report the bill to the House with the recommendation that it do pass, with the following amendment to be added to the bill:

"Nor shall any site be purchased until estimates for the erection of a building which will furnish sufficient accommodations for the transaction of the public business, and which shall not exceed in cost the balance of the sum herein limited after the site shall have been purchased and paid for, shall have been approved by the Secretary of the Treasury."

Mr. HOLMAN. I believe there is no Federal court at this point?

Mr. STEWART, of Texas. No, sir.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The amendment was adopted, and the bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. STEWART, of Texas, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SEAL ROCKS, SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

Mr. FELTON. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 2428) to grant certain seal rocks to the city and county of San Francisco, State of California, in trust for the people of the United States, and that the same be put upon its passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That all the right and title of the United States in and to the rocky islets known as the Seal Rocks, and all rights to seals resorting there, situated off Point Lobos, in the city and county of San Francisco, State of California, are hereby granted, subject to the provisions named, in trust to said city and county, upon the following conditions and for the following uses, to wit: Said city and county shall hold said Seal Rocks inalienable for all time, in trust for the people of the United States, and shall commit to the commissioners of Golden Gate Park the custody and care of said Seal Rocks, and shall keep said rocks free from encroachment by man, and shall preserve from molestation the seals and other animals now accustomed to resort there, to the end that said Seal Rocks will continue to be a public preserve and resort for seals: Provided, That the United States may at all times control and limit or diminish the number of the seals resorting to said rocks so as to protect the fisheries and fishing industries: And provided further, That whenever any of said rocks, or the space occupied by said rocks, shall be required by the United States for the erection or maintenance of any public work, or for any other purpose, then as to the rocks or space so required the provisions of this act shall terminate, and the United States shall be reinvested with the full title, control, and possession thereof. Said city and county shall signify its acceptance of this trust, and thereupon the Commissioner of the General Land Office shall file in his office a plat showing the locus of said Seal Rocks, and said plat shall be the evidence of the extent and position of the premises hereby granted.

SEC. 2. That all acts in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby declared inapplicable to the premises hereby granted.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust there will be a word of explanation. It seems to be a proper measure. As I understand the bill it proposes to put the Seal Rocks under the control of the city of San Francisco.

Mr. FELTON. It simply gives a police regulation of these Seal Rocks; and the bill provides if the United States desires to do so for any purpose whatsoever they can resume the protection of the island. The object of the bill is simply to protect a natural curiosity.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FELTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING, BROOKLYN, N. Y.

Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill H. R. 10305, and that the same be put upon its passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the amount heretofore fixed as the limit of cost for the erection of a public building by the United States Government at Brooklyn, N. Y., be, and the same is hereby, increased to $1,500,000, and that sum is hereby fixed as the limit of cost for the erection of said building, exclusive of cost of site heretofore purchased.

SEC. 2. That the officers of the United States Government having charge of the erection of public buildings are authorized and required to be governed by the limitation hereby prescribed in making contracts for the erection of said building.

SEC. 3. That the sum of $1,278,594.12 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be used and expended for the purposes provided in this act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. EDEN. I would like to know how much increase this bill proposes. What was the original amount appropriated for this building?

Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL. Eight hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. EDEN. It appears to me, Mr. Speaker, that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds might as well waive the useless formality of fixing a limit in these cases of appropriations for public buildings.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FRANCES W. DYER.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 1071) for the relief of Mrs. Frances W. Dyer, and that the same be put upon its passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $100 to Frances W. Dyer, administratrix of the estate of William P. Dyer, late of Belfast, in the State of Maine, deceased, the same being the amount deposited with the clerk of the United States court for the district of Alabama by said William P. Dyer on his recognizance to appear and answer to a suit for an alleged violation of section 5347 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, in which said suit the entry of nolle prosequi was made, and the said sum of $100 was covered into the Treasury of the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MILLIKEN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT HUNTSVILLE, ALA.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 305) for the erection of a public building at Huntsville, Ala., and that the bill be put upon its passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase a site for and cause to be erected a suitable building, with proper fire-proof vaults therein, for the accommodation of the courts of the United States, post-office, land office, internal-revenue offices, and other Government offices at the city of Huntsville, Ala. The site, and building thereon, when completed upon plans and specifications to be previously made and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall not exceed the cost of $100,000.

Provided, That no money to be appropriated for this purpose shall be available until a valid title to the site of said building shall be vested in the United States, to be approved by the Attorney-General, and until the State of Alabama shall have ceded to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of any civil processes therein. And the sum of $50,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to be used and expended in the purchase of said site and toward the construction of said building: Provided, That the site shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire in adjacent buildings by an open space of not less than forty feet, including streets and alleys around the same.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The committee recommended an amendment as follows: After the word "dollars," in line 12 of the printed bill, insert—

nor shall any site be purchased until estimates for the erection of a building which will furnish sufficient accommodations for the transaction of the public business, and which shall not exceed in cost the balance of the sum herein limited after the site shall have been purchased and paid for, shall have been approved by the Secretary of the Treasury; and no purchase of site, nor plan for said building, shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury involving an expenditure exceeding the said sum of $100,000 for site and building.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WHEELER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the able.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. MCMILLIN in the chair).

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6977) relating to the compensation and duties of United States attorneys, marshals, and commissioners, and for other purposes.

Mr. HAMMOND. This bill has been considered heretofore for an hour and a quarter, and there was some general debate upon it. The principle of the bill is to have the compensation of United States marshals and attorneys hereafter made by salaries instead of by specific fees. It also affects the fees of United States commissioners. An effort has been made by the bill to classify these officers and fix their fees.

I do not know very much about the details of the bill because I was not present all the while at the time when it was considered in committee, but I call it up now because of the absence of the chairman of the committee, and at the request of the committee. If we undertake to take up this bill by sections and grumble over the specific items of compensation to individual officers throughout the United States, it will be impossible to pass the bill during the two hours allotted to us.

Mr. REED. I suggest to the gentleman from Georgia to save time that he withdraw the bill, because I shall insist on that course being pursued.

Mr. HAMMOND. I do not know that the gentleman from Maine speaks the voice of the House in that particular.

Mr. REED. It requires unanimous consent, and therefore I do speak the voice of the House.

Mr. HAMMOND. What requires unanimous consent?

Mr. REED. That you refrain from reading the bill paragraph by paragraph.

Mr. HAMMOND. I made no such proposition.

Mr. REED. But such must be the case unless unanimous consent is granted, and I do not propose to grant it.

Mr. HAMMOND. I stated if opposition was made upon each individual office and there was no real purpose to adopt this plan of course the bill would be defeated; but if the House is disposed to adopt that plan and is willing to concede that a bill even not perfect—if you please quite imperfect—might be passed and adjusted hereafter by the Senate or in a committee of conference, then we can make some progress with this bill. If we can not do it in that way I concede the two hours will not be perhaps wasted, but will not bear any fruit toward legislation. Gentlemen in that time may give good reasons however for the bill, and if no other good is done it may pave the way for this plan or some better plan in the next Congress. It is certainly true that at present there is great complaint of the fee system in many quarters of the country, perhaps in every quarter, and it is certainly true that some remedy should be applied.

This House has passed a bill very similar to this heretofore. The House has indicated in various reports of its committees in this Congress and in prior Congresses a disposition to have such legislation. Whether we can have it now, of course, will depend on the opposition that this bill will meet.

Mr. REED. If the gentleman will permit me, I made the observations which I did make in the interest of the public business, and in response to what I supposed was the suggestion of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND]. I made it because I think the Judiciary Committee have matters of importance to present in case this bill should fail. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] has already indicated the circumstances under which he thinks it may fail, and I say to him that it seems to me that those circumstances exist, and that, therefore, the wisest course would be to proceed to some of the other valuable measures which the Committee on the Judiciary are doubtless prepared to present.

Mr. HAMMOND. It so happens, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] does not know what committee is before the House. This bill is not from the Committee on the Judiciary; it is from the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice, and it happens to be the only bill that we have.

Mr. REED. The only bill that the committee have?

Mr. HAMMOND. So far as I am advised.

Mr. REED. Well, Mr. Chairman, I thought we had gone by the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice, and were beginning over again; and seeing the gentleman on his feet who ordinarily represents the Judiciary Committee and, as my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG] suggests, represents it so well, I naturally supposed that the bill came from that committee.

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Chairman, to test the sense of the committee on this subject I move that the committee now rise and report the bill to the House with the recommendation that a day be fixed for its consideration.

Mr. ROGERS. I hope the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] will allow me two or three minutes before that motion is put.

Mr. HAMMOND. Certainly. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS].

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I have given the subject-matter of this bill and the bill itself most careful consideration, and I should not hesitate to let it come forward now for discussion if I had present the papers and documents that I desire to use in the discussion; but I want to advise the House now that whatever defects may arise under the system by which our courts are at present carried on, this bill is an hundred-fold more inequitable and unjust in almost every provision of it than that system.

Mr. REED. Hear, hear.

Mr. ROGERS. I have undertaken to consult the officers of the Department of Justice in relation to this bill—I do not mean the Attorney-General of the United States, but those officers whose duty it is to audit the accounts of the marshals and district attorneys; I have submitted for their consideration several of the provisions of this bill in order that I might be enabled, in furtherance of what seems to be the desire of many persons, to do something to perfect the bill; but I had rather undertake to make two bills than to perfect this one. It can not be done. It is impossible to take up this bill and examine it without almost impeaching the motives of the committee that reported it, so unjust and inequitable are its provisions.

Mr. REED. Striking out the enacting clause would perfect it. [Laughter.]

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, Mr. Chairman, I adopt the suggestion of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED]. Striking out the enacting clause of the bill would perfect it, and that is the only thing that would perfect it, except the adoption of a substitute.

Therefore I do hope that in these closing days of this session of Congress, with so much important legislation demanding the attention of the House, we will not fritter away any of our limited time in the consideration of a measure of this sort, the only offspring of a committee of the Forty-ninth Congress, a measure which this House, when it comes to understand it, must repudiate as utterly spurious and incapable of carrying into effect the purposes for which it is intended. I hope that we shall not consume any time now in considering this bill. I do not know but what, if we had time and the committee would sit down to perfect the bill in the light of the facts as they exist all over the country, I would undertake to support the principle involved in it, though even that is doubtful—exceedingly doubtful. But I do not wish to embark now in that undertaking. I simply want to say, in conclusion, that after a careful, painstaking study of the subject, with the view of correcting the evils in the present system, of which complaint is now made, I am convinced that the existing system is infinitely better than that proposed in this bill, and that the bill ought not to be considered or allowed to consume any of the time or attention of the House to-day.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I regret to hear the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS] declaim so violently against the provisions of this bill. He speaks of the accounting officers of the Department of Justice. I happen to know something about those officers as well as the gentleman. During the last Congress I was a member of a committee which reported a bill very similar to this, and that bill was taken by me, in person, to the Department of Justice. Every man in that Department at that time who had anything to do with the auditing of the accounts of these court officers was present; every line of the bill was read and examined in their presence, and, with the amendments which they suggested and which were accepted, the provisions of the bill met their cordial approbation.

Mr. ROGERS. If the gentleman will permit me, I simply want to state that this is not the Springer bill; it is not substantially the Springer bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. It is, except in so far as changing some of the salaries is concerned.

Mr. ROGERS. That is the whole bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is a mere matter of detail which can be regulated in the committee when the bill comes up. The smallest question presented in the bill is whether the district attorney in one locality should have more money than the district attorney in another. That is a mere matter of detail.

Mr. REED. The gentleman is correct. The principle is so utterly wrong that these questions of detail sink into insignificance.

Mr. SPRINGER. I know the gentleman from Maine meets the proposition upon the broad ground that fees should be given to officers instead of salaries. That is the ground on which the bill ought to be met—not that of my friends here who think the salaries have not been rightly distributed. The only opposition that can be offered to this bill properly and with consistency is an opposition based upon the claim that the fee system for the payment of marshals and United States attorneys should be perpetuated.

Mr. REED. I think the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] misunderstood my remark. I meant that the principle of this bill is so thoroughly bad.

Mr. SPRINGER. I know the gentleman means that. But the principle of this bill was passed upon in the Forty-eighth Congress, when we adopted by an almost unanimous vote—there were only six or seven votes in the negative—an amendment to an appropriation bill embodying this principle; but the Senate rejected that amendment, not because they were opposed to the principle, but because they objected to legislation upon an appropriation bill, and therefore declined to consider it.

We have the testimony of every Attorney-General who has considered this question—especially the Attorney-General under the last administration, Mr. Brewster, and the present Attorney-General—in fact of all the officers in the Department of Justice in this administration as well as the last administration, that the fee system as now practiced for the payment of United States marshals and district attorneys is the worst system of paying public officials that can possibly be devised. It continually offers to our officials a premium to prosecute persons merely for the sake of getting compensation, and not for the purpose of enforcing the law or punishing criminals. This system has caused expenditures in some of the States to be run up to an enormous extent. I refer again to an incident that occurred in the State of Texas a few years ago, when the United States marshal, in order to swell the volume of his fees, caused every voter in one county to be subpœnaed as a witness, and brought 50 or 60 miles to another county to appear in a case on trial in a United States court. The judge in that case testified before the committee of which I was a member that five witnesses would have been sufficient to prove every disputed point in the case.

A MEMBER. Where was that?

Mr. SPRINGER. In Texas. Over two thousand persons were subpœnaed in one case, and brought upon the cars a distance of 40, 50, or 60 miles to testify as witnesses. It also appeared in evidence that in one county in the State of Alabama every male inhabitant over the age of twenty-one years had had his turn at the marshal's mill; had been indicted and taken a long distance for the purpose of being tried, and that not one conviction resulted.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Does the gentleman say that every male inhabitant of the county was indicted?

Mr. SPRINGER. Every male inhabitant above the age of twenty-one years.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Then who composed the grand jury?

Mr. SPRINGER. The grand jury did not sit in that county, but in a remote part of the State, where the United States court was held. It appears in all these cases that these prosecutions, begun for the sake of the fees, are instituted at points as remote as possible from the place where the trials are to be held.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. I will ask the gentleman whether it is not a fact that these fees of marshals and United States attorneys have been increased during the last year?

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not know. I presume that if they do their duty they ought to bring a great many prosecutions. But I can cite the fact that in the southern district of Illinois all the expenses of the United States court have decreased under this administration from $75,000 to $50,000, simply because the Attorney-General and the district attorney put a stop to these prosecutions for trivial offenses.

If gentlemen will consider this bill fairly and candidly they will find that it will give proper remuneration to every district attorney and marshal in the United States. It will provide for the proper and vigorous enforcement of the law, but will in no case offer a premium to a public official to use the great power of this Government for judicial oppression and to swell his own emoluments. This system has grown to such an extent that even its friends are compelled to admit, and do admit in every case where the facts are brought to their attention, that the fee system is corrupting in its tendencies and does not result in a vigorous and wholesome enforcement of the laws.

I hope this bill will be put in some position under the rules of the House where it can be considered by sections, and the details of it, to which the gentleman from Arkansas refers, shall be perfected, and the bill passed.

Mr. HAMMOND. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SYMES].

Mr. SYMES. Mr. Chairman, the point I desire to make in regard to this bill is that it is one of the most important measures that can be brought to the attention of this House. It proposes to graduate the salaries of all the district attorneys of the United States.

It proposes to establish salaries in lieu of fees for all United States marshals in this country. It proposes also to regulate the summonsing of witnesses.

Sir, it is a bill that this House can not properly consider, after the attention of members has been brought to it, in less than two or three days and do any justice to the subject. And are we asked at this late day of this short session to take up this bill during the second morning hour and supersede with it a system that has somewhat become a growth in this country after an operation of near a hundred years?

Sir, I am not standing here to combat any of the positions or statements of fact on the part of the gentleman from Illinois, or the position assumed by the gentleman from Georgia. I am only standing here, sir, pleading to this House not to make the mistake of attempting to substitute for that old system, although it is very defective, a crude, new measure that may prove to be twenty times worse.

Why, sir, when we come to examine this bill we find that a district attorney in some districts has $5,000 salary while the work that he is called upon to perform is not 25 per cent. of that for which a salary is fixed in another district where the attorney gets half of that sum. So it is also with United States marshals; and so it is also in regard to other crude statements we find in the bill, and what I desire to impress upon the House is that nothing can be done now to perfect a bill of this importance in the short time allotted for this discussion, and to undertake to do so would do injustice and lead to extravagance in regard to these questions pertaining to our judicial system. The only way to arrive at a correct solution is to let the intelligent lawyers of this House put their minds to it and consider the matter in Committee of the Whole for two or three days at least.

Mr. HAMMOND. The objections made to this bill are simply to the details, excepting in the case of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED], who has stated in a colloquy on the floor of the House that the "principle of the bill" is not good. As I understand him, he thinks the fee system is better than the salary system; that, therefore, is the issue to be decided upon this motion. If we can set apart a day for the consideration of this bill it can be discussed and fairly considered by paragraphs and adjusted to suit the views of different gentlemen.

I am free to say that I care not one copper about the salary in any district. If we can establish the system of salaries instead of fees, the details of such a system can be arranged in the future. I am willing that my friend from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS] shall present his own bill in all particulars, or I will take the Springer bill or any bill that the House shall pass which will establish the principle that the fee system shall be abolished and the salary system substituted in lieu thereof.

Do gentlemen know all the evils that grow out of this fee system? I believe I once before stated on this floor as illustrative of this measure what occurred in my own State in a colloquy between myself and a gentleman from Northern Georgia. He was a leading local politician, but his counties had not been voting, as I thought, correctly. I asked him, "Why do you not stir up the people and make them better Democrats?" He said, "What issue shall I present?" Jocosely I remarked, "If you can do no better, crush out the United States court there, which has got some six hundred or eight hundred people waiting until some pay the costs of prosecutions against them," for they do not always punish them, they just let them plead guilty and pay the costs. He said, "You do not know what you are talking about. That United States court is worth more to the section in which I live than any crop we raise. We get 10 cents a mile for coming to attend the court and returning home and $2 a day while we stay, and that pays us a great deal better than anything we can do at home."

That man told the plain truth. Within the past years in the northern district of Georgia over four hundred men pleaded guilty to violations of the internal-revenue laws, and were sent home on their own recognizances. The law was not enforced any further than the collection of the costs. I do not know that gentlemen have been influenced by improper motives. But it is human nature that men shall be influenced to make improper arrests and to prefer improper indictments where their bread depends upon the quantum of litigation. It seems to me we should elevate the standard of those officers. We would make matters much better by selecting men of integrity, pay such salaries as such men should have, and not leave them at liberty to scour the country in order to make their livings by pretended execution of the law. When I speak of the northern district of Georgia I do not mean to say that the officials in that district have been worse than the officers elsewhere. So far as I know they have not. I believe that there are more violations of the internal-revenue laws in the northern district of Georgia by large odds than there ought to be. There ought to be none.

But I have no idea that one man out of five who has been arrested for violation of the internal-revenue system was guilty. I have no idea that one in five was arrested solely because there was a good prima facie case against him. Nor is this any worse under one administration than another. It was bad under the old administration; it is as bad, so far as I know, under the new. The same causes will produce like effects always.

All I desire is that the House shall by a vote express whether we intend to change the fee system to the salary system. If we do not of course it is folly to discuss the details of this bill. Whether we do or do not it is folly to pursue it only in this hour and the next. If we intend to make the change we need a day in which to do it. If we do not, let the proposition be made for a day to consider, and let it be voted down, and thus end the battle.

Mr. REED. I do not know that it is possible to get the attention of the House even to a brief statement of the reasons why I regard this bill as vicious in principle. I think it had its origin in one of the most fatal sources of mistake in legislation, namely, the attempt to legislate on account of certain abuses which have arisen under existing law. Men have been fired by such statements as have been made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] as to transactions in remote counties of Texas and by such exceptional instances as have been illustrated by the gentleman from Georgia, and the House and its members without considering the principles which underlie the proposition have by their eagerness to destroy abuses been led away to destroy also a valuable system.

Now why is it that the United States Government ought to pay fees for work which is done? It is because crimes have their own stimulus, and especially crimes against the United States. They almost all of them involve valuable pecuniary results. Men, therefore, are interested to commit such crimes, and in order to prevent them the United States must make it for the interests of its officials to look them up and to destroy them.

You will say, why is not that the fact with regard to county attorneys and to sheriffs in States? If you will consider a moment you will perceive that the crimes against the State and the crimes against the United States are entirely different in their character. Crimes against the State are crimes which are under the common law, and every lawyer knows that crimes which are punished by the common law have in their punishment and in their detection the support of every individual in the community. The officers of the law are there sustained by a vigorous and healthy sentiment, whereas the crimes against the United States are not those which are universally recognized as moral criminalties.

The whole community is awake to detect murder and to punish theft. But what community ever bestirred itself against frauds on the internal revenue, against moonshine distilleries, against smuggling, against a hundred things which are crimes against the United States? What, then, do you need in order to bring your criminals against the United States laws to detection? You need to have the officials stimulated by a similar self-interest to that which excites and supports and sustains the criminal; and if you should remit them to salaries with the community uninterested, unexcited in the detection of crime, the result would be an increase of evasions of the law, an increase which you could not prevent, and which in their total results would be much more disastrous than the matters which were related by the gentleman from Illinois, even if they were true, which I believe they are not.

And this is not a mere matter of theory. We have got an example in the history of this country. Years ago the merchants of New York, under an excitement very much like that which caused the inception of this legislation, came over here and caused the repeal of the moieties act; took away from the United States officials the pecuniary rewards which they received for smuggling. And what is the result? The undervaluations of importations have been so great and the criminalities have been so astounding that almost every honest American importer has been driven out of the field, and importations are made by the agents of foreign countries that come here and gather their tremendous revenues out of the United States and then go home and live among the communities which they honor by their presence. I say that that answer to the clamor which was made about the abuses of the moieties act has cost the Government of the United States millions on millions, and has driven hundreds of honest men out of the business of importing goods into the country. And now this same class of statesmen propose to destroy the enforcement of the laws of the United States within the realm after having nearly destroyed the enforcement of them upon the borders.

Mr. HOUK. I would like to ask the gentleman from Georgia a question.

Mr. HAMMOND. I will hear the gentleman's question.

Mr. HOUK. I find no provision made in the bill for the western district of Tennessee. How is this?

Mr. HAMMOND. That is provided for in the general clause "all others."

Mr. REED. One other observation I wish to direct to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND], and that is this: His present motion is not in order until after we have gone through the bill; therefore he will see the hopelessness of undertaking to have this bill considered at this time.

Mr. HAMMOND. I was not aware that the point of order was made.

Mr. REED. No point of order can be made until the proposition is submitted.

Mr. HAMMOND. I yield now to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT].

Mr. HERBERT. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] closed what he had to say in opposition to the principle of this bill by an allusion to the repeal of the moiety act. I do not understand that there is any clamor anywhere for the restoration of that act. Nowhere is there any desire or purpose to restore it, and to my mind, sir, however the gentleman from Maine may reason, the general acquiescence in the wisdom of repealing that law shows that public opinion has settled down in favor of the principle of this bill rather than against it. The gentleman says also that there ought to be a sufficient inducement to execute the law, because otherwise the marshals will fail to do it. I think a regular and good salary will be sufficient inducement, when we consider that marshals, like other officers of the United States, are, practically, removable at the pleasure of the appointing power. They will execute the law in order that they may retain their salaries.

Mr. REED. Do you think that would be sufficient in a "moonshine" district?

Mr. HERBERT. I certainly do.

Mr. REED. Then I must say you have more confidence in some people than I have.

Mr. HERBERT. I have confidence not that everybody will refrain from violating the law, but that the agents of the Government appointed to detect and expose violations of law will do so faithfully.

Mr. REED. And yet those same agents in whom you have so much confidence have betrayed us, according to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER], into the most terrible excesses.

Mr. SPRINGER. Those were appointed under the former administration.

Mr. REED. Almost all the appointees of the former administration have been retained by the present administration, and therefore have the indorsement of the Democratic party. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPRINGER. The marshals have been changed.

Mr. REED. We are all agreed about the present lot being perfectly good.

Mr. SPRINGER. No, I do not agree to that.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Chairman, we have agents of the Post-Office Department, agents of the Internal-Revenue Department, agents of the General Land Office; it is the business of all these different classes of agents to investigate and report offenses against the laws of the United States, and the system has been found to work well. As I before said, when we take into consideration the fact that there exists the power of removal—instantaneous removal—if an officer fails to do his duty, it seems to me that Attorney-General Devens and Attorney-General Brewster and Attorney-General Garland, and, so far as I know, every officer connected with the Department of Justice for the last ten years who has had anything to do with passing upon the accounts of these officials, have not been mistaken in favoring such a change as is proposed by this bill. If there be any one thing in which Congress ought to take the opinion of executive officers as authoritative it is a matter like this. We have not the time, amid all our various duties, to stop to investigate and ascertain the facts for ourselves; but whenever we do, whenever we look into the matter, we find that cases of abuse of the law are not, as the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] says they are, exceptional, but that such cases exist in all sections, North and South, East and West. Abuses have been shown under the Republicans and Democrats. It is but natural that the same temptations tend in greater or less degree towards the same results. The law ought to be so framed that there would be no temptation to do wrong.

[Here the hammer fell].

Mr. HAMMOND. I yield now ten minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia, the chairman of the committee reporting this bill. I did not know that he was present when the bill came up.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I did not expect to be present when this bill should be before the House at this session, and therefore by an arrangement on the part of the committee the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] was given charge of it; but I happen to be present to-day, and, feeling a great interest in the subject, I desire to express some opinions with regard to the provisions of this bill.

I do not think that I hazard anything when I say that all the machinery of the Department of Justice connected with the Federal courts has been for years "run" in such a way that instead of promoting justice it has been a means of oppression throughout this country from one end to the other. There is scarcely an abuse in connection with private suits or with corporate suits, where the officials of the Federal courts could get a hold, that has not been practiced, and the people have been ground and taxed by oppressive costs levied for the purpose of accumulating fortunes for the officials connected with those courts. I hazard nothing when I say that there is scarcely a State in this Union where the officials of the Federal courts have not run up the costs of their one or two courts to more than the costs of all the State courts. My statement in relation to this matter is made from investigation, not only in my own State but in other States.

The object of this bill is to remove from the officers of these courts the temptation and the opportunity for corruption and oppression, and at the same time to limit them in their power and direct them in their duties. What State in this Union holds out a reward to those who conduct its prosecutions and fixes their compensation in proportion to the number of prosecutions they bring? What other law in this country sustains or encourages such a system?

The gentleman from Maine talks about smuggling and violations of the revenue laws. Why, surely the gentleman knows that smuggling has no relation to the internal-revenue laws. Surely he knows that those who follow his lead and believe in his theory will understand that this smuggling arises from a high protective-tariff system instead of from internal-revenue laws. Smuggling has existed under every government in the world where there were embargo laws and where there was legislation unfriendly to the importation of foreign goods.

Such things do not arise from internal-revenue systems. If the gentleman had read history, and read it correctly, he would remember that at one time the British Crown itself was threatened by reason of the embargo laws against the introduction of foreign goods; and that without regard to internal laws.

Now, what this bill seeks is that the marshals and other officers, who stand to the Federal courts in the same relation as the sheriffs and other officers do to the State courts, shall be put upon the same footing with State officials, and paid for work done, not pay as a reward for oppression. Does not the gentleman know that under this internal-revenue system, in State after State, blank warrants have been issued, and marshals, furnished with these blank warrants, have gone out, arrested and brought in man after man, thus piling up the costs; passing commissioner after commissioner in order that fees and mileage might be accumulated?

At the last session of this Congress a bill of this kind, in a much more restricted form, passed the House almost unanimously. At this session, this bill having been referred to our committee, we thought, upon investigation and advice from the Departments of the Government, that some of the fees were too small; so that the committee, seeking to act fairly and justly and liberally with officers of the Federal Government, raised the salaries of a great number of these officers in many of the States.

The gentleman talks about the moiety system. Does he not know that the National Government condemned the moiety system, and the very party that inaugurated it repealed the law after having observed its operations, because it induced fraud and corruption and oppression. If the present system is right, if it is right that these inducements should be held out, why was it that the moiety system became so offensive and oppressive that a Congress controlled by the Republican party repealed it? This system as we have it now is but the moiety system to a limited extent, but in a more oppressive form. The men who suffered under the operation of the moiety system were persons of large means who did large business, and were able to fight the exactions imposed upon them and the corruptions connected therewith. Under the present system the poor people at their homes, who are unable to carry on a contest against these wrongs in the Federal courts, must submit to whatever is dictated to them and can not make any resistance whatever.

If the majority of this House prefer to curb our own officers, appointed under our own administration, if we prefer to prevent them from using their offices for political purposes, what possible objection can there be on the part of the minority? Why, Mr. Chairman, I know that in my own State, containing less than 600,000 population, having had during the last ten years an average of only some 500,000, one-sixth to one-tenth of all the prosecutions in the United States were carried on; and during the whole time only 30 gallons of whisky were ever discovered or confiscated. I know that under this system, for the purpose of making fees for officers, our people were dragged from their homes; men, women, and children were arrested without cause; and it was a common sight upon the streets of our capital, where the Federal court was held, that women sat upon the street corners nursing their children while officers of the Federal court were at work for the purpose of making fees out of them. A gentleman, now a member of Congress, who was the district attorney of my State, knows of the wrongs under this system; and his sense of justice, his humane heart, compelled him in one single year, out of a thousand prosecutions and indictments brought before one court, to dismiss over seven hundred as being frivolous, and instituted simply for the purpose of accumulating fees.

Mr. GOFF. The gentleman is mistaken. Those dismissals were not made in a single year, but during a term of years.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. The gentleman may be correct. I simply take the statement from the records of the Department of Justice and from the records of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

Mr. GOFF. I do not know what records the gentleman alludes to, but I am familiar with the facts.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. But whether those dismissals were made in one year or two years——

Mr. GOFF. They were made during several years.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Or whether they were made during several years, I have correctly stated the aggregate amount of dismissals as compared with the aggregate amount of prosecutions. Out of over a thousand prosecutions brought in a single court there were only two-hundred-odd convictions.

The CHAIRMAN. The ten minutes of the gentleman from West Virginia have expired.

Mr. HAMMOND. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. MILLIKEN].

Mr. MILLIKEN. I do not know, Mr. Chairman, that I shall desire to occupy as much as five minutes' time. I wish to say simply that I hope this bill, or something of the kind, will be enacted into a law.

There is some force in the remarks made by my colleague, Mr. REED, that certain officers need the stimulus of fees in order to cause them to do their duty; but I think there are a great many more instances where the stimulus of fees causes them to go beyond their duties and make themselves, in certain districts, nuisances to the people.

Now, I know of an instance in my own vicinity, and where we are not law-breakers, for we do not need the use of marshals very often, where a poor fellow who had been in two wars fighting for his country, who had fought in the war with Mexico, and had bravely fought for the Union in the late war, when a circus was held attended it, and some one who had a booth asked him to attend to the booth for a few moments while he stepped out somewhere. He was there, perhaps, thirty minutes and sold a few cigars, not knowing the fact that the man who kept the booth and for whom he was doing an act of accommodation had no license to sell, for he knew nothing whatever of the law. But having made the sale the United States marshal and the district attorney came 130 miles from the city of Portland and had a grave trial into the facts of the case, and sentenced the poor fellow to a fine of $150 for that little act; and the only way he could rid himself of the payment of the fine was to pay these fellows their fees and get them out of the way.

I know of another instance, which occurred within three months, where a postmaster had been informed by the Department that he was indebted in the amount of $48. He sent in his accounts showing the Department that that statement against him was not true; and yet, without any notice whatever to him, they went through the accounts the second time, and found that he was indebted, according to their second statement, on this examination, to the Department in the amount of 17 cents; and he was compelled to pay the 17 cents and, in addition, $49 in costs. And why? Because these officers desired their fees, and persecuted him like sleuth-hounds until they secured their compensation.

These are only a few instances, but many others might be cited. I do not believe it is necessary that the officers of the Government should be stimulated by fees to do their duty. Do not officers perform their duty where they are paid salaries quite as well as in those cases where they are paid by fees? In fact they know that the positions they hold depend upon the faithful discharge of their duties, and while I have no doubt that some of them might be derelict, yet I venture to say that the instances are rare where men holding good Government positions with proper salaries are willing to risk the chance of losing the position.

Mr. GOFF. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. MILLIKEN. Certainly; several questions.

Mr. GOFF. The suit to which you have referred against this postmaster was a civil suit for the recovery, was it not?

Mr. MILLIKEN. The district attorney was directed by the Department to bring suit.

Mr. GOFF. Could such suit have been instituted except by direction of the Department at Washington?

Mr. MILLIKEN. I do not know, but I presume not.

Mr. GOFF. The point I wish to make is this, that the gentleman should not visit his denunciations upon these officials when they are simply doing their duty—doing that which under the instructions of the Department they are compelled to do in obedience to their oath of office.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I have noticed the Departments have great need for the services of the district attorneys to find out in certain localities what their duty is.

Mr. GOFF. The gentleman is entirely mistaken. The statute compels the head of a Department to institute suits for any balances which may be due the Department, whether they are little or great; and in such cases of course the district attorney is called into requisition in the interest of whatever Department the claim belongs to.

Mr. MILLIKEN. But I notice the district attorney is a very weighty man in the settlement of all of these matters. There seems to be an undue importance attached to his position.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. But he can only bring suits under the orders of the Department.

Mr. GOFF. Of course; and he violates his duty if he does not bring suit under the instructions of the Department. This abuse of Government officers is therefore altogether uncalled for.

Mr. SYMES. Except we are led to understand in West Virginia that there is a different state of affairs——

The CHAIRMAN. The hour has expired.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MCMILLIN reported that the Committee of the Whole having had under consideration the bill (H. COMMITTEE APPOINTMENT.

The Speaker announced the appointment of Mr. RICHARDSON as a member of the Committee on Printing in place of Mr. REID, of North Carolina, resigned.

CONSIDERATION OF CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. SPRINGER, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That Friday, February 11, after the morning hour, shall be set apart for the consideration of Senate bill 2643, "supplemental to an act to afford assistance and relief to Congress and the Executive Departments in the investigation of claims and judgments against the Government," approved March 3, 1883, and amendments thereto.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BELMONT. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the unfinished business unless the Committee on Foreign Affairs presents some business under the special order for to-day.

Mr. STEELE. I will raise the question of consideration for the purpose of calling up another special order.

Mr. BELMONT. The House has assigned this day to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and I think I shall be within the rules if I call up for consideration the bill S. 2225.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that a House joint resolution relating to the same subject as the Senate bill indicated by the gentleman from New York is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. But the Senate bill to which the gentleman refers has never been reported back to the House by the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. BELMONT. The purpose of the Committee on Foreign Affairs was to take up the unfinished business, being the joint resolution (H. Res. 147). The committee has instructed me, as its chairman, to call up the Senate bill in its stead. It was my personal opinion that the better method would have been to discuss the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER. But the Senate bill is still in the Committee on Foreign Affairs. The gentleman from New York has a right to report it now if the committee has agreed to it.

Mr. BELMONT. I desire first to consider the House resolution; and in order to do that I will ask permission to report the Senate bill now.

The SPEAKER. The Committee on Foreign Affairs, under the order of the House, has the right to present any measure for consideration over which that committee has juriadiction.

Mr. BELMONT. Under the authority of the committee, I report back the bill which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (S. 2225) to indemnify certain subjects of the Chinese Empire for losses sustained by the violence of a mob at Rock Springs, in the Territory of Wyoming, in September, 1885.

The bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. BELMONT. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. STEELE. I withdraw the question of consideration, because I think that is a bill which ought to be considered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering measures presented by that committee under the order of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. MCMILLIN in the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the bill the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2225) to indemnify certain subjects of the Chinese Empire for losses sustained by the violence of a mob at Rock Springs, in the Territory of Wyoming, in September, 1885.

Mr. BELMONT. As I stated to the House a moment ago, I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Affairs to ask that the bill the title of which has just been read be amended by substituting the House joint resolution (H. Res. 147).

The Clerk read the proposed amendment, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert as follows:

That the sum of $147,748.74 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be paid to the Chinese Government, in consideration of the losses unhappily sustained by certain Chinese subjects by mob violence at Rock Springs, in the Territory of Wyoming, September 2, 1885; the said sum being intended for distribution among the sufferers and their legal representatives, in the discretion of the Chinese Government.

Mr. BELMONT. I had the honor to introduce this resolution at the last session of Congress, and believe it to be the most direct and creditable way of paying the indemnity. At the same time, to avoid any risk of further delay, I would prefer the adoption of the Senate bill, even in its present form, in order that this whole question might be at once disposed of as speedily as possible without the necessity at this late stage of the session of a disagreement and a conference with the Senate. But under instructions of the committee I now ask the House to consider the joint resolution which we had under consideration in May last.

The Committee on Foreign Affairs unanimously reported this resolution, and it also has in its support a special message of the President, with accompanying documents, which have long been before the House. The committee considered the measure of such importance that it was willing to occupy the only two morning hours allotted to the committee during the last session. The general discussion which followed evidently showed a disposition on the part of the House to adopt the resolution. The debate, however, was, as it seemed at the time, unnecessarily prolonged, the time expired for consideration, and the measure is unfinished business to-day, after a long interval.

The delay is very much to be regretted and the interests of the United States have not been benefited thereby. It has been a matter of surprise that such a measure should have been pending so long in the American Congress. But I think it just to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and to the House itself to say that the press of business, the immense number of measures before the House, both important and unimportant, and the difficulty of obtaining consideration under the rules has in reality been the reason for the delay. The Senate, however, comparatively free of such difficulties, has acted. The Senate bill was passed in June.

I do not know that it is necessary again to state to the House the circumstances attending the lamentable affair for which we are now asked to make reparation. On the 2d of September, 1885, there occurred at Rock Springs, in the Territory of Wyoming, the murder of twenty-eight inoffensive and defenseless Chinamen. The House remembers well that the persons engaged in the destruction of property and in the massacre of these Chinese were, as appears from the evidence, not citizens of the United States. They seem mostly to have been Welshmen and Swedes engaged in work upon the mines. The Chinese themselves were miners, and had lived peaceably alongside of their white competitors for several years, at the same rate of wages, about $3.50 per day. But there occurred a strike for higher pay. The Chinese refused to join in the strike, and for this reason, and no other, they were attacked, twenty-eight of them were killed, a number of others were wounded, and their property was destroyed. Shortly afterward the scene was visited by the Chinese consul in New York and the Chinese consul in San Francisco, and, together with United States officials, as is stated in the message of the President, an examination was entered into and an estimate was carefully made in regard to the property destroyed. That estimate is contained in the documents before the House, and it foots up over $147,000, the amount stated in the resolution.

That is to say, the House resolution is for the exact amount estimated as the loss of property sustained, that amount being the basis of the claim made by the Chinese minister in Washington. It was upon his representation that the message from the President was sent to the House.

If any additional reasons were required to induce us to take action in this matter they would be found in the conduct of the Chinese authorities since this occurrence, and in the face of our delay in passing this measure of indemnity. I can cite two instances which have been made known through our diplomatic agents. In the Chinese city of Kwai Ping, about 450 miles from Canton, an American Presbyterian mission was established, under the control of Rev. A. A. Fulton.

On the 4th of May, 1886, after the news had been received of the Rock Springs massacre, placards appeared in public places announcing that the "foreign devils" must go and their houses must be destroyed. A few days afterward a mob of Chinese students and lawless soldiers did destroy the buildings of the American mission. When information of this occurrence was given to our minister he at once brought it to the attention of the viceroy in Canton, and the result was that—I quote from the Chinese communication—"the Kwei Ping magistrate has been ordered to immediately investigate and to adjust satisfactorily and to give protection in reference to this affair."

But a more striking instance is that of the American mission at Chungking. By the seventeenth article of the treaty of 1844, guaranteeing protection to Americans in China, it is provided that the local authorities of the two governments shall select in concert the sites for the foregoing public buildings (the habitations and buildings of the Americans), "having due regard to the feelings of the people in the location thereof." Now, these missionaries had not acted in accordance with that provision of the treaty, but had set up their buildings in a locality where they were objectionable to the Chinese. Nevertheless when the buildings were destroyed the Chinese authorities took action similar to their action in the case of Kwei Ping, which I have already cited. In connection with this Chungking case I will ask the Clerk to read a communication addressed to the Secretary of State.

The Clerk read as follows:

No. 272.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Peking, December 17, 1886.

SIR: I have the honor to report that the claims of the American missionaries for losses for acts of violence of a mob at Chang-Kiang have been arranged on the basis stated in my dispatch No. 243, of date November 17, 1886. The amount to be paid in taels, 23,000. The information comes by telegram and we must await the details by mail. It is understood that the missionaries may return to Chang-Kiang, but not immediately.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

CHARLES DENBY.

Hon. THOMAS F. BAYARD,
Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

Mr. BELMONT. It is not necessary, Mr. Chairman, to refer to the numerous other cases cited in the report where the Chinese Government has paid large indemnities to American citizens. They were fully discussed when this matter was before the House in May last. Nor can I believe that the example which has thus been set by the Chinese Government will have been given in vain; I have no doubt that the House will pass this measure. I shall say nothing more on the subject at present (for I know there are other gentlemen who desire to speak), but will reserve the residue of my time.

Mr. MORROW. Will the gentleman allow me to ask whether, after this bill has been disposed of, it is proposed to bring forward the bill that also came from the Senate providing amendments to the act restricting Chinese immigration.

Mr. BELMONT. It is not. The gentleman, of course, will desire to know the reason.

Mr. MORROW. I do; and I think the House and the country would like to know why you do not propose to place an effective restraint upon the immigration now coming into this country, contrary to the stipulations contained in the existing treaty.

Mr. BELMONT. The members of the committee, when this matter was before the House last session, declared in almost every instance their opinion that the immigration of Chinese coolies should be prohibited; and I believe that is their opinion to-day. I do not know how far it would be proper to declare to the House what negotiations there may be pending on this subject; but there have been communications made to Congress which for a time were secret, but from which the seal of secrecy has now been removed, and to those I can refer as indicating the disposition of the Chinese Government; and I can say that nothing has changed in regard to the statements there made by our late minister to China, Mr. Young. I refer to pages 43, 64, and 65 of Executive Document (confidential), Forty-ninth Congress, first session. We are assured in this correspondence that the Chinese Government does not desire to embarrass the relations with this country by a continuance of the immigration, and that there is a disposition to modify the treaty to bring about results much more effective than can possibly be accomplished by legislation. Having that in view, the committee do not intend to bring up this matter to-day.

Mr. LONG. That has nothing to do with the present bill.

Mr. BELMONT. That has nothing to do with the present bill, excepting it might be said that if Congress should do this act of justice and meet the Chinese Government in this matter in the same spirit in which they have met us it would undoubtedly be much more easy to accomplish what is desired by negotiations, although of course there is no desire to make this a condition-precedent. The gentleman from California [Mr. MORROW] will see at once that should we press the measure in which he is interested it would retard rather than hasten the very purpose of the legislation which he advocates.

Mr. MORROW. I do not so understand.

Mr. BELMONT. I think perhaps the House would desire to hear what this communication is. To save time I will read from it a few lines. Our minister in 1884 said, among other things:

In my dispatches Nos. 376 and 382, dated respectively March 7 and March 14, 1884, I had the honor to point out the difficulties attending the presentation of any grievance to the yamên arising out of the workings of the act governing the emigration of Chinese laborers to the United States. So far as our information went, there was no evidence to show that the Chinese authorities had connived at any evasion of that treaty. I said, also, that such acts would naturally take place in Hong-Kong or Macao.

It was also my duty to show that the policy of the Imperial Government, so far as the emigration of their people was concerned, was a policy of indifference, if not of direct opposition. This was shown, as I explained in my dispatch No. 392, dated March 24, 1884. The Chinese authorities at Canton had gone so far in their restrictions upon emigration as to compel the bankruptcy of one of the most prominent houses in China.

Mr. MORROW. I would like to ask the gentleman what the House is to infer from what he has said respecting an agreement between this Government and China in regard to immigration.

Mr. BELMONT. I would be very carful not to overstep what I consider a proper statement. I can not assure the gentleman that negotiations have been completed, but he must himself know from observation and from the interest he has taken in the question that there is every reason to suppose that negotiations are pending and will be successful.

Mr. MORROW. This has been the promise for years; it has been so ever since this question has been under discussion.

Mr. BELMONT. I think, Mr. Chairman, the House will appreciate the gentleman's remarks. He intimates that there have been assurances and negotiations for some time past without performance. But undoubtedly one of the main difficulties in the way of a modification of the treaty has been the constant legislation, ineffective legislation, upon the subject, and the attempts at legislation in violation of the treaty, which must always receive the veto of the President, and which have for their principal result the embarrassment of the treaty-making power.

Mr. MORROW. The difficulty, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. BELMONT. I do not think I can yield any further. I will reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. PHELPS. Mr. Chairman, the question connected with the restriction of Chinese immigration in this country has nothing to do with the question of paying indemnity for the wrongs that we did to the Chinese two years ago in the massacre at Rock Springs.

Mr. BELMONT. If my friend will allow me I wish to state that I entirely agree with him on that point. I would not like anything I have stated to create a different impression.

Mr. PHELPS. There could be no connection except in the fact that both happened to concern the unfortunate Chinese race.

I rise to urge the adoption of the amendment which the chairman of the committee has moved to the Senate bill, because I want to pay the Chinese Government the $147,000 appropriated by it, and so to make an end of this matter.

There is only this difference between the method of the House and the method of the Senate. The Senate proposes to leave the amount of damages to be fixed by a commission, appointed by the President, provided the amount does not exceed $150,000; while the House proposes, without further action or parley, to pay the sum of $147,000 and immediately liquidate the damages. I want to pay the $147,000 because the Chinese Government has asked for that sum. The sum represents only the property destroyed. The Chinese Government knows that our Government never likes to pay a claim in full, so it wisely presents its bill only for the property destroyed and says nothing of other items of claim—nothing of twenty-eight men murdered; nothing of fifteen men wounded; nothing of seven hundred Chinese hunted for ten days with club and rifle like rabbits, until they were dispersed into the wilderness and their village was made an ash-heap.

As the claimants are willing to throw murder and arson into the bargain, we ought to close it without haggling. What ground is there for haggling, when the investigation was carefully made by representatives of the Chinese Government, assisted by agents of the State Department, and when their conclusions have been approved by its Secretary? "Approved?" I think it would be hard for him to do otherwise, with his archives crowded with cases where we made and enforced the standard to be used in the adjustment of similar cases. By that standard the Chinese on this case are entitled to millions.

Recall one of these cases. In the time when Great Britain was at war with China an American citizen, named Edwards, was arrested by mistake as an Englishman, imprisoned from sun-rise to sun-set and then released.

The Chinese Government paid $31,600 for the injury done to his person and to the dignity of the United States. There were seven hundred Chinese who suffered at Rock Springs, all of them more than this man. We hesitate to pay them $200 each. But the Chinese are heathen, and follow the maxims of Confucius; we are Christians, and profess to follow the teachings of its founder. Recall the familiar story of heathen generosity. How China once gave us $700,000 and said, "Take it, and pay the claims of your citizens!" We took it. We paid their claims, with 12 per cent. interest, and there was enough left to return $200,000 to the Chinese Government.

If this seems ancient history, and you fancy their heathen disposition has changed, think of recent incidents just related by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BELMONT]. While this bill was pending, long after this massacre, there was a riot in Chang-Kiang.

The rabble destroyed property belonging to the American Methodist mission. The Chinese Government has already paid them $25,000 for their loss. And also, since our discussion on this bill, a riot under similar circumstances in Shanghai destroyed other missionary property. The Chinese Government has already paid this bill, too, $5,000; and speaking of Shanghai recalls the latest and most touching incident—it was announced last week from the State Department. The poor Chinese of this city heard that Charleston was racked by an earthquake and hurt, though not destroyed. Out of their little savings they sent $1,640, which our consul-general has transmitted as their contribution to the fund which shall help to repay the loss which nature inflicted. But I have not yet heard that any neighboring town has sent any contribution to aid in the reconstruction of the damage at Rock Springs, which was inflicted by Christian ruffians.

When the reciprocity of fair dealing makes such a case against us, I have no heart to speak of the obligations founded in international law.

I do not want even to refer to the treaty where we pledged ourselves that "we would exert all our powers to devise measures for the protection" of Chinese subjects in this country. If that question must be raised, nothing more seems to be needed than to recall the full statement made at the last discussion of this measure by that expert in international law, Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts.

He claimed and proved that the rule in all these cases was that the central government, the treaty-making power, could not relieve itself of the responsibility for the infraction of a treaty by relegating that responsibility to one of its members. All writers from Vattel down assert this as the rule in their text-books. And our Government, acting in unison with all other governments, while never admitting the rule and sometimes while denying it, has in almost every case recognized it in practice.

Notably this was the case where injury was done to the property of American citizens in Canton while Lewis Cass was our Secretary of State. The Chinese Government referred our claimants to that viceroyalty, claiming that its courts and officers were open to our demands. Mr. Cass refused to recognize this solution, and China paid.

Again, when Mr. Webster was Secretary of State the property of Spanish citizens was destroyed in a riot in the streets of New Orleans. Mr. Webster attempted to relegate the claims of her Spanish Majesty to the authorities and courts of Louisiana. Her Spanish Majesty refused to accept the reference, and the United States paid the bill.

But it is not on the ground of legal but of moral obligations that I prefer to rest this claim. I rejoice, however, that all claims unite in enforcing this obligation, and I sincerely hope the House will to-day vote the $147,000, that there may be at least this atonement, and that the fact of the massacre of Rock Springs may be blotted from our memory forever. [Applause.]

Mr. SOWDEN. May I ask the gentleman from New Jersey a question?

Mr. PHELPS. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOWDEN. Was it shown by satisfactory evidence that this property was worth $147,000?

Mr. PHELPS. The investigation was made by the consuls of the Chinese Government of the highest rank, I believe, of New York and San Francisco; and they asked assistance from the State Department. The State Department furnished them with experts to represent our interests. This joint commission carried on the investigation there upon the spot fully and fairly, and their report, as unanimously made, was submitted to the Department of State. This is the report which the Department of State indorsed, recommended to Congress, and is now before this House for its action.

Mr. PHELPS. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COX].

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, while there are differences between members of the committee as to the bill which should be adopted by this House, it is more as to method than as to matter. We all agree that the Chinese Government should be indemnified for the outrage committed on Chinese subjects at the outbreak in Wyoming Territory, where numbers of unoffending Chinamen, within the protection of the treaties and the law, were murdered by a mob. And the threatened outbreak of the same character in Washington Territory, where similar mob violence was prevented only by the law-abiding character of the people of that Territory.

We further agree that this violence arose from race antagonisms. By our treaties with China these people were induced to come among us. By the confidence reposed in our good faith and our professions of the recognition of the principle of equality of all men, the Chinese Government was induced to abandon its traditional doctrine of seclusion, and recognize the great American doctrine of expatriation, and many of her citizens sought a home and asylum among us. Having invited these people to come among us as citizens and sojourners, every principle of honor as well as solemn treaty obligation behooves us to guarantee to them the full protection of the law. So much is agreed upon among the committee, the only divergence being the most speedy and effective means to accomplish this result.

The Senate has passed a bill providing for a commission of United States officers to investigate and ascertain the amount of damage sustained by Chinese citizens who were under the protection of our law in the outbreak and threatened riot to which I have adverted. The Chinese Government insists that the damages resulting from these outrages is $147,748.74. This may be a correct estimate. There is no contention in regard to the amount, but only as to the method of ascertaining the same. The Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House insists that we should pay them the whole amount in solido without investigation and further inquiry. This may be the generous and magnanimous method of proceeding, but those who agree with me insist that we should proceed on business principles.

The rule we establish in regard to this case will be a precedent to be insisted on in any future complications that may arise. Not only this, the present session of Congress is nearing its close, and should we pass a bill differing with the one passed by the Senate there is at least danger that no legislation will be completed on this subject during the present Congress. It is some eighteen months since these outrages were perpetrated, which continue as an irritating sore between our Government and that of China, while important treaty negotiations are pending. If we should adopt the Senate bill then our legislation would be complete. On the contrary, if the House adopt one resolution and the Senate another the respective resolutions would have to go to a conference committee, and we will be compelled to wait and see if they can agree. Not only this, we must delegate to six men to do in secret conference the duties devolving upon us.

I insist, Mr. Chairman, that the resolution adopted by the Senate is more in accordance with business principles, such as regulate the affairs of man and man, than that which is proposed by the committee of this House. In obedience to the demand of the Chinese Government, the bill in this House proposes to grant it over $147,000, while the Senate resolution proposes that we shall have an investigation and pay what is found to be proper, not exceeding, however, the sum of $150,000, including all expenses.

I am aware that there is a precedent in favor of the method proposed by the House committee. In the month of August, 1881, the Lopez expedition set out from the United States to aid an attempted insurrection in Cuba. The insurgents were captured and fifty of them shot, many of them being American citizens. As was natural, intense excitement was created in New Orleans and Key West; so much so that it culminated in mob violence against the Spanish subjects in those places who exulted in consequence of the execution of Americans in Cuba.

In New Orleans especially was the feeling intense, and resulted in the plunder of the Spanish consulate, the destruction of a Spanish newspaper, &c. Soon after these events the Spanish minister in Washington made a demand upon the Secretary of State "for just satisfaction in the above-mentioned insults and acts of hostility, with the corresponding indemnification for the damages and injuries inflicted upon Her Catholic Majesty's subjects." On the 14th of October, in the same year, this demand was renewed and persisted in. Mr. Webster, Secretary of State, replied in 1851, that—

> The executive government of the United States regards these outrages not only as unjustifiable, but as disgraceful acts, and as a flagrant breach of duty and propriety, and that it disapproves them as seriously and regrets them as deeply as either Mr. Calderon or his government can possibly do. * * * But the outrage, nevertheless, was one perpetrated by a mob, composed of irresponsible persons, the names of none of whom are known to this Government; * * * that neither any officer or agent of the Government or law, or of the municipal government of the city of New Orleans, took any part in the proceedings, so far as appears, or gave it any degree of countenance whatever. On the contrary, all these officers and agents * * * did all which the suddenness of the occasion would allow to prevent it. * * * The rights of the Spanish consul, a public officer residing here under the protection of the United States Government, are quite different from those of the Spanish subjects, who have come into the country to mingle with our own citizens, and here to pursue their private business and objects. The former may claim special indemnity; the latter are entitled to such protection as is offered to our own citizens. While, therefore, the losses of individuals, private Spanish subjects, are greatly to be regretted, yet it is understood that many American citizens suffered equal losses from the same cause. And these private individuals, subjects of Her Catholic Majesty, coming voluntarily to reside in the United States, have certainly no cause of complaint if they are protected by the same law and the same administration of law as native-born citizens of this country.

As was remarked by the gentleman of New Jersey [Mr. PHELPS], this statement of the Secretary of State was not satisfactory to the Spanish Government, and, notwithstanding the approval of the President, nothing was done. On the 10th of May, 1852, Senator Mallory, of Florida, introduced a resolution instructing the Committee on Foreign Relations "to have investigations made whether any Spanish subjects, not citizens of the United States, have sustained damage, by loss of property or otherwise, in consequence of public outbreak or violence in the State of Louisiana, * * * and into the propriety of authorizing the President to make indemnity to the Spanish Government for such Spanish subjects for said damages."

In advocacy of this proposition he called attention to the fact that foreign governments do not understand the workings of our political system. They did not understand that, socially and politically, our States are "as distinct as the waves," whilst in our foreign policy we are "one as the sea." In our relations we dealt with Spain as a unit. In our relations with our sister Republic of Mexico we dealt with her as a unit. And as we deal with one state we must deal with another. That is the danger of establishing a precedent in our dealings with China which might be embarrassing in dealing with other nations.

The Senate of the United States seems to have acted wisely in following the precedent to which I have called attention. I think the gentleman from New Jersey will seek in vain for a precedent where any nation has granted the claim of another without ascertaining the facts in the case. If he is successful in his researches it will not be a precedent which it would be judicious for us to follow. In order that this House may fully understand the difference between the Senate resolution and that of the House, I now send to the Clerk's desk the resolution to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2225) to indemnify certain subjects of the Chinese Empire for losses sustained by the violence of a mob at Rock Springs, in the Territory of Wyoming, in September, 1885.

Be it enacted, &c., That the President of the United States shall ascertain the actual loss and damage inflicted upon the person and property of Chinese subjects by the violence of a mob of lawless and riotous persons, at or near Rock Springs, in Wyoming Territory, on or about the 2d day of September, 1885; and for this purpose he may detail such officers of the United States as he may designate, not exceeding three in number, to investigate and take the testimony of witnesses as to the nature and extent of the damage done to the person and property of Chinese subjects, and, in connection therewith, may consider the testimony already taken and reports made, subject to the cross-examination of the witnesses, if deemed necessary, and such other proof as may be submitted to them by the Government of China. They shall report the estimate of the damages sustained by each person, and the testimony, to the Secretary of State, within six months from the approval of this act, which time may be extended not exceeding six months by the order of the President, and the same shall be examined by the Secretary of State; and thereupon the President shall award to each person so injured the sum that he shall consider to be just in view of the evidence and report so presented to him.

SEC. 2. That the aggregate amount so awarded by the President, not exceeding $150,000, shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary for China, at Washington, in full satisfaction and discharge of the injuries to person and property inflicted upon subjects of the Chinese Empire; and the sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be disbursed under the direction of the Secretary of State, to pay the expenses necessarily incurred for traveling or other expenses under the provisions of this act.

I repeat, Mr. Chairman, that this is a business proposition—not a matter of sentiment, not a matter of magnanimity, not a matter of favor. We have invited these Chinese to come among us; they have been outraged while under the protectien of our laws and solemn treaty obligations. Every sense of honor, humanity, and manhood appeals to us for their ready redress. The question is more as to the method than to the matter of the redress. There are two propositions before us.

The proposition of the Senate is business-like, speedy, and certain. The proposition of the House, while liberal and generous, may effect nothing. The examples quoted by my friend from New Jersey [Mr. PHELPS] as to China's course toward us under similar circumstances are not on a parallel with this case. Commissioners were appointed in those cases, and while the damages allowed were excessive the readiness of the Chinese Government to accede to them arose in the first place from her weakness when assailed by England and France, and in the latter cases, no doubt, from our honesty in returning her the amounts in excess of the damages sustained.

Yet I would readily grant the amount asked for in the House resolution rather than have this measure fail.

The Government of China in all of her dealings with us has been liberal and generous. She is now more interested in the acknowledgment of our obligation than in the mere amount of money she may receive or the manner in which it may be granted.

Mr. FELTON. Will the gentleman from North Carolina allow me a question?

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. Certainly.

Mr. FELTON. Is it not a fact that the measure of the Senate, if passed, would be entirely acceptable to the Chinese legation here?

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. I cannot answer as to that, because I have no communication with the Chinese legation in regard to this matter.

Mr. FELTON. Well, I have understood that the Senate bill would be entirely acceptable to the Chinese legation—as much so as the other. The only difference is that one would give them entire justice, while as to the other there might be some possible question.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. I agree with the gentleman from California.

Mr. BELMONT. Will the gentleman from North Carolina allow me a moment?

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. With pleasure.

Mr. BELMONT. Mr. Chairman, I believe the Senate bill is acceptable, but, as I stated at the outset, I am under instructions to offer the amendment which I have offered. I think, however, that the proposition of my colleague [Mr. COX, of North Carolina] is a very proper and wise one.

Mr. FELTON. My object in asking the question I have asked was simply to bring out, for the benefit of the House, a fact which, if established, would probably influence some gentlemen here in their decision upon this matter.

Mr. PHELPS. Will the gentleman from North Carolina allow me a question?

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. Unquestionably.

Mr. PHELPS. What reason has the gentleman for supposing that the officers of the United States Government who, upon the appointment of the President of the United States, are to make this investigation will make a more thorough investigation than the investigation which was made by the officers of the United States who were appointed by the Secretary of State, or will report a different or a better conclusion?

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. I do not consider that it is material whether they report the same amount or a different amount.

I say that this is a business matter, and here are two different propositions, originating in the Senate and in the House, respectively, as to the method by which it shall be adjusted, one proposing an investigation and the other not. As to the examples which my friend from New Jersey [Mr. PHELPS] has quoted, showing the action of China, I do not think they should control here.

Mr. PHELPS. My friend from North Carolina fails to get my point. I do not urge that there should be any payment without investigation. I claim that an investigation has been made by officers of the United States Government under appointment from the Secretary of State. The amendment which is advocated by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COX] asks for another investigation which shall be made by officers of the United States under the appointment of the President; and my question is, why he supposes that a second investigation made by officers of the Government appointed by the President will be a more valuable or trustworthy investigation than the one which has been made by officers of the United States appointed by the Secretary of State?

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. That is a long question, but——

Mr. PHELPS. But the facts with which it deals are very simple; and the question is simply why one investigation, having its source in the President, is likely to be any better than the other investigation which had its source in the Secretary of State.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. I am afraid my friend's case must be weak, as he will not permit me to answer him. The officers heretofore appointed were railroad officials who had these Chinese in their employment. Their investigation may have been perfectly fair. If so, this authoritative investigation can avail itself of the facts heretofore ascertained. The advantage will arise from the test of a cross-examination.

Mr. BELMONT. If the gentleman from North Carolina will permit me a moment I will answer the question.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. Certainly.

Mr BELMONT. I understand the proposition of my colleague is not in reference to the details of the measure, but in order that there should be no further delay in the settlement; and my friend from New Jersey will acknowledge that if we pass this resolution different in form from the Senate bill there is some danger of a failure of legislation at this session.

And, moreover, I remember that my colleague stated in the course of his argument that experts were detailed to examine into the amount of loss at Rock Springs who were officers of the United States. The documents show that they were United States railroad commissioners. Of course their statements are thoroughly to be relied upon. There is no question, therefore, as to the amount, either in the Senate or in the House. The only difference is that under the Senate bill a commission is appointed for this special purpose.

Mr. PHELPS. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York whether the zeal of the officers and the integrity of this investigation have ever been questioned?

Mr. BELMONT. In no respect whatever that I am aware of.

Mr. PHELPS. The gentleman has no reason to suppose that their action, as approved by the Secretary of State, is not correct, and will not be paralleled by any other investigation that may be set on foot.

Mr. McKENNA. A moment there; let me state that it is asserted, and I have it on good authority, that the assessment books of the county in which this property was situated show that there was only $200 worth of property assessed against the Chinese in that vicinity.

Mr. LOUTTIT. That is a fact which I can assert upon my own observation.

Mr. PHELPS. But the gentleman should remember that it is also a fact that the whole amount of property assessed against Mr. Vanderbilt in New York does not much exceed a million of dollars; and yet no one supposes that the assessment book is a good index or represents the value of his fortune, which is generally understood to be vastly beyond that.

Mr. LOUTTIT. Let me ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. PHELPS. I have not the floor.

Mr. LOUTTIT. I only want to ask the gentleman if the assessment book, where the law requires that every citizen shall present to the assessor a statement in detail of his property, is not a fair criterion of the value of the property of that county in which it is situated?

Mr. PHELPS. That would be true if the wealth of the average citizens of the country who are required to make these returns complied with the law and furnished them to the assessors. But it is true, as a matter of fact in all parts of the country, as experience has shown, that correct returns are not made by the whole body of citizens, no matter how stringent the law may be; and hence the assessment books are no criterion by which to determine the question.

Mr. LOUTTIT. But is it not a fact that the assessments dodged, or the assessments not properly made, are by the wealthy and not by those of small means? And further, is it not true that all the assessments in this case were assessments of persons necessarily of small means? And further, let me state to the gentleman that the records of that county show that in the entire county of Sweetwater all the assessments made against the Chinese was $200, and that was on a piece of real estate, with reference to which I am able to testify now from personal knowledge of the fact that it is still there, every part of it, none of it taken away, for I stopped over a day on my way to California to see it. It is the only property in Sweetwater County belonging to these Chinese.

Mr. STEELE. It must have been a very valuable piece of property if a man stops over on his way to California to look at it. [Laughter.]

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York is correct in this, that we desired to expedite this matter. The Senate has passed a resolution which if we adopt the matter is at an end so far as legislation is concerned. He is right, furthermore, in stating that the examination which took place was by railroad officers. We propose to have this examination made and the testimony taken by the officers who are appointed for this express purpose alone.

We desire to pay all of our just obligations and appropriately provide for everything that may be found due, but let us ascertain the facts on business principles. I therefore hope the House will vote down the amendment and adopt the Senate resolution.

I yield now the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CLEMENTS].

Mr. CLEMENTS. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the attention of the committee but for a very few moments. I would not have taken the floor to discuss the question at all except for the fact that members of the committee have presented the question as coming from the Committee on Foreign Affairs upon the basis of legal liabilities. It has been argued by the gentleman from New Jersey as one of the cases in which this Government was bound by its treaty obligations legally to pay damages.

I desire to say this is not a correct statement of the position of a majority of the committee presenting this bill and report. The payment of this claim is recommended by the President of the United States on the ground of friendly relations and as an act of generosity toward a friendly government. It is distinctly put upon this ground and not as a legal liability. The Secretary of State in his communication to the Chinese minister emphatically denies the legal liability of this Government.

I do not oppose the bill, but join in supporting it. In this connection I want to read an extract from the special message of the President upon the question. It is as follows:

So long as the Chinese minister, under his instructions, makes this the basis of an appeal to the principles and convictions of mankind, no exception can be taken. But when he goes further, and, taking as his precedent the action of the Chinese Government in past instances where the lives of American citizens and their property in China have been endangered, argues a reciprocal obligation on the part of the United States to indemnify the Chinese subjects who suffered at Rock Springs, it becomes necessary to meet his argument and to deny, most emphatically, the conclusions he seeks to draw as to the existence of such a liability, and the right of the Chinese Government to insist upon it.

I draw the attention of the Congress to the latter part of the note of the Secretary of State of February 18, 1886, in reply to the Chinese minister's representations, and to invite especial consideration of the cogent reasons by which he reaches the conclusion that whilst the United States Government is under no obligation, whether by the express terms of its treaties with China or the principles of international law, to indemnify these Chinese subjects for losses caused by such means and under the admitted circumstances, yet that in view of the palpable and discreditable failure of the authorities of Wyoming Territory to bring to justice the guilty parties or to assure to the sufferers an impartial forum in which to seek and obtain compensation for the losses which those subjects have incurred by lack of police protection; and considering further the entire absence of provocation or contribution on the part of the victims, the Executive may be induced to bring the matter to the benevolent consideration of the Congress, in order that that body, in its high discretion, may direct the bounty of the Government in aid of innocent and peaceful strangers whose maltreatment has brought discredit upon the country; with the distinct understanding that such action is in no wise to be held as a precedent, is wholly gratuitous, and is resorted to in a spirit of pure generosity toward those who are otherwise helpless.

Now let me say a word in relation to the instance in which the United States indemnified Spanish subjects on account of the riot in 1850 in New Orleans. The Secretary of State, from whose communication I shall append some extracts, states, in response to the Chinese minister, that the case stood upon entirely different ground. The office of the consul, the representative of the Spanish Government, was involved in the riot. The rioters overran and destroyed the property and insulted the flag of Spain, and it was for this assault upon the official representative under the protection of the flag of that government that reparation was made in that case. It is true that in a few instances private claimants were paid for damages caused in that riot also, but payment was recommended then, as now, by the President of the United States upon the distinct denial that there was any legal liability under treaty or international law. But it followed immediately after some kindly acts on the part of the Queen of Spain in pardoning American citizens who had become involved in the violation of the laws of that country in Cuba. It was a friendly act on the part of the United States done under the specific denial of legal liability, just as the President and Secretary of State put this claim. They recommend it to Congress as appealing to humanity and as an act of pure generosity on the part of this Government. I am not willing that it shall pass with the understanding that we base this on a recognized legal liability.

As to the other question as to which bill we should pass I confess that in a matter of this sort I would be willing, as the Committee on Foreign Affairs was willing at the last session, to accept this appraisement of property presented by the Chinese officials.

But the Senate has already passed a bill authorizing not a new commission of citizens, but three officials to be designated by the President of the United States, men already in office, to represent this Government and investigate the facts in regard to the just amount of this claim. And the bill limits the amount to be paid in satisfaction of the claims to $158,000. That bill is already before the House, having passed the Senate.

Now, in order to dispose of this whole matter, when the President has recommended the payment of the claim, when the Secretary of State has urged the payment of it, when the House is willing to vote for the payment of it, is it any great inconvenience to the Chinese Government that we should have an investigation as to the amount? The disposition has already been shown by our Government, and will be shown by the vote of this House if the bill is passed, not to deny or curtail this claim unreasonably. But it is the surest way to a final disposition of the matter, which I have no doubt will be satisfactory to both Governments, and will be the nearest to what is right and proper, to have a further investigation to ascertain accurately the proper amount to be paid.

If we substitute the House bill it appropriates the gross sum of $147,000, the full amount that has been claimed by the agents of the Chinese Government. This is simply granting the entire amount without question. That is not the ordinary way in which we do business with regard to the claims of our own citizens. We do not pay the full amount of claims without question. But in this case I repeat I would not oppose this if we had not the Senate bill here. Suppose we adopt an amendment substituting the provisions of the House bill reported by the committee for the Senate bill, it goes back to the Senate; that body may not concur, and it may go into conference or may be lost by disagreement between the two Houses. But a few weeks of the session remain. This question has been pressing upon us, and it is one which should be finally disposed of. There is no danger that there will not be a full and just allowance made under the Senate bill. To dispose of the whole matter finally in a spirit of generosity toward a friendly people, I think we should pass the Senate bill without any amendment, and get rid of the question.

I would call attention to some extracts from the communication of the Secretary of State to the Chinese minister, as follows:

I venture to say that you labor under a misapprehension in citing as an exception the action of the United States, in 1850, in respect of the violence committed upon the Spanish consulate at New Orleans by a mob of irresponsible persons unknown to the Government, and with which no officer or agent of the United States was allied.

Nothing can be clearer than the enunciation of the doctrine of Government non-liability on that occasion. While denouncing such outrages as disgraceful and in criminal violation of law and order, it was emphatically denied that the acts in question created any obligation on the part of the United States, arising out of the good faith of nations toward each other, for the losses thus occasioned by and to individuals. Neither is there a parity between the Spanish incident of 1850 and the recent riot and massacre of the Chinese at Rock Springs. The essential feature of the first is wholly wanting in the second. The emblem of Spanish nationality had suffered an affront in a city of the United States.

Reverting, however, to your appeal of November 30, which I understand to be a direct application to the sense of equity and justice of the United States for relief for the unfortunate victims of the carnage and excesses of the mob at Rock Springs, I am compelled to state most distinctly that I should fail in my duty as representing the well-founded principles upon which rests the relation of this Government to its citizens, as well as to those who are not its citizens and yet are permitted to come and go freely within its jurisdiction, did I not deny emphatically all liability to indemnify individuals, of whatever race or country, for loss growing out of violations of our public law, and declare with equal emphasis that just and ample opportunity is given to all who suffer wrong and seek reparation through the channels of justice as conducted by the judicial branch of our Government.

Yet I am frank to say that the circumstances of the case now under consideration contain features which I am disposed to believe may induce the President to recommend to the Congress, not as under obligation of treaty or principle of international law, but solely from a sentiment of generosity and pity to an innocent and unfortunate body of men, subjects of a friendly power, who being peaceably employed within our jurisdiction, were so shockingly outraged; that in view of the gross and shameful failure of the police authorities at Rock Springs, in Wyoming Territory, to keep the peace, or even to attempt to keep the peace, or to make proper efforts to uphold the law, or punish the criminals, or make compensation for the loss of property pillaged or destroyed, it may reasonably be a subject for the benevolent consideration of Congress whether with the distinct understanding that no precedent is thereby created, or liable for want of proper enforcement of police jurisdiction in the Territories, they will not, ex gratia, grant pecuniary relief to the sufferers in the case now before us to the extent of the value of the property of which they were so outrageously deprived, to the grave discredit of republican institutions.

I trust you will recognize in what I have herein suggested the desire of the United States to carry into effect the "golden rule" recited in the treaty to which you have made reference, and that in such action you will perceive our wish and purpose to confirm and perpetuate the friendship and comity which, I trust, may long exist between our respective countries. You will, I am sure, agree that in good faith, and in compliance with their obligations, the Government of the United States is strenuously asserting its power to secure the protection of your countrymen within its jurisdiction.

I have read these extracts to show more emphatically the ground upon which this Government puts the payment of the claim.

Mr. RICE. Mr. Chairman, it is pleasant to believe that there is no difference of opinion in this House, as there was none in the committee, in regard to the payment of damages to the Chinamen who were so unjustly and outrageously treated on our soil. I am therefore willing to pass over entirely that branch of the subject and leave it where the eloquent gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PHELPS] left it; for no words need be added by me to his very impressive remarks.

But the question is, what shall we do now in a business way; what is the best method? How does this matter stand before the House? The chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs [Mr. BELMONT] called up the Senate bill. He then, under instructions of his committee—instructions voted in my absence—moved as a substitute for the Senate bill the House resolution. Now, if that motion substituting the House resolution for the Senate bill should be voted down, the vote will then come up on the Senate bill; and if we adopt that, the matter, so far as we are concerned, is ended.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. Then the proper course for those who favor investigation is to vote down the recommendation of the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. RICE. That is exactly what I have said. I hope that is the course which this House will take. It seems to me to be the true method, the business way, the short course to get at the result. In the first place, the Senate has already acted upon and passed this bill. If we concur in that bill it needs only the signature of the President, and the matter is ended. Secondly, I believe it is the true method when claims for damages are made to investigate those claims, and to pass upon them as they may be proved. That is the course which has been adopted heretofore when we have made claims against China. The awards so generously paid by China, as stated by the gentleman from New Jersey, were the result of investigation by a commission. China did not pay a lump sum. China said, "Let these claims be submitted to a commission, and what that commission finds to be due we will pay." So that in adopting the Senate bill we follow not only what seems to be the true business method, but what the precedents in the case indicate.

There have been some investigations already as to the amount of these damages, not made under any legal authority, as I understand my friend from New Jersey to intimate, but made by representatives of the State Department, in conjunction with the Chinese representatives, soon after the occurrence of the outrages. The Chinese Government said, "Our damages amount to $147,000." The investigations made by the gentlemen sent to the spot indicate that this sum is not very far out of the way.

Now, what has the Senate done? As has already been stated, the Senate has passed a bill saying, "Let the President indicate three officials to examine the testimony which has already been collected, to investigate these claims, and report upon them; and this bill of the Senate appropriates an amount not to exceed $150,000 to pay the awards which shall thus be made." It seems to me, therefore, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, that the best, the shortest, the true business method, and the method in accordance with the precedents, is to vote down the motion reluctantly made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BELMONT], made against his own views, and then vote to report favorably to the House the Senate bill, thus ending this disagreeable affair.

I reserve the residue of my time.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Although the committee by vote directed its chairman to move the House resolution as a substitute for the Senate bill, I believe that thus far only those members of the committee have been heard who are opposed to that action. I desire, in two or three words only—because I do not want to take up the time of the House—to state why the majority of the committee are in favor of substituting the House resolution for the Senate bill.

I have no doubt that the Government of the United States can save from $20,000 to $75,000 by adopting that Senate bill, but it will be saved by a reason which I, as an American, would be ashamed to mention or to urge for the purpose of saving that amount of money. This riot and massacre occurred in September, 1885, nearly eighteen months ago. The testimony as to the damage which was then suffered was taken while the survivors were to a large extent around the spot; so that those who made the investigation were enabled to reach, to a greater extent than can possibly be done now, the facts in the case. We are all familiar with the character of the Chinese. We know that to-day the survivors of that massacre at Rock Springs, those who were in that vicinity immediately after the occurrence, are scattered perhaps in all quarters of the globe. It will be physically impossible for the most careful and thorough commission you may send there, a commission with the very best intentions, to ascertain the actual damage which was suffered, for the simple reason that the witnesses are gone beyond reach and beyond discovery. That is one reason.

Another reason, and I will state it but briefly. The great merit in the passage of this resolution, or in any action of this character which we may take, is to meet in the same courteous, liberal spirit the action that China has taken toward us in repaying damages that our own citizens have suffered. As I have said, eighteen months have already elapsed since this massacre took place. If you adopt the House resolution as a substitute the question will go into conference. If the conferees agree upon that substitute the matter is closed at once, is adjusted forever, and the money passes into the hands of the representatives of the Chinese Government, to be distributed according to the evidence which was taken by the Chinese authorities. But if you adopt the Senate bill it may be twelve months before there is any report from these officers who are to be detailed. According to the bill itself, they are allowed in the first place six months in which to report, and then the time may be further extended by the President. If the House of Representatives is desirous of adopting a policy by which the damages suffered by these unfortunate people may be cut down from $146,000 to $50,000 or $75,000 on account of their inability to prove those damages, and by which payment may be postponed from six to twelve months, then the Senate bill is better than the House bill. But all I have to say with reference to such a course is, that as the action of a Christian nation it would be in most sad contrast with the prompt and liberal course of China when American citizens have been injured by mobs or violence on her soil. [Applause.]

Mr. HENLEY. I would like to ask the gentleman one question with his permission before he takes his seat.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I will yield for a question and then yield the floor to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL].

Mr. HENLEY. It has been stated here on this floor, apparently with authority, I do not know but that it has been assented to by the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs [Mr. BELMONT], that this Senate bill was entirely acceptable to the Chinese legation?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I am not in the secrets of the Chinese legation, and am not authorized to say.

Mr. HENLEY. It was stated by the gentleman from California [Mr. FELTON], and as I understood assented to by the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. Chairman, I propose to summarize in a few moments the considerations which induced me most heartily to approve the passage of the House bill which has been recommended by the Committee on Foreign Affairs as a substitute for the bill of the Senate. What is it, sir, upon which we are called to give our judgment? The facts are these: On the second day of September, 1885, the Chinese village at Rock Springs, in Wyoming Territory, consisting of 764 Chinese miners engaged in a public work for the benefit of our country, was attacked, the men were ruthlessly and savagely assaulted, their houses burned over their heads, and these flying, inoffensive people were shot down like wild animals until twenty-eight were killed outright, fifteen wounded, and the residue scattered to the winds.

On the 12th day of September, while their blood was still fresh, the Secretary of War directed that two officers of the garrison at Fort Douglas should accompany the Chinese consuls stationed at San Francisco and New York, who were proceeding with their interpreter to the scene of the disturbance. This was accordingly done, and there upon the scene an investigation at once took place into the causes and circumstances of the massacre. As to that investigation, the results of which are spread before us in Executive Document No. 102, the President of the United States says in his special message to Congress on the subject:

In the investigation of the Rock Springs outbreak, and the ascertainment of the facts on which the Chinese minister's statements rest, the Chinese representatives were aided by the agents of the United States, and the reports submitted having been thus framed, and recounting facts within the knowledge of witnesses on both sides, possess an impartial truthfulness which could not fail to give them great impressiveness.

The impartial reports thus referred to by the President, and the testimony taken upon the field while the outrage was fresh and while the living witnesses to its horrid details were as yet together and easily accessible, are all here in the documents which accompanied the President's message.

They present to us, fully, the story of the unprovoked and bloody deed; and they embrace an itemized account of the wrongs and injuries done to persons and to property in its committal.

That we should make indemnity for the grievance seems to be the general sense of all. Such is the earnest opinion of the President and the Secretary of State. Such is manifestly the opinion of the Senate, which has passed the bill before us to detail three commissioners to investigate and assess the damage done. And that is the opinion of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, which has reported as substitute for the Senate bill a bill to pay at once to the Chinese Government the sum of $147,748.54, as claimed by the Chinese minister in his correspondence with the Secretary of State.

For my part I am in favor of paying directly and immediately what is claimed.

Here was a case in which the United States was represented by just as fair a commission as we may ever hope to secure in the future. Here was a case in which both American and Chinese witnesses gave in their testimony, while assembled around the scene of the disturbance. Here is testimony which no man has impeached and about which no one can suggest that there was an error.

Following this up comes the message or communication from the Chinese minister presenting this bill for damages, and in respectful terms asking the United States Government to make restitution. "He gives twice who gives quickly." This bill should have been settled long ago, and it is with no pride as an American citizen, that I contemplate the fact that while the Chinese Government has acted towards us always in the utmost spirit of grace and justice, that it has not only liquidated the bills which have been urged against it in the past years by us, but has, even since this transaction, and even while its own claims were being higgled about and delayed, come forward and with grace and generosity and courtesy compensated for damages done to the property of American citizens in that land, we are yet, after eighteen months of delay, still in default of doing as we would be, and as we have been, done by.

Mr. LOUTTIT. Let me ask the gentleman this question: Has any instance gone into record in which the Chinese Government paid to the United States Government an indemnity for an offense committed by a citizen other than its own or under its own control upon any one of our people? I ask him if there is a case similar to the one now before us in which there was a contest between two classes, neither of which were citizens of this country or had declared their intention to become citizens of the United States? Is there a precedent of that character?

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. Chairman, this is not a question of the nationality of the men who committed the offense. America, with its courts and people, is responsible for whatever is done upon our soil. Any one, be he an American citizen or the citizen of another country, is entitled to the protection of our laws, and the nationality of the man has nothing to do with the responsibility upon the part of our Government to preserve order and guard the people under our laws. That is a question which it does not become us to inquire into.

Mr. MCKENNA. Let me suggest to the gentleman a question. If your proposition is true, would it not be true also that if I immediately shot you down the Government of the United States must indemnify your heirs?

Mr. DANIEL. No, sir; not at all.

Mr. MCKENNA. Where is the difference?

Mr. DANIEL. Here is the difference. If any man shoots another in America the law is responsible to see that the crime is avenged. But if you were to shoot me simply and solely because I was a Chinaman, then you would strike every other Chinaman, whether he be in the Flowery Kingdom or elsewhere, in an offense against his people; and if you were to shoot me, not because of a personal offense but because of the fact that I belonged to a certain distinct race or nationality, then you would strike at the whole race nationality, and undoubtedly our Government in all fairness ought to make restitution either to the wronged individual in the case or to the nationality that has been assailed if called upon to do so, and if such were the custom and comity governing between the nations of the wronged and the wrong-doer. China has always thus looked on the matter in dealing with us. Reciprocity is the soul of international law; and shall the Christian refuse to the Pagan what has been demanded and received of him?

Now, Mr. Chairman, as to the mere matter of business involved in this proposition. A commission of three is to be appointed under the Senate bill. Their salaries, clerks, and expenses of other kinds must be audited and paid from the Treasury.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. Will the gentleman allow me? It is proposed that these commissioners shall be appointed from persons who are already salaried officers of the United States, and would draw no extra pay.

Mr. DANIEL. The gentlemen who get no salary to begin with are usually those who get the most to wind up with. And whether these officers are detailed or not we know they must be subjected to necessary expenses in taking testimony of witnesses now scattered in all quarters of the globe, and we know somebody will have the bill to settle, and that the bill will necessarily be a large one.

Mr. RICE. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. DANIEL. Yes, sir.

Mr. RICE. Does not the Senate bill provide that these officers of the United States thus delegated may consider the testimony already taken and reports made, to which you have referred?

Mr. DANIEL. Certainly; they may consider that testimony and those reports; and I am only asking a privilege to-day for myself which you want to appoint three men to exercise. I have already considered this testimony. It is not assailed or impeached by any man. Why, then, should we employ three agents to consider it again? It was taken before officers of the United States, or under their supervision, and when it could be taken freshly and under circumstances which will never admit of reproduction.

In my judgment if we wish to act according to the dictates of sound economy we will not attempt to make two or three bites at a small cherry, but we will wind up this matter at once gracefully, handsomely, and according to the etiquette of good neighborhood by saying to the Chinese minister: You have presented your bill; you have not asked damages for what you might have asked damages for, the ruthless taking of the lives of your citizens, the shooting them down in cold blood, but you have been content to present a claim simply for the property destroyed made up in driblets of from $25 to $1,000, a carefully itemized account; and as in the general aspect it is a small demand and a righteous one, it does not become a Government and people who have been dealt with so generously as the Chinese Government has dealt with us to subject this matter to the further procrastination that a commission must occasion.

Mr. CURTIN. Let me ask the gentleman one question. Do we owe the money?

Mr. DANIEL. Yes, sir.

Mr. CURTIN. Then why not pay it? There is no reason why we should not pay it. There is every reason why we should. And the sooner we do it the sooner will we respond to the dictates of justice and the sooner wipe away a blot.

Mr. MCCREARY. It is very gratifying to find that all agree that the Chinese who suffered violence at Rock Springs, Wyo., on September 2, 1885, should be indemnified. But I differ with the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL], who has just taken his seat, as to the remedy. The Committee on Foreign Affairs recommends payment for the injuries sustained. The President of the United States recommends payment. But we can not afford to establish as a precedent in this country that every time a few unauthorized citizens and lawless men burn a village or drive men out and kill them we will in Congress appropriate money to pay damages. In what I say to-day, while I am in favor of charity and kindness and justice, I do not wish to be understood as taking the position that every time a few lawless men injure persons or commit depredations we will appropriate money to pay for their acts. The President, in his message, takes the proper position. He says:

> So long as the Chinese minister, under his instructions, makes this the basis of an appeal to the principles and convictions of mankind, no exception can be taken. But when he goes further, and, taking as his precedent the action of the Chinese Government in past instances where the lives of American citizens and their property in China have been endangered, argues a reciprocal obligation on the part of the United States to indemnify the Chinese subjects who suffered at Rock Springs, it became necessary to meet his argument and to deny, most emphatically, the conclusions he seeks to draw as to the existence of such a liability, and the right of the Chinese Government to insist upon it.

The United States Government is under no obligation, whether by the express terms of its treaty with China or the principles of international law, to indemnify these Chinese subjects. What the Congress of the United States does in this case is as a matter of charity, as a kindness to those unfortunate people, or, as my friend from Virginia says, as a matter of good neighborhood and kindly feeling.

I am in favor of indemnifying these people, and I am in favor of indemnifying them according to justice and right. I do not know how much they have been injured. Some proof has been taken in an ex parte style and sent here, but we do not know with proper certainty the amount that should be paid. The Senate bill provides that a commission of United States officers shall go to Wyoming Territory and investigate, and shall not allow exceeding $150,000. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BELMONT] provides for giving $147,000. I am not in favor of the plan proposed in the amendment. I am in favor of adopting the Senate bill and sending commissioners out there to make an investigation. It was an outrage that seven hundred and sixty-four Chinese miners should be driven from their homes and that their houses should be burned before their eyes. It was an outrage that twenty-eight of them should be killed and fifteen wounded. But I say send commissioners, take the evidence, see what has been done, and then when we ascertain the facts make proper indemnity.

What will be the result if we adopt the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BELMONT], which I do not think he is heartily in favor of?

Mr. BELMONT. Will the gentleman permit me a word?

Mr. McCREARY. Yes, sir.

Mr. BELMONT. I introduced the resolution myself in the last Congress, and I think it a proper way of dealing with the matter if time were sufficient; but, although I introduced that resolution, I yet believe that the speediest method of dealing with the question now is to adopt the Senate bill.

Mr. McCREARY. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. BELMONT. I submitted my proposition as an amendment, under instructions from the committee, as I have already stated.

Mr. McCREARY. We have little more than three weeks left of this session of Congress. If we to-day pass the amendment, it has to go back to the Senate, and (although these outrages were committed as long ago as the 2d of September, 1885) there is great danger that Congress will again adjourn without anything being done as regards this matter. Therefore, sir, I am in favor of agreeing to the Senate bill. Let us pass that bill and send reliable commissioners out to where the trouble occurred; let them investigate and take proof, and say what amount we shall pay—not to exceed $150,000.

Mr. HERMANN. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. McCREARY. Yes, sir.

Mr. HERMANN. By the first section of the Senate bill it is provided that the President shall ascertain the actual loss and damage inflicted upon the person and property of Chinese subjects, &c., and that for this purpose he may detail such officers of the United States as he may designate, not exceeding three in number, to investigate and take the testimony of witnesses as to the nature and extent of the damage done to the person and property of Chinese subjects. That is, it is provided that the President may designate for this purpose such officers as he may choose. Now, is not the power there given so discretionary that the President may, if he chooses, entirely ignore it and accept the findings already made?

Mr. McCREARY. Mr. Chairman, in response to the gentleman's question I will say that the President's message shows that he is in favor of indemnifying the Chinese, and I am satisfied that if the Senate bill is passed by this House and becomes a law the amount allowed by the United States officers who act as commissioners will be paid without hesitation.

Mr. MORROW. Mr. Chairman, I desire in the few moments I have to call the attention of the committee to one of the features of this bill which appears to me to be involved in the treaty originally negotiated between this Government and China in 1880. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] was interrogated a moment ago by my colleague [Mr. McKENNA] as to why it is that we propose to indemnify the Chinese Government for assaults upon Chinese subjects when we would not do so upon the demand of any other government for assaults upon other subjects. This condition of affairs grows somewhat out of the terms of the treaty negotiated between this country and China in 1880. For thirty years the people of the Pacific Coast had been protesting against Chinese immigration. The agitation finally resulted in the appointment of a commission to go to China for the express purpose of securing a treaty that would effectually prevent the further immigration of Chinese subjects to this country. The negotiations took form in the treaty known as the treaty of November 17, 1880, the title of which is a "Treaty between the United States and China concerning immigration." The first paragraph reads:

Whereas a treaty between the United States of America and China for the modification of the existing treaties between the two countries, by providing for the future regulation of Chinese immigration into the United States was concluded and signed, &c.

Then it goes on to say:

Whereas the Government of the United States, because of the constantly-increasing immigration of Chinese laborers to the territory of the United States, and the embarrassment consequent upon such immigration, now desires to negotiate a modification of the existing treaties which shall not be in direct contravention of their spirit, &c.

In the first section of the treaty the two governments provide that Chinese immigration to this country may be regulated, limited, or suspended; and in section 2 it is provided that "Chinese subjects, whether proceeding to the United States as students, merchants, or from curiosity, together with their body and household servants, and Chinese laborers who are now in the United States, shall be allowed to go and come of their own free will and accord, and shall be accorded all the rights, privileges, immunities, and exemptions which are accorded to the citizens and subjects of the most favored nation."

This last provision of this treaty, taken in connection with our supposed duty to other nations, has been construed as the basis upon which this claim is made by China against the United States. Now, I desire to call the attention of this House to the fact that while the expressly declared purpose of this treaty was to stop Chinese immigration, and while there has been an effort on the part of Congress by appropriate legislation to prevent further immigration, the legislation in that direction has practically failed, and the invasion has continued chiefly because China has not aided in carrying out the purpose of the United States in this respect, and this treaty is now relied upon by China to secure a special indemnity which we would not accord to the subjects of any other nation.

Awhile ago I asked the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs what would be done concerning the bill amending the restriction act, and he informed us that the bill for that purpose, which passed the Senate and came over here with this bill, is not to be brought before the House at the present session, on the ground that negotiations are pending for another treaty. Now, I am not going to oppose the indemnification of the Chinese in this case in a proper way, and I prefer the Senate bill for that purpose; but while we are indemnifying the Chinese, I say that the Congress of the United States ought also to consider the fact that the main effect and material provision in this treaty was and is the stoppage of Chinese immigration into this country, which has not been accomplished. If we fail to act upon that important feature of this case Congress will have failed to perform its duty to the people of this country, and I protest against this course.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. Will the gentleman permit me to inquire whether the investigation of this assault was not made by the officers of the railroad in whose employ the Chinamen were?

Mr. MORROW. Yes, sir.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. No officer of the United States was engaged in it.

Mr. MORROW. No officer of the United States.

Now, Mr. Chairman, as I have said, I shall favor the bill which has come from the Senate. I believe it is well enough under all the circumstances for this Government to provide for the ascertainment and payment of this claim, but I am equally clear that it is the duty of the President and of the Secretary of State to sanction, and of the Congress of the United States to provide such amendments to the restriction act, as will effectually prevent the further immigration of Chinese laborers into this country. The remedy for this evil rests with us. Let us be just to our own people while we are generous to others.

In conclusion, I desire to say that if the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs will call up the bill to amend the restriction act and aid in passing it through the House at this session, he will have succeeded not only in doing something generous in the matter of indemnifying the Chinese, but he will also aid in doing what is right and just towards the people of the Pacific Coast who are suffering from the effect of this continued Chinese immigration.

Mr. BELMONT. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me the time has arrived when the House should impose a limit to debate on this question. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"] If there is no desire for further discussion I will move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House.

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment pending which must first be acted on. The question is on the amendment reported by the Committee on Foreign Affairs as a substitute for the bill of the Senate.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 58, noes 60.

Mr. DANIEL. No quorum.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. DANIEL and Mr. BELMONT were appointed.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Mr. Chairmain, if that substitute reported by the House committee be voted down will not the question then recur upon the Senate bill?

The CHAIRMAN. It will.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I would like to make this inquiry: If the House substitute should be adopted would not the question then go to a committee of conference and would there not be ample time after that for the two Houses to come to an agreement on this question?

The CHAIRMAN. That is not a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. RICE. I desire to ask whether a yea vote on this question is not in favor of the House resolution and a nay vote for the Senate bill.

Several MEMBERS. That is understood.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 101, noes 68.

So the substitute was adopted.

Mr. BELMONT. I move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House as amended.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. McMILLIN reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union having had under consideration the bill (S. 2225) to indemnify certain subjects of the Chinese Empire for losses sustained by the violence of a mob at Rock Springs, in the Territory of Wyoming, in September, 1885, had directed him to report the same back to the House with an amendment in the form of a substitute.

The SPEAKER. The question is first on agreeing to the amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The amendment was adopted.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BELMONT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the joint resolution (H. Res. 147) on this same subject, a joint resolution providing indemnity to certain Chinese subjects for losses sustained within the jurisdiction of the United States, will be taken from the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and laid on the table.

There was no objection.

Mr. BELMONT. I have been requested by several gentlemen to ask consent that they may print remarks in the RECORD on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to allowing all members who desire to do so to print remarks in the RECORD on the bill just passed? The Chair hears none, and leave is granted.

SECTION 5418, REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. ELDREDGE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 11113) to amend section 5418 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

IMPORTATION OF OPIUM.

Mr. BELMONT. I yield to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COX].

Mr. COX. I call up from the House Calendar the bill (S. 3044) to provide for the execution of the provisions of article 2 of the treaty concluded between the United States of America and the Emperor of China on the 17th day of November, 1880, and proclaimed by the President of the United States on the 5th day of October, 1881.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the importation of opium into any of the ports of the United States by any subject of the Emperor of China is hereby prohibited. Every person guilty of a violation of the preceding provision shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $500 nor less than $50, or by imprisonment for a period of not more than six months nor less than thirty days, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court.

SEC. 2. That every package containing opium, either in whole or in part, imported into the United States by any subject of the Emperor of China, shall be deemed forfeited to the United States; and proceedings for the declaration and consequences of such forfeiture may be instituted in the courts of the United States as in other cases of the violation of the laws relating to other illegal importations.

SEC. 3. That no citizen of the United States shall import opium into any of the open ports of China, nor transport the same from one open port to any other open port, or buy or sell opium in any of such open ports of China, nor shall any vessel owned by citizens of the United States, or any vessel, whether foreign or otherwise, employed by any citizen of the United States, or owned by any citizen of the United States either in whole or in part, and employed by persons not citizens of the United States, take or carry opium into any of such open ports of China, or transport the same from one open port to any other open port, or be engaged in any traffic therein between or in such open ports or any of them. Citizens of the United States offending against the provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof, shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $500 nor less than $50, or by both such punishments, in the discretion of the court. The consular courts of the United States in China, concurrently with any district court of the United States in the district in which any offender may be found, shall have jurisdiction to hear, try, and determine all cases arising under the foregoing provisions of this section, subject to the general regulations provided by law. Every package of opium or package containing opium, either in whole or in part, brought, taken or transported, trafficked, or dealt in contrary to the provisions of this section, shall be forfeited to the United States, for the benefit of the Emperor of China; and such forfeiture, and the declaration and consequences thereof, shall be made, had, determined, and executed by the proper authorities of the United States exercising judicial powers within the Empire of China.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. This bill, Mr. Speaker, does not interfere between the citizens of the United States and other governments, except with reference to China. By a treaty which was ratified in 1881 it was agreed that in the open ports of China, certain designated ports, they should not permit opium to be carried there by citizens of the United States, nor to be brought here and sold by United States citizens to the subjects of China.

It is well known that one of the greatest social evils, probably, prevailing in China is the traffic in opium. By the treaty of 1841, made by Mr. Reed, it was restricted, and citizens of the United States in China violating the provisions of that treaty were punishable under the laws of China. The Burlingame treaty made no provision in reference to the subject, but there is a treaty which regulates the mode and method of punishment of United States citizens who reside in China and engage in this traffic. Now they are punishable under the laws of the United States, and this is expressly to prevent citizens of the United States in China from engaging in the traffic.

I do not suppose it is necessary to say anything more in regard to the bill.

Mr. Speaker, the bill now presented for consideration is a measure to carry out certain treaty stipulations between the Chinese Government and our own, which was ratified by the President in May, 1881. It relates to what is known as the opium trade, to repress importation into the United States by Chinese subjects, and the importation by citizens of the United States of opium into any of the open ports of China, or transportation from one open port to another, or the buying and sale of opium in any such ports.

By the treaty of 1844 there are five open ports provided for in China, and in these open ports the citizens of the United States have the right to obtain houses and places of business, &c. By the treaty of 1858, the number of these ports was increased, with the power to the citizens of the United States who may be there to reside with their families in the same, and to trade and proceed from one port to another on business or pleasure. They shall not, however, use the privilege thus accorded them to carry on a clandestine or illegal trade along the coast, under such pains and penalties as may be prescribed by law.

Under the treaties extending up to 1858 citizens of the United States violating the laws of China in regard to prohibited traffic were subject to the jurisdiction of the Chinese courts for trial and punishment. The treaty concluded November, 1880, contains the article which I will send to the Clerk's desk to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

ARTICLE II.

The Governments of China and of the United States mutually agree and undertake that Chinese subjects shall not be permitted to import opium into any of the ports of the United States; and citizens of the United States shall not be permitted to import opium into any of the open ports of China; to transport it from one open port to any other open port; or to buy and sell opium in any of the open ports of China. This absolute prohibition, which extends to vessels owned by the citizens or subjects of either power, to foreign vessels employed by them, or to vessels owned by the citizens or subjects of either power and employed by other persons for the transportatian of opium, shall be enforced by appropriate legislation on the part of China and the United States; and the benefits of the favored-nation clause in existing treaties shall not be claimed by the citizens or subjects of either power as against the provisions of this article.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. The President of the United States in May last communicated to Congress in special message the necessity for some legislation to carry into effect the provisions of this article. There are provisions in this treaty affecting our citizens in China which are provided for under this bill. A recent case has been called to the attention of the State Department by United States minister at Pekin concerning the right of an American citizen to lease to a British merchant a portion of his house for the opium business. The excessive use of opium in China is known to be one of her greatest social evils, a curse and an affliction to her people.

The manifest intent of this treaty is to prevent American citizens in China from engaging in this opium traffic, or in knowingly aiding others to do so. The treaty itself is not self-executing. Appropriate legislation is required to make it effective. The passage of this bill, it is believed, will accomplish the purpose, and if no gentleman desires to be heard on the subject and no further explanation is required, I ask that it may be put upon its passage.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and being read the third time, was passed.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

APPOINTMENT OF HOUSE CONFEREES.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. SWOPE, Mr. LOVERING, and Mr. CONGER as managers at a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. 2519) granting a pension to Richard B. Rians.

PROTECTION OF SUBMARINE CABLES.

Mr. BELMONT. Mr. Speaker, I call up for consideration House bill 9324, and yield to my colleague from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL].

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That this act shall be known as the "submarine cables act of 1886."

That the provisions of this act shall be held to apply only to cables to which the convention of the 14th of March, 1884, which is hereto annexed and herein referred to as the convention, for the time being applies; and, subject to the provisions of this act, the provisions of the convention shall be of the same force as if they were embodied in this act, and shall be taken to be a part hereof.

SEC. 3. That any person who shall willfully break or injure, or attempt to break or injure, or who shall in any manner procure, counsel, aid, abet, or be accessory to such breaking or injury, or attempt to break or injure, a submarine cable, in such manner as to interrupt or obstruct, in whole or in part, telegraphic communication, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years, and to a fine either in lieu of or in addition to such imprisonment.

SEC. 4. That any person who by culpable negligence shall break or injure a submarine cable in such manner as to interrupt or obstruct in whole or in part telegraphic communication shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding three months, and to a fine not exceeding $500 in lieu of or in addition to such imprisonment.

SEC. 5. That the provisions of this act shall not apply to a person who breaks or injures a cable in an effort to save the life or limb of himself or of any other person, or to save his own or any other vessel: Provided, That he takes reasonable precautions to avoid such breaking or injury.

SEC. 6. That the provisions of the Revised Statutes from section 4300 to section 4305, inclusive, for the trial of offenses against the navigation laws of the United States, shall extend to the trial of offenses against the provisions of articles 5 and 6 of the convention; and a person convicted of an offense against the provisions of the said articles shall be liable to a fine not exceeding $500.

SEC. 7. That the penalties provided in this act for the breaking or injury of a submarine cable shall not be a bar to a suit for damages on account of such breaking or injury.

SEC. 8. That the provisions of article 4 of the convention, in so far as they relate to the payment by the owner of a cable of the cost of repairs of another cable broken or injured in the attempt to lay or repair the former cable, shall not apply to that part of the latter cable which is laid in a depth of water exceeding one hundred fathoms.

SEC. 9. That for the purpose of carrying into effect the convention a person commanding a ship of war of the United States or of any foreign state for the time being bound by the convention, or a ship specially commissioned by the Government of the United States or by the government of such foreign state, may exercise and perform the duties vested in and imposed on such officer by the convention.

SEC. 10. That when an offense against this act shall have been committed by means of a vessel, or of any boat belonging to a vessel, the master of such vessel shall, unless some other person is shown to have been in charge of and navigating such vessel or boat, be deemed to have been in charge of and navigating the same, and be liable to be punished accordingly.

SEC. 11. That any document drawn up in pursuance of article 7 or article 10 of the convention shall be admissible in any proceedings, civil or criminal, as prima facie evidence of the facts or matters stated therein.

SEC. 12. SUBMARINE CABLES CONVENTION.

Convention for the protection of submarine cables, made on the 14th of March, 1884, between the United States of America; His Majesty the Emperor of Germany, King of Prussia; His Excellency the President of the Argentine Confederation; His Majesty the Emperor of Austria, King of Bohemia, &c., Apostolical King of Hungary; His Majesty the King of the Belgians; His Majesty the Emperor of Brazil; His Excellency the President of the Republic of Costa Rica; His Majesty the King of Denmark; His Excellency the President of the Dominican Republic; His Majesty the King of Spain; His Excellency the President of the United States of Colombia; His Excellency the President of the French Republic; Her Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, Empress of India; His Excellency the President of the Republic of Guatemala; His Majesty the King of the Hellenes; His Majesty the King of Italy; His Majesty the Emperor of the Ottomans; His Majesty the King of the Netherlands, Grand Duke of Luxembourg; His Majesty the Shah of Persia; His Majesty the King of Portugal and the Algarves; His Majesty the King of Roumania; His Majesty the Emperor of all the Russias; His Excellency the President of the Republic of Salvador; His Majesty the King of Servia; His Majesty the King of Sweden and Norway; and His Excellency the President of the Oriental Republic of Uruguay.

The following is an English translation of the convention, with the omission of the formal beginning and end:

ARTICLE I.

The present convention shall be applicable, outside of the territorial waters, to all legally established submarine cables landed in the territories, colonies, or possessions of one or more of the high contracting parties.

ARTICLE II.

The breaking or injury of a submarine cable, done willfully or through culpable negligence, and resulting in the total or partial interruption or embarrassment of telegraphic communication, shall be a punishable offense, but the punishment inflicted shall be no bar to a civil action for damages.

This provision shall not apply to ruptures or injuries when the parties guilty thereof have become so simply with the legitimate object of saving their lives or their vessels, after having taken all necessary precautions to avoid such ruptures or injuries.

ARTICLE III.

The high contracting parties agree to insist, as far as possible, when they shall authorize the landing of a submarine cable, upon suitable conditions of safety, both as regards the track of the cable and its dimensions.

ARTICLE IV.

The owner of a cable who, by the laying or repairing of that cable, shall cause the breaking or injury of another cable, shall be required to pay the cost of the repairs which such breaking or injury shall have rendered necessary, but such payment shall not bar the enforcement, if there be ground therefor, of Article II of this convention.

ARTICLE V.

Vessels engaged in laying or repairing submarine cables must observe the rules concerning signals that have been or shall be adopted, by common consent, by the high contracting parties, with a view to preventing collisions at sea.

When a vessel engaged in repairing a cable carries the said signals, other vessels that see or are able to see those signals shall withdraw or keep at a distance of at least one nautical mile from such vessel, in order not to interfere with its operations.

Fishing gear and nets shall be kept at the same distance.

Nevertheless a period of twenty-four hours at most shall be allowed to fishing vessels that perceive or are able to perceive a telegraph ship carrying the said signals, in order that they may be enabled to obey the notice thus given, and no obstacle shall be placed in the way of their operations during such period.

The operations of telegraph ships shall be finished as speedily as possible.

ARTICLE VI.

Vessels that see or are able to see buoys designed to show the position of cables when the latter are being laid are out of order, or are broken, shall keep at a distance of one quarter of a nautical mile at least from such buoys.

Fishing nets and gear shall be kept at the same distance.

ARTICLE VII.

Owners of ships or vessels who can prove that they have sacrificed an anchor, a net, or any other implement used in fishing, in order to avoid injuring a submarine cable, shall be indemnified by the owner of the cable.

In order to be entitled to such indemnity, one must prepare, whenever possible, immediately after the accident, in proof thereof, a statement supported by the testimony of the men belonging to the crew; and the captain of the vessel must, within twenty-four hours after arriving at the first port of temporary entry, make his declaration to the competent authorities. The latter shall give notice thereof to the consular authorities of the nation to which the owner of the cable belongs.

ARTICLE VIII.

The courts competent to take cognizance of infractions of this convention shall be those of the country to which the vessel on board of which the infraction has been committed belongs.

It is, moreover, understood that, in cases in which the provision contained in the foregoing paragraph can not be carried out, the repression of violations of this convention shall take place, in each of the contracting States, in the case of its subjects or citizens, in accordance with the general rules of penal competence established by the special laws of those States, or by international treaties.

ARTICLE IX.

Prosecutions on account of the infractions contemplated in Articles II, V, and VI of this convention shall be instituted by the State or in its name.

ARTICLE X.

Evidence of violations of this convention may be obtained by all methods of securing proof that are allowed by the laws of the country of the court before which a case has been brought.

When the officers commanding the vessels of war or the vessels specially commissioned for that purpose, of one of the high contracting paties, shall have reason to believe that an infraction of the measures provided for by this convention has been committed by a vessel other than a vessel of war, they may require the captain or master to exhibit the official documents furnishing evidence of the nationality of the said vessel. Summary mention of such exhibition shall at once be made on the documents exhibited.

Reports may, moreover, be prepared by the said officers, whatever may be the nationality of the inculpated vessel. These reports shall be drawn up in the form and in the language in use in the country to which the officer drawing them up belongs; they may be used as evidence in the country in which they shall be invoked, and according to the laws of such country. The accused parties and the witnesses shall have the right to add or to cause to be added thereto, in their own language, any explanations that they may deem proper; these declarations shall be duly signed.

ARTICLE XI.

Proceedings and trial in cases of infractions of the provisions of this convention shall always take place as summarily as the laws and regulations in force will permit.

ARTICLE XII.

The high contracting parties engage to take or to propose to their respective legislative bodies the measures necessary in order to secure the execution of this convention, and especially in order to cause the punishment, either by fine or imprisonment, or both, of such persons as may violate the provisions of articles II, V, and VI.

ARTICLE XIII.

The high contracting parties shall communicate to each other such laws as may already have been or as may hereafter be enacted in their respective countries, relative to the subject of this convention.

ARTICLE XIV.

States that have not taken part in this convention shall be allowed to adhere thereto, on their requesting to do so. Notice of such adhesion shall be given, diplomatically, to the Government of the French Republic, and by the latter to the other signatory governments.

ARTICLE XV.

It is understood that the stipulations of this convention shall in nowise affect the liberty of action of belligerents.

ARTICLE XVI.

This convention shall take effect on such day as shall be agreed upon by the high contracting parties.

It shall remain in force for five years from that day, and, in case none of the high contracting parties shall have given notice, twelve months previously to the expiration of the said period of five years, of its intention to cause its effects to cease, it shall continue in force for one year, and so on from year to year.

In case one of the signatory powers shall give notice of its desire for the cessation of the effects of the convention, such notice shall be effective as regards that power only.

ARTICLE XVII.

This convention shall be ratified; its ratifications shall be exchanged at Paris as speedily as possible, and within one year at the latest.

In testimony whereof the respective plenipotentiaries have signed it, and have thereunto affixed their seals.

Done in twenty-six copies, at Paris, this 14th day of March, 1884.

ADDITIONAL ARTICLE.

The stipulations of the convention concluded this day for the protection of submarine cables shall be applicable, according to Article I, to the colonies and possessions of Her Britannic Majesty with the exception of those named below, to wit:

Canada, Newfoundland, The Cape Natal, New South Wales, Victoria, Queensland, Tasmania, South Australia, West Australia, New Zealand. Nevertheless, the stipulations of the said convention shall be applicable to one of the above-named colonies or possessions, if, in their [its?] name, a notification to that effect has been addressed by the representative of Her Britannic Majesty at Paris to the Minister of Foreign Affairs of France.

Each of the above-named colonies or possessions that shall have adhered to the said convention shall have the privilege of withdrawing in the same manner as the contracting powers. In case one of the colonies or possessions in question shall desire to withdraw from the convention, a notification to that effect shall be addressed by Her Britannic Majesty's representative at Paris to the Minister of Foreign Affairs of France.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. Chairman, this bill is one prepared by the State Department for the purpose of carrying out the convention between the United States Government and certain foreign powers—that is to say, between the United States and the Emperor of Germany, the King of Prussia, and various other sovereigns comprising a long list which it is scarcely necessary now to recapitulate. By that convention it was provided that it should be applicable outside of the territorial waters to all legally established submarine cables landed in the territories, colonies, or possessions of one or more of the high contracting parties.

This bill is simply an undertaking on the part of the United States Government to fulfill its part of that convention by providing penalties for infringement upon or injury done to submarine cables when done by vessels or by persons upon vessels which belong to the United States.

The only suggestion which I would have to make in addition to the report of the committee, and the specifications of the bill which speak for themselves, is the addition at the end of the third section of the words "not exceeding five thousand dollars." This section provides for the punishment of any person who willfully violates the provisions of the act.

It is in the following words:

That any person who shall willfully break or injure, or attempt to break or injure, or who shall in any manner procure, counsel, aid, abet, or be accessory to such breaking or injury, or attempt to break or injure, a submarine cable, in such manner as to interrupt or obstruct, in whole or in part, telegraphic communication, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years, and to a fine, either in lieu of or in addition to such imprisonment, not exceeding $5,000.

Now, in the bill which was offered to the House I do not see that there is any limitation upon the fine which is to be assessed against the person thus guilty, whereas in the report of the committee in the printed bill these words appear. I presume, therefore, that by some clerical error it was omitted in the text of the bill as originally reported, and I move at the end of the third section to add the words, "not exceeding five thousand dollars."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Virginia.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of section 3 add, "not exceeding $5,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DANIEL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

AMERICAN FISHERIES.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying documents, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the House of Representatives of the United States:

I transmit herewith, in response to a resolution of the House of the 24th ultimo, a report of the Secretary of State, with accompanying copies of correspondence between the Governments of the United States and Great Britain concerning the rights of American fishermen in the waters of British North America, supplemental to the correspondence already communicated to Congress with my message of December 8, 1886.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

COMMERCIAL RELATIONS BETWEEN AMERICAN COUNTRIES.

Mr. McCREARY. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 7884) authorizing the President of the United States to arrange a conference for the purpose of promoting arbitration and encouraging reciprocal commercial relations between the United States of America and the Republics of Mexico, Central and South America, and the Empire of Brazil.

Mr. MILLS. I reserve points of order on that bill.

The SPEAKER. The bill is in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. McCREARY. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of this bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. HAMMOND in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering the bill, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, requested and authorized to invite the several governments of the Republics of Mexico, Central and South America, and the Empire of Brazil to join the United States in a conference to be held at Washington, in the United States, for the purpose of discussing and recommending for adoption to their respective governments some plan of arbitration for the settlement of disagreements and disputes that may hereafter arise between them, and for considering questions relating to the improvement of business intercourse between said countries, and to encourage such reciprocal commercial relations as will be beneficial to all and secure more extensive markets for the products of each of said countries. The President of the United States shall appoint three commissioners who shall attend said conference on behalf of the United States, and shall report the proceedings thereof to the President, who shall transmit the same to Congress; and the commissioners shall each receive the sum of $1,000 for their services; and the sum of $20,000, or so much thereof as shall be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay said compensation and the reasonable expenses of the conference, to be approved by the Secretary of State.

Mr. McCREARY. Mr. Chairman, I had the honor to introduce the bill just read. Encouragement of commerce and promotion of arbitration should be interesting to all.

The object of the bill under consideration is to authorize the President of the United States to invite the several Governments of the Republics of Mexico and of Central and South America and the Empire of Brazil to join the United States in a conference to be held at Washington, in the United States, for the purpose of encouraging reciprocal commercial relations between our country and the countries named, and also to discuss and recommend to the respective governments some plan of arbitration for international disagreements.

Our Republic is at peace with all the world. Its situation, its population, its wealth, its achievements, and its possibilities are such as to justify it in assuming to be one of the leading powers of the world, and certainly the leading republic of this continent. Following its example, the Republics of Mexico and Central and South America threw off the yoke of foreign domination and have established independent, popular governments, fashioned in many respects like ours. In all of the western hemisphere there is no place so appropriate for the delegates from the three Americas to assemble as here at the capital of our great Republic.

The times and the surrounding circumstances are auspicious for a convention of American nations. It has not been long since a national Democratic convention declared "we favor an American continental policy based upon more intimate commercial and political relations with the fifteen sister republics of North, Central, and South America, but entangling alliances with none," and Mr. Jefferson in his inaugural address, at the beginning of the present century, announced the same sentiment when he said "peace, commerce, and honest friendship with all nations, entangling alliances with none."

A few years ago the people of our Republic celebrated the one hundredth anniversary of the Declaration of Independence in the city of Philadelphia, where our independence was declared and where the first constitutional convention was held and where Independence Hall still stands. All believed on that grand occasion that the human mind could scarcely assign a limit to the growth of our Republic, or compute a time-table to estimate its progress if under wise statesmanship, proper economy, and a just administration of the Government its prosperity is continued.

The first century of our Republic was mainly devoted to material development, to the construction of great transportation lines, to inventions of every description, to improvements in science, literature, and art, to the restoration of fraternity and friendship between different sections, to the formation of that Constitution which the great Gladstone termed "the most wonderful work ever prepared by the brain and purpose of man," and to the perfection of that government which Abraham Lincoln called "a government of the people, by the people, and for the people."

It is predicted by many of our wisest men that the second century of our national existence is "destined to be the international era of the Republic, an era of enlarged commercial intercourse with the outside world, and particularly more intimate social and commercial relations between the several sister nations of the three Americas."

The desire for a convention of all the nations of the American continent is not confined to any political party, section, or class. All classes and all the nations concerned seem to indorse the movement with enthusiasm.

I quote only a few utterances of presidents of various republics. The President of Guatemala said to the United States commissioners:

From the very beginning we have embraced with the greatest ardor the plan of the American Congress to send a commission to the Spanish American republics for the purpose of securing more intimate and friendly relations between them all.

Such a noble and elevated purpose can not but have the sincerest sympathy and co-operation from all those who desire the progress of the several nations of the New World, so that in having the honor to receive you and give you a most affectionate welcome, it is gratifying to be able to assure you that you will find on the part of the Government and the people of Guatemala a sincere disposition to aid in the success of your most important mission.

The grand Republic of the United States is the natural market of the different products we export, and they should find in your rich and populous consumers who are able to send us in return the great variety of their agricultural and mechanical products with benefit to the producers and consumers of both countries.

Guatemala has always endeavored to maintain the greatest harmony with the nations which honor us with their friendship, and it has always endeavored very especially to strengthen more and more the cordial relations which have forever existed between this country and the United States.

The President of Venezuela said:

Venezuela and the United States have the same institutions, the same history. The United States produced the immortal George Washington, "the first in the hearts of his countrymen," and Venezuela produced the immortal Bolivar, the father of five republics, freed by the impulse of stupendous efforts. Both of them honored by the recognition of the two confederacies, they are to-day the faithful representatives of the association of our interests and aspirations—equality before the law and the truth of democracy.

With these lofty motives the people of the New World aspire by union to seek the development of their industrial and commercial prosperity and to cement the alliance of views and intents in the reign of equity and the empire of justice.

President Diaz, of Mexico, said, when asked about the practicability of a congress of American nations:

That the suggestion was an old one, and had many times been considered by the Mexican Government, which he believed had always favored it. He recited his recollection of the several attempts made in this direction, beginning with Bolivar's plan of 1824, and the attitude presented on each occasion by the several administrations in his own country, showing great familiarity with the history of the proposition. He said he had always hoped such an international congress would be some time held, as he believed great good could be accomplished if all the American republics would consent to send delegates to meet upon an equal footing and agree upon measures for the common welfare.

The chief object to be discussed at such a gathering would naturally be a method of arbitration by which international differences could be peacefully adjusted, and another, equally important, was to confine American trade, so far as possible, to American nations.

The President of Chili said:

The extraordinary progress of the United States, independent of the advantage gained by the extension of its area, of its geographical position, and the elements which constitute its social organization, is due to the liberal institutions under which the people are governed and by which it has been proven that the free people are those that really prosper, and are the only ones that have peace as the essential condition of material, intellectual, and moral progress.

The South American republics when they made themselves free had in the northern zone an authority they could consult and an example they could follow. If, owing to reasons which are well understood, they could not copy the edifice you have framed, they have always endeavored at least to inspire in their own people the ideas which have enabled you to advance so resolutely on the road of human liberty and progress. If on this road so happily trodden the American constellation has added to its stars, it is also true that the southern star, following with no less certainty in the same heavens, and pursuing the same purpose, shines to-day with greater splendor and shows that we have not been amiss in seeking the path to glory, liberty, and prosperity.

The subject of establishing closer international relations between all the republics of the American continent and also the Empire of Brazil, containing in the aggregate one hundred millions of people, for the purpose of improving the business intercourse between those countries and securing more extensive markets for the products of each is both interesting and important. Sixty years ago this subject was advocated by Henry Clay and other great statesmen, and a conference was suggested between representatives of our Government and other governments, and President John Quincy Adams appointed representatives to the congress held at Panama to consider measures for promoting peace and reciprocal commercial relations between said countries. This conference was beneficial, but at that time our people were looking more to Europe for business and commerce than to the countries south of us, and no action was taken by our Congress. Now our population and wealth make this the foremost republic of the world, and our Government should inaugurate the movement in favor of an American conference.

The present depression of business and low price of farm products are caused, to a considerable extent, by a limited market for our surplus products. Some of the best markets we can look to are not far beyond our southern border. They are nearer to us than to any other great commercial nation. The people of Mexico and of Central and South America produce much that we need, and our abundant agricultural, manufactured, and mineral productions are greatly needed by them. These countries cover an area of 8,118,844 square miles, and have a population of 42,770,374. Their people recognize the superiority of our products and desire more intimate business intercourse with our people, but the great bulk of their commeree and trade is with Europe. The Argentine Republic has from forty-five to sixty steamships running regularly between Buenos Ayres and European ports, and no regular line between that country and the United States, and our commercial facilities with the other republics of Central and South America are about the same.

In 1884 our exports were valued at $733,768,764.

Of this amount we exported but $64,719,000 to Mexico and South and Central America.

Our annual mechanical and agricultural products are valued at $15,000,000,000, while we seldom have sold more than $75,000,000 worth of these products to our nearest neighbors, who buy in Europe at least five times as much as they get here.

The total commerce of the countries named in 1883 was as follows:

Imports	$331,100,599
Exports	391,294,781

Of the $331,100,599 of merchandise sold to those countries, the share of the United States was only $42,598,469; yet we are their closest neighbor.

The disparity of our trade with Peru, Chili, Argentine Republic, and Brazil is both amazing and humiliating.

Last year the imports of merchandise were as follows:

To—	From Great Britain.	From United States.
Peru	$6,235,685	$743,105
Chili	11,060,880	2,211,007
Argentine Republic	29,692,295	4,317,293
Brazil	33,946,215	7,317,293

The following tables exhibit the population of the countries named, and the relations of trade carried on by them with the United States and Great Britain during the last year:

From the report of the commissioners to South and Central America I gather some remarkable facts:

We have more trade with either Belgium, Italy, The Netherlands, Spain, Switzerland, Russia, China, Japan, Australia, than we have with all the Central American States combined. We have nearly as much trade with Greece as we have with Chili. We sell more sewing-machines in Switzerland than we sell in Chili, and Switzerland sells Chili more sewing-machines than she buys of us.

England, France, and Germany have secured a monopoly of the trade of Spanish America, by the establishment of quick, regular, and cheap transportation, and we have lost it by neglect. For example, Bolivia has a foreign trade of over $16,000,000 a year, yet the name of that country does not appear in the tables of our Bureau of Statistics. The chief imports of Bolivia are cotton and woolen goods, agricultural implements, mining machinery, hardware, cutlery, clocks, watches, canned goods, and provisions, a list which could be filled in any commercial city of the United States as cheaply as in Europe, and yet the annual reports of the Treasury Department of the United States do not show a dollar's worth of commerce between the United States and that country.

The most absurd spectacle in the commercial world is our trade with Brazil. We buy nearly all her raw products, while she spends the money we pay for them in England and France. In 1884, of the exports of Brazil, $50,266,000 went to the United States, $29,000,000 to England, and $24,000,000 to France. Of the imports of Brazil in the same year $35,000,000 came from England, $15,000,000 from France, and only $8,000,000 from the United States.

In 1884 the value of manufactured merchandise imported into the several countries of Central and South America was as follows:

Central America:
Mexico	$30,000,000

The increase of the imports from Great Britain into the Argentine Republic in 1884 was very large, and reached a total of $38,000,000. There was a corresponding increase in most of the other countries.

The following shows the exports from England, France, and the United States to Mexico, Central and South America, the Spanish West Indies, Hayti, and San Domingo of cotton goods, iron and steel, machines and implements, and hardware and cutlery, the goods in which we excel:

Articles.	England.	France.	United States.
Cotton manufactures	$45,738,000	$6,215,000	$4,563,000
Iron and steel	11,090,000	3,339,000	2,810,000
Machinery, engines, &c.	8,022,000	1,157,000	6,820,000
Hardware and cutlery	3,505,000	114,000	1,254,000
Total principal articles	68,355,000	10,825,000	15,447,000

The consumption of cotton goods in Central and South America and in Mexico amounts to nearly one hundred millions of dollars annually, and although they are so near our cotton fields, England furnishes about 90 per cent. of these goods.

Cotton fabrics constitute the wearing apparel of nearly three-fourths of those people, and they have to import all they use.

England monopolizes this trade because of her cheap transportation facilities, and because her mills furnish goods especially adapted to the wants and tastes of the consumers, which our mills have never attempted to produce.

It is very important that transportation facilities between the United States and her southern neighbors should be improved; for as long as the freight from Liverpool, Hamburg, and Bordeaux is $15 a ton, they can not be induced to pay $40 a ton to bring merchandise from the United States.

There is not a commercial city in these countries where the manufacturers of the United States can not compete with their European rivals in every article we produce for export.

The testimony of the importing merchants of those countries shows that aside from the difference in cost and convenience in transporting, it is to their advantage to buy in the United States, because the quality of our products is superior, and our prices are usually as low as those of Europe. In this connection it may be important to consider whether a common standard of gold and silver coins equal in value, weight, and fineness in all of the countries named, and current in all of them, would help to increase commerce and friendly relations among them. Suggestions made by our commissioners for a common currency were favorably received by all the governments visited, including Chili; all of the Central and South American countries being under a system of silver monometallism.

Our neglect of the republics south of us is only equaled by our ignorance of their resources, condition, and progress. Very few of our people are informed as to the intelligence, enterprise, and civilization of the people of those countries, and very few appreciate the rapid progress they have made in self-government and political reform.

The report of the commissioners shows that the development of the southern half of South America is nearly as rapid as that of the United States. Immigration is flooding in, internal improvements are opening new and fertile fields, and wealth is increasing in a ratio enjoyed by no other section of the globe.

Chili, Uruguay, Paraguay, and the Argentine Republic, almost a terra incognita to us, are booming like our Western Territories. In 1876 the imports of the Argentine Republic were valued at $36,000,000; in 1884 they had reached $80,000,000. In 1876 the merchandise brought to that country from England, France, and Germany was valued at only $18,000,000, while in 1884 it was more than $53,000,000. The entire imports from the United States for twenty years were $6,000,000 less than those from the three commercial nations of Europe for the year 1884.

Within the last year the Government of the Argentine Republic has made contracts for $59,000,000 worth of railway improvements, including a line of road northward into Bolivia, and two lines across the continent to Chili, so as to bring the commerce of the Pacific slope into the harbor of Buenos Ayres, instead of taking it around the Straits of Magellan.

In 1874 the foreign commerce of Chili amounted to $42,000,000. In 1884 it reached $132,000,000. From $50,000,000 to $60,000,000 in merchandise is imported into Chili every year, of which England furnishes over $20,000,000, France over $12,000,000, Germany over $8,000,000, and the United States $3,000,000.

Adding the imports of Brazil to those of Uruguay, Chili, and the Argentine Republic it will be found that the aggregate value of manufactured products introduced into those four countries annually reaches the enormous sum of $250,000,000, of which England furnishes nearly one-half, France about $50,000,000, Germany about $35,000,000, and the United States about $17,000,000.

We have no adequate conception of the present magnitude of these markets nor of their prospective value. The manufacturers of the United States can supply almost every article represented in that $250,000,000, with the exception of a few articles of luxury which we ourselves import. The consumption of cotton goods alone amounts annually to over $65,000,000, and 95 per cent. is supplied by the mills of Manchester.

To properly appreciate how much we need improved commercial relations with the republics of Central and South America and the Empire of Brazil, I present the following exhibit of the international commerce of the world as taken from Mulhall's Dictionary of Statistics:

This exhibit furnishes the amazing and marvelous information that the value of the sea-going commerce of the world was in 1830, $1,610,000,000; in 1840 it was $2,495,000,000; in 1850, $3,735,000,000; in 1860, $6,705,000,000; in 1870, $9,354,000,000; and in 1880, $13,440,000,000, and that the foreign commerce of the greatest commercial powers of the world is as follows:

Great Britain	$2,875,000
British colonies	1,810,000
France	1,695,000
Germany	1,575,000
United States	1,545,000

It appears that our Republic, which is but little over a century old, is first in agriculture, first in manufactures, first in transportation, and fourth in commerce. These exhibits point to the grand possibilities of our Republic and demand that our legislation should be responsive to the necessities of the times and keep pace with the grand march of American civilization and American progress.

If we desire to be first in commerce also among the nations of the world, we should make the proper effort. The first goal to be reached lies south of us, and is comprised in the present and future wealth of the republics of Central America and South America and the Empire of Brazil.

The conference is not only for the encouragement of reciprocal commercial relations between our country and the Central and South American countries, but it is also for the purpose of discussing and recommending for adoption to the respective governments some plan of arbitration for the settlement of international disagreements and disputes. One of the most popular and powerful words of modern times is "arbitration." It is beginning to ring throughout the civilized world as the harbinger of better days, when war shall be no more, and when "Peace on earth, good will toward men" shall be the grand benediction of the age.

Our loved and respected late Vice-President, Thomas A. Hendricks, said at the Democratic convention of 1884, in Chicago, as almost a parting valedictory:

> Will nations never desire a more rational umpire of differences than force? * * * Must blood and treasure always flow before international controversies can be settled? * * * The civilization of this age demands that they be referred to the disinterested States for settlement by friendly arbitration. * * * It will be a beautiful spectacle if this Republic, so strong and so secure, shall lead the nations in a movement for permanent peace, and for the relief of the people everywhere, from the maintenance of standing armies and ships of war.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. McCREARY. Yes, sir.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. Suppose they agree on a plan of arbitration, how is it to be enforced—by force or by what method?

Mr. McCREARY. There is no desire when we seek to cultivate friendly relations with republics to use force. The object of this convention is to bring together delegates from all the republics of Central and South America and the Empire of Brazil, for the purpose of consulting how best to promote commercial relations between this country and those, and how best to agree on such rules of arbitration as will hereafter settle international differences without war.

Hon. John J. Crittenden, of Kentucky, said in the Senate of the United States:

> What a glorious homage would this Republic render to its best principles by accepting the arbitration of a tribunal composed of men distinguished for their talents, knowledge, science, and moral worth. This would tend greatly to the elevation of the age.

Ex-President Grant wrote, November 27, 1884:

> My views on peaceful arbitration in the settlement of international differences instead of the sword have not changed. I look with confidence for an established court, recognized by all nations, having authority to settle differences without resort to arms, thus rendering unnecessary the maintenance of standing armies.

Victor Hugo uttered his grandest peace classic in 1849, when he said:

> A day will come when the only battlefield will be the market open to commerce and the mind opening to new ideas. A day will come when bullets and bombshells will be replaced by votes, by the universal suffrage of nations, by the venerable arbitration of a great sovereign senate, which will be to Europe what the Parliament is to England, what the Diet is to Germany, what the Legislative Assembly is to France. A day will come when a cannon will be exhibited in public museums, just as an instrument of torture is now, and the people will be astonished how such a thing could have been. A day will come when those two immense groups, the United States of America and the united states of Europe shall be seen placed in presence of each other, extending the hand of fellowship across the ocean, exchanging their produce, their industry, their arts, their genius, clearing the earth, peopling the deserts, improving creation under the eye of the Creator, and uniting, for the good of all, these two irresistible and infinite powers—the fraternity of men and the power of God.

These great men are all dead, but it may be truly said "God buries the workman, but carries on his work." Hundreds of utterances could be quoted in favor of arbitration from men who have become distinguished on the bench, at the bar, in the pulpit, and in the army, but I shall give but one more.

At the late world's congress for the reform and codification of the law of nations, at Cologne, David Dudley Field offered the following resolution; which was unanimously adopted:

> Resolved, That this conference observes with great satisfaction the increasing frequency with which the nations of the world have recourse to arbitration for the settlement of their disputes. But while rejoicing over each separate instance of the successful application of this principle, it earnestly hopes that the time is not far distant when all civilized governments will unite to make arbitration a permanent and authoritative part of the law of nations.

To the people of Central and South America, who have so often felt the blighting scourge of war, and whose business has been depressed, enterprise stagnated, and treasuries bankrupted by internal feuds, the subject of settling international disputes by arbitration will be received with great favor.

The bill does not seek to control the conference or determine what it shall do, but simply to bring representative men of each government together, to discuss and recommend for adoption to their respective governments some plan of arbitration for the settlement of disagreements and disputes that may hereafter arise between them, and to consider questions relating to the improvement of business intercourse between said countries, and to encourage such reciprocal commercial relations as will be beneficial to all, and secure more extensive markets for the products of each.

While no scheme may be devised by which all and every disagreement and dispute may be submitted to arbitration in such manner as to always avoid international war, it certainly will be in accordance with the civilization and Christianity of this age to seek to establish a plan of arbitration by which questions of difference may be arranged and settled peaceably.

The Amphictyonic council of Greece, composed of delegates from each of its states, and empowered to examine and decide all their disputes, did much to preserve peace between them for many years, and the Achæan league did the same, and was often solicited even by foreign nations to act as arbiter of their disputes.

International congresses are no novelty. The Vienna congress met in 1814. It was an international congress, embracing Great Britain, Austria, France, Portugal, Russia, Spain, Sweden, and Prussia. Its object was a general settlement of international relations between the leading powers of Europe.

The history of the Panama congress commenced in 1821, and was originated by the illustrious Bolivar, President of Colombia, who pressed it on the powers of South America. Peace was the primary idea, and this congress was intended to be "an umpire and conciliator in disputes and differences." Then there was the diplomatic meetings or congresses of Westphalia, of Ryswick, and of Ghent.

In latter years arbitration among nations has become more frequent. We all remember how that group of questions growing out of the Alabama claims was happily disposed of by the tribunal of Geneva.

In 1874 the President of the French Republic as arbitrator settled the Delagoa Bay difficulty between England and Portugal. The dispute between Switzerland and Italy as to the Peschiaso boundary, which caused a war, was settled by the United States minister as arbitrator. The dangerous dispute between China and Japan as to the murder of a Japanese captain by the Chinese on the Island of Formosa was settled in 1875 by arbitration. The Emperor of Russia settled as arbitrator the dispute between Japan and Peru, caused by the seizure in 1872 of a Peruvian bark engaged in the coolie trade.

In 1879 the Italian ambassador at Washington arbitrated successfully between the United States and Spain as to indemnity for damage done to Americans in the civil war in Cuba. I could cite many other cases of successful and beneficial arbitration between nations, but I have said enough on this subject to prove the importance of arbitration to all nations, and particularly to the nations of North, Central, and South America.

While I have great respect for those who advocate a reform of our laws on currency and taxation, I believe that the great questions presented in the bill under consideration should not be delayed, but should receive prompt action, so as to keep pace with the other important subjects referred to.

It is not proposed to intrust to the conference the power to make final and definite treaty arrangements—that would be in opposition to our Constitution; but it is believed that all will be benefited by a conference held under the invitation and auspices of the most prosperous and powerful nation of the American continent, from which assemblage reports of the proceedings shall be made to the respective governments for proper action.

The bill provides that the commissioners shall report the proceedings thereof to the President, who shall transmit the same to Congress, and it is believed that nothing but common good can grow out of such a conference.

At no time since the organization of our Government has there been a deeper conviction of the propriety of connecting in closer relations our Republic and the Republics of Mexico, Central and South America, and the Empire of Brazil.

Whatever tends to bring into kindly accord the interests and aims of our country and those of our neighbors will be beneficial.

The report of the commissioners appointed under the act of 1884 shows that the people of these countries are anxious to encourage more intimate commercial relations with the people of the United States.

They say in their report:

Unless we have been completely misled by the expressions and protestations of the ruling powers of each and every one of the governments we have visited, the only estrangement possible between them and us will flow from our own indifference and neglect. Indeed, we have already lost much that naturally belongs to us from this cause. Every president and cabinet officer, every leading and thoughtful citizen we met, joined in the sentiment of gratified surprise that our country had taken the initiative by this embassy in bringing about more cordial and hearty communication between the various republics and our own. In our effort to reach more intimate relations we have, then, this basis of kindness and desire upon the part of those we seek to reach as a foundation for our action. We shall plant seed in a genial soil beneath a propitious sky.

No time is fixed in the bill for the conference. The President is fully authorized to arrange the conference as his judgment may dictate.

On the 4th of March, 1889, the Constitution of the United States will have completed the first century of its existence. The 12th of October, 1892, will be the four hundredth anniversary of the discovery of America by Columbus. These are great historic anniversaries, of world-wide importance, which will probably be celebrated in a becoming manner. Either of these anniversaries, or any other time selected by the President, will no doubt be agreeable to all concerned. I then confidently ask the passage of this bill. The cost is small indeed compared with the great results that are to flow from the conference. I believe if properly held it will be one of the most important assemblages the world has ever seen; and that its work will live in history and be crowned with the wreath woven for all that promotes liberty, improves republics, and ennobles humanity. [Applause.]

Mr. BELMONT. I regret extremely that I am unable to concur with my associates on the Foreign Affairs Committee who advise the House to accept and pass the bill which requests the President to invite the several governments on this continent therein named to join this Government in a conference, and authorizes the President to appoint three commissioners who shall attend the conference on behalf of this Government, and appropriates $20,000 therefor. The objects and aims of the conference, as vaguely mentioned in the bill, are threefold. One is to discuss and recommend for adoption by this Government, and each of the other governments, some plan of arbitration for the settlement of disagreements and disputes hereafter arising between them. Another is to consider questions relating to the improvements of business intercourse between "said countries." A third is to encourage such peaceful and reciprocal commercial relations as will be beneficial to all, and secure more extensive markets for the surplus products of each of said countries.

If the bill shall become a law this Government will, as befits its dignity and power on this continent, be the initiator of the conference, and will naturally be considered by the participating nations as the one to take the lead in formulating the propositions to be considered by the conference. I have seen no indication that the President has suggested or advised the proposed conference, and if such a conference is to be convened by his invitation, on the request of Congress, then the promoters in Congress should, as it seems to me, define, with reasonable precision, not only the objects to be sought by those representing this Government in the conference but the ways and means by which those objects are to be obtained, including, in the outline, the concessions which our law-making power, as distinct from our treaty-making power, might be willing to make.

If the conference were proposed by other governments, as was the congress in Panama in 1826, or if the President had initiated the conference now proposed, and had asked the sanction of the Senate by the confirmation of commissioners, and of the two Houses by an appropriation of money therefor, then the President could be assumed to be in possession of, or to have formulated, the measures to be proposed at the conference, and the stipulations which, if inserted in a treaty, he would be willing to sign and transmit to the Senate for its action. But, in the present case, the initiation of negotiations to be carried on by the President comes, so far as I am informed, entirely from the House. If the conference should convene under the proposed bill, and the assembled powers were to ask our commissioners for an outline of their plan as regards the three topics, what reply should the President instruct them to make?

ARBITRATION.

The first topic in the bill is arbitration. It proposes that the conference shall discuss, and recommend, "some plan." What plan? Which "disagreements and disputes" are to be submitted to arbitration? What sort of arbitration? Those are problems concerning which the President should, by the bill, be advised, or else most inconvenient consequences might flow from a rejection by the Senate, or Congress, of a plan or system of arbitration which had been adopted by the conference on the initiation and advocacy of our own commissioners.

What is arbitration, as understood in international intercourse? Vattel defines it to be "a reasonable and natural mode of deciding such disputes as do not directly affect the safety of the nation." The exclusion contained in this definition is most important. It is believed that during the century and a quarter which has intervened since this definition was written, no powerful government has consented, or indicated its willingness to consent generally to the reference to an arbitration, either by neutral governments or by commissioners, of any but secondary questions, such as claims for pecuniary compensation for injuries, questions of boundary lines, disputes over the interpretation of treaties, and other similar questions. Wars have been prevented by the mediation, or good offices, of some friendly government or governments, but the exercise of mediation, or of good offices, is rather a method of conciliation than of arbitration, which last implies the power of definite and final decision.

The United States, ever since the organization of their National Government, and notably in the treaty of peace of 1783, have frequently used with great success arbitration as a method for the settlement of secondary questions. The plenipotentiaries to the Congress of Paris of 1856, in their twenty-second protocol, express in the names of their Governments the wish that the States, between whom serious difficulties may arise, would, before appealing to arms, have recourse, as far as circumstances will admit, to the good offices of a friendly power. But there again the exceptions "as far as circumstances will admit," and the employment only of good offices (which last is often a simple formality to bring the contending parties together) as distinct from arbitration, which pronounces a real obligatory judgment, are significant.

It may be said that the international tribunal at Geneva was the submission by this Government of a question too important to be called a secondary question, but it is to be remembered that it was by the result of negotiations by the Joint High Commission at Washington that the "three rules" were formulated, which left little to be done at Geneva, excepting to ascertain the facts, apply the rules, and assess the damages. It was the decision of the British Government that war ought not to come out of the "Alabama claims" which led up to the Joint High Commission, which in turn created the tribunal at Geneva.

The bill reported to the House gives no indication of the class of "disagreements and disputes" which this Government will consent to refer to arbitration. Will the United States consent to confer on any tribunal the power to adjudge the cessions of territory by us, or the demolition of our fortifications, and to decree anything and everything to be done by us which, according to the present usages of international law, may be imposed upon a defeated nation by its victors in war? Probably not, and, if not, then precisely what class of questions will the United States say may be referred to arbitration? If arbitration is to be a complete substitute for war, then it would seem essential that the jurisdiction of the arbitrators shall cover all "disagreements and disputes" which may possibly lead to war. When a commotion or insurrection or civil war is, to the great possible injury of a neighboring nation, on the point of breaking out within any one of the nations to participate in the conference, shall the origin of the outbreak, and the claims of the contending parties, be submitted to arbitration, or shall the sphere of arbitration be limited to questions which, according to existing international usage, are capable of constituting legitimate causes of war? Will the United States consent to submit to arbitration a decision of the question whether or not this Government shall make an apology to some other nation?

Assuming the proposed bill to be so enlarged and amended as to declare definitely the class of questions which this Government may declare to the conference that it is willing, in behalf of itself, to submit to arbitration, then what international machinery shall be provided on this continent to ascertain the facts which underlie the dispute, and give judgment? Shall this international organization, for the settlement of "disagreements and disputes," be of a permanent character, with authority to take immediate jurisdiction without waiting until the parties concerned mutually agree to submit to arbitration? Is there to be on this continent a permanent congress of nations, or a new international nation? Are the several independent nations on this continent to form themselves into a federation for the purpose of arbitrating disputes between themselves? If this congress of nations is not to be in perpetual session, then by whom is it to be convened in order to deliver its judgment upon "disagreements and disputes" tending to disturb the peace of the continent? As our own thirty-ninth Government, which is the Federal Government at Washington, clasps and unfolds the thirty-eight State governments in the union of States, and as is intended to settle disputes and prevent war between them, shall there be a new international nation on this continent, with a congress, a court, and an executive, to settle disputes and prevent war between the several nations?

What limitation shall be placed upon the nature of the award and judgment which this international tribunal may make?

And when the proposed bill has been amended so as satisfactorily to answer these questions, then will come the other question, whether the decisions of this new international tribunal on this continent shall have only a moral authority, or provision shall be made for the physical enforcement of the verdict. Is the new contrivance to be, in the first place, an appeal from force to reason, and then, if reason does not prevail, an appeal back again from reason to force? If there is to be armed force behind the decision of this new board of arbitration, how shall this force be maintained, who shall command it, and what shall be the limit of international expenditure therefor?

If it be said that the proposed bill only contemplates an effort to concert measures between the independent governments on this continento exercise a moral authority between nations where "disagreements and disputes" unfortunately arise, and thus settle them in an amicable and satisfactory manner, it may be said that this Government has already given ample indication that such is its wish. But if, on the other hand, a chief object of the proposed bill is to urge the several governments of the Republics of Mexico, Central and South America to agree on "some plan of arbitration for the settlement of disagreements and disputes that may hereafter arise between them," but which do not directly concern this Government, then it will deserve consideration whether uninvited by those governments or either of them, it will be prudent for this Government to thus attempt to participate in the mutual relations of other independent governments on this continent, and whether, if we do thus endeavor, we shall not thereby enter upon a field of effort from which hitherto our well-established policy and the warning voice of Washington have excluded us.

Arbitration as a means in the affairs of individuals of obviating the necessity of recourse to courts of law, or in the affairs of nations of preventing the arbitrament of the sword, has much to commend it. Courts of conciliaton are scarcely less effective and benevolent than courts of arbitration, whether in individual or international affairs. But before the proposed bill shall become a law ought not Congress to define the circumstances and conditions under which the decision of the arbitrators shall not be binding? Surely an independent government can not be expected to be bound if the arbitrators are incapable (as perhaps this Government had reason to suspect in its latest arbitration of the fishery question); or if the arbitrators acted in bad faith; or if the contending parties have not been misunderstood; or if the award shall have been in excess of the terms of the reference; or if the decision shall have been contrary to natural justice. These questions and others like them will naturally come to the front on the assembling of the proposed conference, and our commissioners will naturally ask for instructions from the President. The law which initiates the Congress should, as it seems to me, clearly intimate to the President its opinion.

In July, 1873, Mr. Gladstone said in the House of Commons that a general and permanent system of arbitration would make 'practical progress, not by attempting permanent international concert, which would then be premature, but by "a steady adherence on the part of those powers who are readily inclined and convinced and persuaded, on the subject to principle, first governing themselves by justice and moderation, and next losing no opportunity of recommending a peaceful settlement of disputes between nations."

IMPROVEMENT OF "BUSINESS INTERCOURSE."

The second topic to be discussed by the conference concerns "the improvement of business intercourse between said countries." And here, again, what is to be accomplished by the President in that direction seems rather vague and difficult to practically deal with. Does the "improvement of business intercourse between said countries" imply and include the improvement of the means of transportation by land and by sea? Does this Government intend to commit that large problem to an international conference, and to hold out the expectation to the governments participating in such conference that this Government will be bound by the result of the deliberations? Or, if not, then should there not be in the bill a limitation and definition of the subjects relating "to the improvement of business intercourse between said countries," concerning which a conference is invited?

MARKETS FOR SURPLUS PRODUCTS.

The third object of the proposed conference is declared in the bill to be the encouragement of "such peaceful and reciprocal commercial relations as will be beneficial to all and secure more extensive markets for the surplus products of each of said countries." It is to be inferred from this language that one of the objects which this Government seeks to promote is the obtaining of "more extensive markets for the surplus products of Mexico, Brazil, and the States of Central and South America." It is not to be assumed that this Government will initiate a conference between themselves and the other Governments on this continent in order to monopolize for ourselves the purchase of "the surplus products of each of said countries." It is not to be assumed that either of those countries will undertake to sell its surplus products to none else but ourselves. The purpose is, on the contrary, declared to be such "reciprocal commercial relations" as will secure more extensive markets for the surplus products of each. Whether or not all who dwell on this western hemisphere, or even we of the United States of America, would be more prosperous and better off if all commercial relations with the eastern hemisphere were prohibited or prevented is of course a very large question.

But so long as the people and the governments on this continent which are at the south of us shall find on the other continent, and not find on this continent, the surplus capital and money which they need, it will not be reasonable for us to hope that Mexico, Brazil, and the Republics of Central and South America will cease to hold commercial intercourse with Europe, or that European holders of the indebtedness of those States will cease to exercise very potential influence in their affairs, and in the end control, it is feared, any conference to be assembled under the proposed bill. There is no danger that the primacy of the United States of America upon this continent, which comes of their situation, population, wealth, enterprise, energy, and determination to assert their rights, will be questioned or denied.

But it is true, nevertheless, that we seek an outlet for the surplus product of our skill and our prosperous labor, and for that reason we should welcome the enlargement of "such peaceful and reciprocal commercial relations" between us and the Spanish races to the south of us. For the same reason we should encourage similar "peaceful and reciprocal commercial relations" with the five millions and more of people of our own race, speaking our own language, reading our newspapers, and living under laws and political institutions similar to our own. And for the same reason we should encourage "peaceful and reciprocal commercial relations" with the peoples who inhabit the islands of the Gulf of Mexico and the surrounding seas, which islands are now the colonial dependencies of European governments. But the Dominion of Canada to the north of us and the islands of the Gulf to the south of us are excluded from the arrangements contemplated in the proposed bill.

Nothing is now so desirable for our own people as a free and reciprocal interchange of products between ourselves and the people of other nations on this continent. But what now hinders such free interchange so much as our tariff laws? If this Government shall invite Brazil, Mexico, and the republics of Central America and South America to join us in a conference to promote such free and reciprocal interchange of products, what concessions in our tariff schedules is the President to be authorized to instruct our commissioners to propose on our part? The question of our own tariff will naturally and immediately come up for discussion and consideration. Shall, for example, our commissioners be authorized to offer to the Argentine Republic to admit its wool into our ports free of duty?

No one can be more sensible than I am of the great advantages which in our country flow from that free commercial intercourse, unvexed by tariffs or custom-houses, which the Federal Constitution secures. I wish by some possible and wise contrivance, those advantages now enjoyed by and between Maine and California, Florida and Alaska, could be realized by and between every nation and every producer on this hemisphere from Baffin's Bay to Cape Horn. But is this Government now in a condition to successfully ask in a diplomatic way the accomplishment of such a result? To use Mr. Gladstone's language, should we not first of all begin to govern ourselves in tariff matters with "justice and moderation?" And then, too, does opinion in this House tend to tolerate a reform or protective system by treaties? What is to be the fate of the Sandwich Islands treaty and Mexican treaty? Is there not a disposition against the sugar arrangements of the Hawaiian Islands treaty to even sacrifice the great political and naval advantages which that treaty gives to us, situated as these islands are in the track of traffic between California and China, Japan and Australia?

And if we can not successfully compete in our own jurisdiction with foreign manufacturers, excepting by the aid of prohibitory or impending tariff rates, I am at a loss to understand how our commissioners to the proposed conference can convince Mexico or Brazil or the republics of Central and South America that we can, in their jurisdiction, compete successfully against those same manufacturers and offer our products at cheaper prices than European manufacturers can offer similar articles.

So far as this bill endeavors to accomplish an increase of trade by the exchange of products between the people of our own United States and the people living under other governments on this continent (including the colonies hereon possessed by European governments) the object is one which deserves encouragement and success, but it may well be doubted whether such an object can be best promoted by international conferences and treaty stipulations. So far as the welfare of our own Government is concerned, it is to be feared, as I have already said, that the deliberations of an international conference between the representatives of this Government and of other independent governments established and having the seat of authority on this continent, would be in danger of injurious interference, so far as this Government is concerned, by the intrigues of those in Europe who are the holders of so large a part of the indebtedness of Central American or South American States.

It is true that the trade and commercial intercourse now existing between foreign peoples on this continent and other peoples are not altogether carried on with ourselves. The following statements will exhibit the population of the independent states on this continent, including the colonial Dominion of Canada, and the relation of trade carried on by them with the United States to the trade carried on by them with Great Britain, and the vessels in which it is carried on.

Until there shall be a reform of our own laws of currency and taxation, and a plan adopted that promises permanency, there will be, it is feared, little hope of a successful result of diplomatic negotiations with the neighboring governments on this continent looking to an increase of trade and commercial intercourse by them with ourselves. What reply could our representatives make to-day when asked what our policy about currency and taxation is to be? The theory of our existing tariff legislation is that our own manufacturers can only be saved alive against foreign competition by preventing, through a custom-house tax on nearly every completed manufacture, our own people from buying a similar fabric in a foreign country. That tariff legislation has, it is believed, created the very evil which the proposed bill and one of the proposed joint resolutions would endeavor to remove.

One of the difficulties with which we in the United States have now to contend is that, by reason of our present tariff laws, we can not in our own workshops compete with European manufacturers, notwithstanding the great advantage we have from the efficiency of better paid and better educated labor. So long as such tariff laws shall be maintained, it is not believed that any diplomatic negotiations will enable the United States to do in the Dominion of Canada, or in Mexico, or in Central America, or in South America what we can not do at home—which is to compete with European manufacturers. Freedom to buy in these communities we now have, and we can enlarge its use to any degree, but freedom to sell to those communities we can only enlarge by producing equally good articles which we will sell at least as cheaply as our European competitors.

All schemes whatever for retaining a protective system and gaining foreign markets are impossible of success, no matter how many railways we may build or steamships we may subsidize. It will be seen from the statistics already given that a large part of the products of our neighbors to the south of us are now admitted at our custom-houses free of duty, but the difficulty of increasing the exports of our manufactured products to those countries remains, because our protective tariff inflicts what, owing to the increased cost of manufacture, is in effect an export tax upon our products, which frustrates the efforts of our enterprising and inventive people to have more complete possession of the neighboring markets upon this continent.

The annual report of Secretary Manning to Congress, and his subsequent communications on currency, taxation and tariff reform, together with the recent report of the Bureau of Labor, clearly indicate how and when a removal of the existing business depression is to come. A rehabilitation of silver, and a restoration of the old price of that metal by open mints for all comers bringing gold or silver; free coinage of full legal-tender coins of both metals on an international ratio contemplated by the second section of Mr. BLAND'S law of 1878, and endeavored to be promoted by Secretary Bayard; a sound system of finance; and a wise adaptation of the burden of taxation to the back that must bear it, will do more to open markets for our products in South America than will any diplomatic negotiations to be carried on by the President, and should precede such attempted negotiations.

Mr. MCCREARY. I have promised to give five minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PHELPS] and five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CURTIN].

Mr. BELMONT. I believe I had the floor. This evening is set apart for tributes to the memory of deceased Representatives of the State of New York. We can not get through with the bill before 5 o'clock. I ask general permission that gentlemen have leave to print in the RECORD remarks on this bill.

Mr. MORRISON. I object. I will not object to leave being granted to individual members who desire it, but I object to this wholesale permission.

Mr. DANIEL, and Mr. COX, of North Carolina, asked permission to print remarks in the RECORD upon the pending bill.

There was no objection.

Mr. MCCREARY. I yield five minutes of my time to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PHELPS].

Mr. BELMONT. I believe I have the floor. It appears to me it is about time the committee should rise.

Mr. REED. Let the question be submitted and let the committee dispose of it.

Mr. BELMONT. I withdraw my motion that the committee rise and yield to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PHELPS], five minutes.

Mr. PHELPS. Mr. Chairman, two minutes will be all that I need to congratulate the friends of peace and progress that the same bullet which destroyed the administration did not kill the measure which it inaugurated and was engaged in successfully prosecuting.

Six years ago the administration of President Garfield, eager to obtain these same results, namely, to promote arbitration and to increase commercial intercourse between the United States of America and the Republics of Mexico, Central and South America, and the Empire of Brazil, promulgated this as the best method to accomplish the purpose.

But party spirit ran so high that the great advantages of this conference could not crush out partisan jealousy, and the measure did not receive that universal sympathy and aid which its merits deserved. Now, if we may judge from this report of a Democratic Committee on Foreign Affairs, which is substantially unanimous, and from the different bills developing this same idea which have come from both sides of this House, trooping to our committee-room, both parties recognize its value, and we may expect hereafter the support of the whole people. I gratefully accept the aid of the other side in carrying out this project, and while I recall regretfully the six years that are past, I am not disposed to repine.

I know that to-day the countries I have mentioned buy three hundred and fifty millions of foreign produce; and I know that we sell them only forty-five. And I know that if the plan so well developed by Secretary Blaine had been at that time completed, those figures would be far different. But, all the same, I look hopefully forward and with this Democratic co-operation shall struggle to carry to an end this measure, which will promote arbitration and increase commercial and friendly intercourse between us and our southern sisters on this western continent. [Applause.]

Mr. MILLS. Will the gentleman answer this question: Why was Canada left out of this happy family?

Mr. PHELPS. For the reason that the gentleman who was then Secretary of State was aware of the fact that this Government could not invite dominions, or colonies, or dependencies of any kind, but must address its invitations to powers which exist in their own autonomy. [Applause.]

Mr. BELMONT. Mr. Chairman, I now yield to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COX].

Mr. COX, of North Carolina, withholds his remarks for revision, [See Appendix.]

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BELMONT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee now rise.

Mr. McCREARY. Mr. Chairman, I hope that before the committee rises——

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BELMONT] that the committee now rise.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 45, noes 27.

Mr. STEELE. Let us have tellers.

Tellers were refused, only 14 gentlemen voting in favor thereof.

Mr. McCREARY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CURTIN] be allowed five minutes.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask for the regular order. If this matter is to be debated it will extend indefinitely.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made, and the committee determines to rise.

Mr. REED. Tellers have been ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair announced that a sufficient number had not voted to order tellers. Only 14 gentlemen voted in the affirmative.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HAMMOND reported that the Committee of the Whole had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7884) authorizing the President of the United States to arrange a conference for the purpose of promoting arbitration and encouraging reciprocal commercial relations between the United States of America and the Republics of Mexico, Central and South America, and the Empire of Brazil, and had come to no resolution thereon.

THE GENERAL LAND OFFICE.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa, from the Committee on the Public Lands, by unanimous consent, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (S. 2877) to promote the efficiency of the General Land Office; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. VIELE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now take a recess until 7.30 p. m., in accordance with the resolution heretofore adopted.

The motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly (at 5 o'clock p. m.) took a recess until 7.30 p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The House reassembled at half past 7 o'clock p. m., and was called to order by Mr. McMILLIN, as Speaker pro tempore.

The Clerk read the following:

SPEAKER'S ROOM, Washington, D. C., February 8, 1887.

I hereby designate Hon. BENTON McMILLIN, of Tennessee, to preside as Speaker pro tempore during this evening's session.

J. G. CARLISLE.

Hon. JOHN B. CLARK, Jr.,
Clerk House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chaplain will offer prayer.

Rev. W. H. MILBURN, Chaplain of the House, offered the following prayer:

Almighty and everlasting God! we devoutly bless Thee for the long line of brave and honest men who through nearly a century have made the Halls of Congress illustrious by their devotion to the highest interests of this Republic! And as we are gathered to-night to commemorate the virtues and the energies of some of the members of this House who have departed from us and passed to the unseen world, we pray that the fire of patriotism may glow in every breast and that every one of us may feel like devoting ourselves to the highest welfare of the land with all our power of brain, thought, influence, and grace! We beseech Thee, O Lord! to bless the men who shall speak to the House to-night concerning our departed friends! As it is said that republics are ungrateful, may we cherish the recollection of those who are gone, and may we ourselves deserve perpetual memory by the singleness and simplicity of our motives, the fullness of our service to the country! We humbly ask through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the order under which the House assembles this evening.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Tuesday, February 8, 1887, at 7.30 o'clock p. m., be assigned for the consideration of resolutions relating to the late Messrs. Arnot, Beach, and Dowdney, late Representatives in this House from the State of New York.

DEATH OF HON. JOHN ARNOT.

Mr. MILLARD. I submit the resolutions which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the House has received with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. John Arnot, late a member of the House of Representatives from the State of New York, and tenders to the family and kindred of the deceased the assurance of sympathy in their sad bereavement.

Resolved, That the business of the House be now suspended that opportunity may be given for fitting tributes to the memory of the deceased and to his eminent public and private virtues.

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be directed to transmit to the family of the deceased a copy of these resolutions.

ADDRESS OF MR. MILLARD.

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Speaker, at a meeting of the New York Congressional delegation recently held I was directed by its chairman, Mr. Hewitt, to present to the House at this time the resolutions just read. It now becomes my sad duty to ask for their consideration and to join in paying the last official tribute to the memory of my deceased colleague.

Scenes like this have become so frequent during the present Congress, they seem almost to constitute a part of the regular proceedings of the House. The list of our departed associates is indeed a long one. Of the three hundred and twenty-five Representatives elected to the Forty-ninth Congress who a little more than one year ago appeared and answered to the first roll-call the seats of eleven have been vacated by the hand of death. Eleven of our number have died. With them "life's fitful fever is over." Their work on earth is accomplished, and they have passed beyond the reach of all human praise or blame.

In the death of John Arnot I can not but feel that I have sustained a personal loss. He was not only my colleague, but my neighbor and friend. We entered Congress at the same time, and the Congressional district he represented at the time of his death comprised a portion of the constituency I had the honor to represent in the Forty-eighth Congress. In the few remarks I may be able to offer at this time, I can not hope to do justice to his memory, yet were I to remain silent I should not only do violence to my own feelings, but disappoint many of my constituents who were his admirers and life-long friends.

John Arnot was born at Elmira, N. Y., March 11, 1831. He sprang from good stock, being the second son of the late John Arnot, a native of Perthshire, Scotland. In early life the father left his Scottish home to seek his fortune in the new world, and while a young man came to Elmira, then a small village in the southern tier of New York. He was a man of great business energy and financial ability, and did more to develop the resources of Southern New York and Northern Pennsylvania than any man of his time. The elder Arnot died several years ago leaving surviving him three sons, Stephen T., John, and Matthias. John was educated at a private school, and upon the death of his father became the head of the Chemung Canal Bank, one of the largest banking houses in the southern tier of New York. In early life he married Miss Hulit, daughter of the late Hon. Charles Hulit, a woman of culture and refinement, to whose beauty of character and patient courage he was largely indebted for his success in life.

That the people of the twenty-eighth district of New York in 1882 should select him to represent them in Congress was one of the most natural things in the world. For many years he had been its foremost citizen, popular with all classes, a man of great wealth but with a heart as big as his fortune. No man in all Southern New York was better or more favorably known. For thirty years he had been identified with the growth and prosperity of his beloved city, and there was no spot in all the world he loved so well. It was at Elmira he was born, and it was there all the busy years of his life had been spent. If he had loved her she had honored him in return. For three successive times he had been chosen president of the village, and after it had become a thriving and populous city he was frequently elected to the office of mayor.

John Arnot at the time of his death had entered upon his second term in Congress. So satisfactorily had he performed the duties of his high office and so greatly was he beloved his second nomination and election was practically without opposition. Though residing in a doubtful district, the Republican Congressional convention which met at Ithaca in the autumn of 1884 made him its candidate by unanimously indorsing his nomination. He made no claims to statesmanship. He was not a debater or in any sense a parliamentarian. I think his voice was never heard in the discussion of any public question upon this floor. Protracted debate wearied him, and he was always impatient for the call of the previous question. But for all this he was an able man, thoroughly posted upon all important questions, and his vote and influence always to be found on the right side.

John Arnot was a strong partisan, but he never permitted his party obligations to interfere with what he deemed to be a conscientious performance of official duty. Public life in Washington has many temptations, and there are few who have occupied high official positions here that have escaped the charge of corruption or venality in some form or other. Charges of this character are often made against public men without the slightest foundation; but no breath of detraction ever tarnished his good name or dimmed the luster of his public life. The honesty of his vote was never questioned; his integrity was unimpeachable and uncorruptible. As was said of the late lamented Haskel, one of our distinguished associates in the Forty-eighth Congress, "his lips were too white to tell a lie and his hands too pure to accept a bribe."

The twenty-eighth Congressional district of New York is one of the largest and most important in the State, rich in agricultural resources and extensive manufactures. Cornell University is within its boundaries. To fitly represent such a people and such a constituency its representative was required to be not only a man of ability, but he must correctly reflect the views of his district upon all great public questions, such as the tariff and the financial policy of the Government. Upon these questions Mr. Arnot was thoroughly informed and outspoken. Upon all such questions he desired not only to represent the views of his constituency, but to do what he deemed to be for the best interests of the American people. The last time we ever saw him alive was when he came here from a sick bed in Elmira to record his vote against the passage of a measure which in his judgment was hostile to the welfare of millions of our people.

Sir, I have spoken of Mr. Arnot's early life and his valuable public services. I now desire to speak briefly of him as a private citizen. Though he was many years my senior, I knew him intimately. Few public men were more highly esteemed or universally beloved. From his father he had inherited a large fortune, but it was neither his wealth nor his official position that endeared him to the hearts of the people. He was the manliest of men, the most delightful of companions, and the truest of friends. He was everywhere a welcome visitor, and always unassuming and considerate of the rights of others.

It is written, and upon occasions like this often said, and well said, that "an honest man is the noblest work of God." Such a man was our honored and beloved associate. In all the multifarious and complex dealings with his neighbors and fellow-men he was scrupulously honest and upright—his word as good and a little better than his bond.

In the summer of 1882 his name begun to be mentioned in connection with the nomination for Congress in his district, but official position or public life had no charms for him, and it was not until he had been twice put in nomination that he would consent to stand as a candidate. The contest was the hottest ever known in the district. He had for a competitor an able man, one of the best political speakers in the State, and with a splendid record as a soldier in the war of the rebellion; but to defeat such a candidate as John Arnot was an impossibility. There was scarcely a poor man or woman in the district he had not befriended at one time or another. If in destitution or overtaken with sudden misfortune they went to him for assistance, and they never returned empty-handed. How many sad hearts he made glad by his open-handed generosity no one ever knew but himself.

With him it was always more blessed to give than receive. If I were asked to name the chief characteristic of John Arnot, I should unhesitatingly say his unbounded liberality. The history of such a life is written in this one word, the sweetest and best word in all the ancient or modern languages. Why should such a man, so kind, so generous, so noble-hearted, not be permitted to live out the time allotted to men? Why should such a life, so valuable to society and the state, be thus shortened? I confess I am unable to comprehend.

On the 20th of last November, at his home, in Elmira, Mr. Arnot died. He had not been in good health for the past year. In the autumn of 1884 he met with an accident which well nigh proved fatal. From its effects he had never fully recovered. His death, though not wholly unexpected, was a great shock to the people of his district. They knew that he was sorely ill, and had been compelled to leave his official duties here in the middle of the session, but they hoped and prayed for his recovery. They longed to see him upon the street again. Said his distinguished competitor for the election to the Forty-eighth Congress, during his illness, "Although he defeated me for Congress I would take off my shoes and walk to Washington in my bare feet to restore him to health."

Colonel Baxter but expressed the feelings of hundreds of Mr. Arnot's constituents, but it was not to be. No human skill could bring him back to health. As the sun was illumining the eastern horizon on that beautiful November morn the heart of our beloved associate ceased to beat, and he sank to rest surrounded by those he loved best—his family.

In the death of John Arnot Southern New York lost its most valuable citizen, the State and Nation a faithful public servant, and every member of this House a genial and true friend. Greater men have lived and died, but none more justly esteemed or universally loved.

ADDRESS OF MR. HISCOCK.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I rise to pay a tribute of respect to John Arnot.

He was one of the most distinguished sons, one of the most influential citizens, of the State of New York.

He entered upon life surrounded by every advantage that may be possessed in this Republic. A member of a wealthy and distinguished family, it was not necessary for him to acquire, but only to utilize the means already at hand for his development. He was not forced to struggle for place and position, but hardly a less difficult task was before him, to hold that to which he was born. I have not said this to detract from his merits, but rather to illustrate them. Too often is it that such early advantages as those of Mr. Arnot are possessed at the expense of the energy, force of character, and personal habits necessary to success, and the development of a worthy character and manhood.

Mr. Arnot did not become weak because action and energy were unnecessary. He was not insensible to the claims of his neighbors, friends, his city, and the State upon him, though the honors they might bestow were unnecessary for his happiness or pleasure. He was ever kind to the poor, though he had never felt the pain of their necessities. He extended a helping hand to those struggling to position, although he had ever possessed it.

In the society and municipal affairs of his native town he always had a deep interest, though little likely to be personally affected by them.

Possessed of the means that would have established him in a broader and more conspicuous field, he chose rather to work out his life problem where it commenced; and in that section of our State—in respect to its area, population, wealth, and education, a State of itself—no man has more impressed himself or been held in higher respect or esteem while living, or, now that he is gone, in kinder and more respectful memory by her people.

He engaged in vast business enterprises (not because accumulation was necessary or for the sake of accumulating), and honesty and conscientiousness marked the transactions of his business career. He was a man of unquestioned integrity. In those official positions to which he was called at home his administration was characterized by a firm and steady purpose to accomplish the greatest possible good for his people. He was a public-spirited citizen, a warm friend, and open-handed in relieving the distressed.

As a Congressman we knew him here, and the highest compliment was paid him by his constituents. Though a member of the Democratic party he was elected from a Republican district, because they knew that party ties would not be strong enough to hold him from faithfully representing them in his votes; that party prejudice nor party necessities would swerve him from faithfully voicing their views and convictions. And, sir, their confidence was not misplaced. He never hesitated to balance the chances or weigh the effect upon himself; of strong convictions, he quickly responded to the expectations of those he represented.

Though belonging to a great political party he was not its slave, and would not surrender at its call his opinions and the interests of his district. But few of his type mark our Congressional history, and I bow my head in honor and reverence to him.

His virtues will long be remembered in Southern New York. He was a worthy representative of a great State, and his duty to her was never obscured, but he honestly, faithfully, and promptly discharged the trusts reposed in him. His associates in this House will remember him as genial and generous, a man of positiveness, always trustworthy and painstaking, and with a thorough comprehension of those questions he was called upon to deal with. We remark his absence, and appreciate that a strong man has gone from us.

ADDRESS OF MR. VAN EATON.

Mr. VAN EATON. Mr. Speaker, my acquaintance with our lost friend and brother began in this way: Soon after my election to the Forty-eighth Congress a valued friend and prominent citizen of Mississippi said to me one day that he had an old friend of his Yale College days, who, like myself, had been elected for a first term, whose acquaintance he thought I would find pleasant, and to whom he gave me a letter of introduction. That letter I handed to John Arnot at the Democratic caucus the Saturday night before the meeting of Congress. Though years had passed since they had met, he was greatly pleased to hear from his old friend, and much interested in all that related to his situation and prospects.

The acquaintance thus begun soon ripened into friendship, and I found him at first what he was ever, warm-hearted, genial, generous, and frank. He was eminently calculated to win and retain friends; he had great positiveness of character, and was very pronounced in his likes and dislikes. He despised shams, show, and pretense, while struggling merit, however lowly, found in him a fast and unfailing friend. His ideal of what man ought to be was very high, and I think it may be truthfully said his daily life and conduct squared fully with his ideal. While he loathed the arts of the quack, the trickster, and the demagogue, he had infinite faith in his kind and a living trust in the future.

This faith and trust colored all his life, and, coupled with his boundless generosity, made up one of the loveliest characters I have ever known. The needy and the suffering never appealed to him in vain, nor did he wait for appeals; he was ever seeking opportunities of doing good, which he always preferred to do "by stealth." On one occasion I spoke reprovingly to him of his indiscriminate acts of charity, and referred to the danger that much he gave might be unworthily bestowed. His reply was characteristic; it was to the effect that he might make some poor sorrowing sufferer glad, and he would take all the chances in that hope.

All that tended to make men and women better and happier found in him a firm and unwavering friend, not in words and professions, for of these he was chary, but in acts that would be performed and bear fruit while others were hesitating; and to-day while we pause in the great rush of the affairs of every-day life to pay what I am sure is a heartfelt tribute to his memory, the name is legion of those who have abundant cause to mourn his loss and lament the death of him who had been their friend in time of sorest need.

I know it is commonly said epitaphs and tributes of this kind study only to speak well of the dead, but in this case it is simply impossible to speak truthfully without speaking words of praise—words which, to those who did not know the subject of them, would appear extravagant panegyric. The character of our friend, which I am attempting so imperfectly to portray, he maintained in all the relations of life. He did not have one face for the world and another for those where that world was shut out, but he was the same to all.

As a legislator he was ever loyal and fearlessly true to what he believed to be right, and during his term here he made warm friends of his associates, and that without regard to party affiliations. In a word, he was a just, good, true man, and of him as much as of any man any of us have ever met I believe it may be truthfully written that he was

One who loved his fellow-men.

There are others who knew him longer and more intimately than I did, and for them it is more fitting to speak of him and his character more minutely and at greater length than I should do.

I may be permitted to say I loved him. He was my friend, as he was the friend of mankind, and I have sought this opportunity in all humbleness to drop a tear to his memory, to place a modest flower on his bier.

ADDRESS OF MR. FELIX CAMPBELL.

Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, it is, I think, no small testimonial to the character of a man of whom it can be truthfully said that the tributes to his memory are none the less genuine and sincere than those which greeted his pathway while yet among us. For human nature has a kindlier side when recalling the traits of those who have gone before, and blends with generous intent opinions tempered by the hand of sorrow. Yet I think it will be conceded that the thoughts and feelings associated with the man whose life and character we are considering to-night were as kind and fervent while he was still among us as those which followed him to the grave, and that no more beautiful tribute can be woven to his memory than is comprised in many of the utterances passed upon him before his days were numbered.

Mr. Arnot was a singularly plain man—plain in that he was direct, open, sincere, and without disguise, with an inherent force of character inherited from ancestors who were pioneers in the development of two great States, and whose qualities in no small degree gave vigor to the conservative and steady methods which characterize the soil from which he sprang. Amid the surroundings of his childhood were instilled principles and feelings which remained with him through life—a broad sense of right, marked freedom from prejudice and illiberality of thought, a power of friendship strong in grasp and beautiful in its loyalty, and, above all, a gentleness and serenity of heart which lent sunshine to his presence and welcome to his voice. He was of positive conviction and determined purpose, but with a simplicity of bearing and modesty of expression thoroughly in keeping with a nature foreign alike to obtrusive assertiveness and unseemly ostentation. Indeed, to many minds the simplicity of this character was its chief charm. It was candid in all its attributes and generous to the last.

Charles Lamb once said:

The greatest pleasure I know is to do a good action by stealth and have it found out by accident.

Mr. Arnot had no such thought. He cared not whether his good deeds were known or not; he gave because the giving made the recipient, and therefore himself, happy. His motives were high, and were born of a nature too deeply imbued with the spirit of the golden rule to permit an act in the doing of which was commingled any selfishness. The esteem in which he was held by his neighbors and the confidence which they reposed in him could be illustrated in no better way than in the honors which they thrust upon him.

When the now flourishing city of Elmira was but a village he was its honored head, and subsequently when chartered he was elected mayor, and re-elected so long as he was content to serve the people among whom he had lived all his life, and who looked to him as the sponsor of their trust and rectitude. It is four years since he was nominated for Congress by the Democrats of a district which contained a Republican majority of over 3,000. His personal following was so great that he was elected by a majority equal to that ordinarily given to the Republican candidate. In Congress he so discharged his duties that he was renominated by both of the political parties and re-elected without opposition.

It is unnecessary, I take it, Mr. Speaker, to dwell at length on the estimation in which he was held by his associates on this floor. To his labors here he brought the same direct methods of thought and the same just principles which characterized his business career, and his subsequent administration of the affairs of the city in which he lived. Careful and considerate, he commanded respect for the force and liberality of his views, as he appealed also to the warmer side of human nature by a radiance of heart which never lost its luster. For at least a year before he died his health was poor. He bore suffering with Christian fortitude, and as the shadows closed about him spoke of an abiding confidence in the wisdom of the Supreme Being, to whose summons we must all inevitably bow.

The good which this man did lives after him in the recollection of the many to whom he was a protector and a friend; it is written in the records of the charitable institutions to which he gave unstintingly of his means, and in the activity of the benevolent enterprises which he was pleased to stimulate and promote.

May the gentle and generous influences which his association engendered long survive; and in the heavenly sphere, where contention is no more, may rest and peace and happiness be his for all time.

ADDRESS OF MR. CURTIN.

Mr. CURTIN. Mr. Speaker, "Forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us" might be a rule of action; but "Love thy neighbor as thyself" is a still higher injunction, whether it comes from inspiration or drops from the lips of Divinity. I have never in my life known a man who followed that precept more rigidly than did John Arnot. I would not exalt our friend as a great orator or statesman. His voice was never heard within this Hall during his career except to vote; yet around that man there gathered more affectionate devotion than ever fixed itself upon any man that I have known since my presence in the Congress of the United States.

Mr. Speaker, when a man dies who never fulfilled much of the personal and relative duties of life, who never loved his neighbor as himself, who never gave of his means in open-handed charity, there is little thought of it; and there is just about as much thought of a man of that kind as there ought to be. But when a good man dies there is an aching void in the society in which he lived, in the neighborhood that he served, in the hearts of the friends to whom he was kind, and the poor who were the objects of his benevolence.

I would not speak of John Arnot other than as an honest man, equal to all his trusts—a man who had the confidence of the community in which he lived. When he died all that community was gathered at his funeral, and there was real sorrow, because a true friend of humanity had passed away. The rich who knew that he was an honest man, the poor whom he had sustained and supported, the representatives of the institutions of charity to which he had been liberal all his life followed him to the grave, and there was real sorrow. In that community there is to-day a void.

Mr. Speaker, a statesman may die, and for a time much may be said of him; of his eloquence, of his good works, and the like; but he is soon forgotten. There are plenty of statesmen in this country. I do not know but that there are more than there might be, certainly as many as are useful; and when one after another drops out their places are filled by others quite their peers and equals, and it is not, therefore, that a nation should mourn for the decease of a man. That is of little amount. It is in the course of human affairs, just as we stand constantly in these Halls and in the States.

But the great tribute to the memory of a man is the effect he has on the community in which he lived. I say no man has been in this Congress since my presence here and had the honor of a seat on this floor that had around him more devoted friends than John Arnot. I was so much his friend that I can scarcely speak of him without emotion. I am not equal to it. In all my life, and it is drawing to a close, I never knew a purer man. I never knew a kinder man; I never knew a man more constant in his friendship, more dignified in his resentment of wrong, or more willing to do his duty relative to his family and his community and to the state.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am not magnifying the man. I have said of him what I believe; and whilst I have had much to do with the affairs of the country, have been with men of all classes in my life, I know full well that of this man I am pronouncing no eulogy beyond that which is proper. I use no language which I do not think belongs to him and to his memory, and I offer to his memory the homage of my gratitude for the life of the man, and with the belief that he is happier now than we are to-day.

Mr. Speaker, we must fulfill our duties, for none can tell when the portals of this Hall will open and the grim monster will come in and seize another victim—to-night, to-morrow, who knows? We should be ready.

Mr. Speaker, all humanity is of one family. It is made up of the living and the dead, and those who go before us cast their benefactions upon us by their good works in life, and it is reserved for us when we are to follow to so dispose of our works to our country and our friends that when we go we too will leave an example to those who may come after us, and whilst that may be forgotten, and our names unknown as members of this august and distinguished body, but when our good names come to those who follow us in the circle of our friends where we live, they will feel the benefactions of a just and upright life. That is all John Arnot did. That, gentlemen, is all you can do. Just do it; your friends will be satisfied; your memory will be cherished, and the Almighty God will bless you.

ADDRESS OF MR. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL.

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, in accordance with a time-honored custom, this evening has been set apart by the House of Representatives to afford us an opportunity of testifying our regard for the memory of those whom the angel of death has summoned from our midst.

While perhaps there are men more widely known, yet there are few men whose lives, after the last page has been written, will bear as close a scrutiny as that of our friend and colleague, John Arnot, and show so little, if anything, to hide or excuse, so much to commend, reflect upon, and take pattern by. That life was spent in the half century and more of its lively continuance in one spot, Mr. Arnot's birthplace and the scene of his death being almost identical, something that in this shifting, moving, restless country of ours is uncommon and unusual, but the influence of that life was of wide extent, reaching far beyond the confined limits of his city, county, district, and State.

From his earliest childhood Mr. Arnot was one by himself, exhibiting those characteristics that marked his whole career; winning love and consideration in his youth that he held until his latest breath, and that remains and will remain attached to his memory forever. His family, one of the wealthiest and most prominent in the "southern tier" of New York, and, indeed, of the whole State, were identified with the old Whig party. He himself was always a Democrat, there being something in the principles of that party appealing to his generous nature that could never see any difference in his fellow-men, whatever their position or condition in life. He had the pleasurable satisfaction, long before the founder and head of the family died, of seeing them all come to his side in politics, and adopt the principles and sentiments that he had held from boyhood.

It might be said, and with truth, that Mr. Arnot's whole life had been a public one. In youth, after a good common-school education, and a brief season spent at Yale College, where, however, he did not graduate, he was called home in 1852 by his father to assist in the management of a very large estate, his own especial duties being connected with the conduct of the Chemung Canal Bank of Elmira, largely owned by his family. This has always been a strong and influential concern, but Mr. Arnot, by his advent in its management, added to its character an element seldom possessed by great moneyed concerns, that of a generosity toward the business interests of that whole region, a care and consideration for its credit, that in periods of distress and depression carried it into prosperous times with fewer disasters than occurred to any other section anywhere in the land.

It is a matter of record that in the distressful periods of mercantile depression that marked the years of 1857 and 1873, times that have but once or twice been paralleled in the business history of this country, the city of Elmira and the large region depending upon it, or upon which it depended, with the immense interests in coal, iron, and lumber, were entirely free from such disastrous failures as were frequent in other parts of the country.

This favorable state of affairs can be directly traceable to Mr. Arnot and the Chemung Canal Bank. The foundations of the bank were laid deep, and the whole region could and did lean upon it trustingly and confidingly. It is the simple truth that in those troublous times not one single man who went to Mr. Arnot for help was ever turned away empty-handed. His large nature grasped the whole monetary situation, and he was unwilling to have distress fall upon the humblest.

Of course when the tide turned and the sun of prosperity once more shone over the land, Mr. Arnot reaped largely where he had sown so plentifully. He deserved to do so. But not alone in money did the return come to him, and I am inclined to think, knowing what I do of him, that he valued that less than he did the abiding love and affection of the whole community that were equally the result of his thoughtfulness and generosity.

At another time, in indications of distress and unhappiness, Mr. Arnot's position and feelings were no less markedly shown. In those early days of the war, in the midst of distrust, suspicion, and apprehension, his whole personal influence and the monetary influence and assistance of the bank were thrown by him unhesitatingly and firmly on the side of the Union and the Government. Its funds were always ready and available in times of emergency and need in forwarding the means taken for the undivided preservation of the country.

Can it be wondered at, then, that whenever Mr. Arnot came before the people for an elective office he never had any real opposition? He served three terms as president of the board of trustees of the then village of Elmira in 1859, 1860, and 1864, being only twenty-eight years of age when chosen for the first time, and each time his election was practically unanimous. When Elmira was made a city, in 1864, he was elected its first mayor and served in the same capacity in 1870 and 1874. These were the only public offices he held until he was chosen a member of this body in 1882.

That election so peculiarly shows how Mr. Arnot was held in the estimation of his fellow-citizens that I can not help but refer to it particularly. His district was then composed of the counties of Chemung, Steuben, and Allegany. Allegany County, as every one knows, was the birthplace of the Republican party and it could always be counted upon for a majority on that side of at least 2,500. Steuben County sympathized strongly with its neighbor and was good for the same organization by at least 2,000 majority more. Chemung County, although naturally Democratic, was sometimes "mighty uncertain." Our friends, the Republicans, in the canvass had nominated a brilliant young lawyer who had a splendid war record and had made a State reputation by his campaign speeches.

As I have said, the struggle was a bitter one, but the result not, perhaps, astonishing. Mr. Arnot's majority in the district was upwards of 4,000, and he carried every election district in his own county but one, and every county in the district. In the next canvass, although the district was reconstructed, there was no nomination made against him, an event that attracted national attention.

I recall these things to our memories as the best commentary I can make upon the life and character of our friend, as showing that sometimes party ties and party lines are very weak when brought into contact with a strong personality that is backed by personal affection and based on gratitude.

We all know the record that Mr. Arnot made in this assembly. The qualities that bound to him so tenaciously the great body of his constituents endeared him to every member here who came in personal contact with him, and gave him among those who knew him only by reputation a place that it would be an envied pleasure for any one to occupy. He was the intimate and the associate of the best in this House, and therefore of the best in the land, and was speedily recognized as their equal and peer.

It might be expected and it will be found that the kindly feelings of Mr. Arnot, which in large business operations take the name of generosity, were in smaller things exhibited, in a way that we call charitable. His private gifts, from which he could never expect the slightest return, were enormous. It seemed impossible for him to turn any one away unsatisfied who asked for help. The extent of these givings was never in any sort measured until after his death, and the unobtrusiveness with which they were made may somewhat be estimated from an illustration with which I have become acquainted.

A very old and poverty-stricken couple, the husband more than eighty years of age and blind, and the wife closely approaching the same period of life, froze to death within a few days of Mr. Arnot's demise. He by the wayside in the midst of a severe snow-storm, while out seeking something to provide warmth and food, and she while awaiting in her home his return. It was then ascertained for the first time that for years they had been the constant and regular recipients of the bounty of our friend. The hand and good heart that had protected and provided for them had been too suddenly withdrawn. No one can tell into how many households where there was want, sickness, and the disabled distress entered, although it is to be hoped not in such terrible shape as this, when our friend died.

When such a heart as this stops beating is it any wonder that in the community that was blessed by its throbs genuine tears of sorrow flow and a void be made that can never be filled?

Mr. Arnot was too young a man to die, and, as is often the case, his career of usefulness and beauty was too brief. I say career of beauty, for there is nothing more beautiful to me than the life of such a man. Provided with abundant means, unobtrusively but nevertheless just as certainly, with a heart singularly free from envy, hatred, malice, and all uncharitableness, he went about doing good. Where there were tears and sorrow he caused smiles and gladness to come; oftentimes his hand made mourning less grievous, and by his tenderness caused the shadow of death to be less dark and gloomy. If the man who where one blade of grass grew caused two blades there to spring up deserves immortality, what can be said of him who chases away a tear and puts in its place a smile?

Mr. Arnot, springing from the sturdy Scotch stock, was too young to die, and fifteen years too short of the allotted years of man's existence. But a man even of exceptional ruggedness could not well have successfully withstood the physical shock that Mr. Arnot sustained two years ago last October. It will be remembered by the most of us that at that time, in opening the vault of his bank one morning, there was an explosion of gas therefrom, and he was thrown across the room fifteen feet or thereabouts, striking against the desk, and at the same time was severely burned about the head, face, and hands.

At this time he was a splendid specimen of physical manhood, but he never recovered from the shock. We who saw him during the first session of this Congress know how earnestly he tried to perform his duties, and know, too, how rapidly his constitution was being undermined. It was no surprise, therefore, although as great a grief when the information was received the latter part of last November that he had passed from among us and was no more.

We and other public bodies with which Mr. Arnot was connected may pass formal resolutions of respect, sympathy, and regret, and the world will wag on its old cold way as though the sod covered all that there was of our friend; there will be disaster and prosperity, shadow and sunshine, clouds and rainbows, as though he had never existed, but in that community where he lived and was loved for many a day and year there will be sincere mourning, and the mention of his name will for many a generation conjure up memories of deeds of kindness and thoughtfulness that mayhap may prompt others following in his footsteps to emulate his example and live the life that he lived. He can not be forgotten, and even if he is, it can not be said of him that he lived in vain, for he was an honorable and honest man.

ADDRESS OF MR. WILKINS.

Mr. WILKINS. Mr. Speaker, John Arnot was my friend. I became acquainted with him early in the first session of the Forty-eighth Congress.

The acquaintance formed thus early in our legislative careers ripened into a warm and generous friendship, which was never interrupted by a hasty word or an unpleasant incident.

And, sir, I can not permit this occasion to pass without joining with his colleagues, who knew him longer and better perhaps, without joining with them in paying a tender tribute to his memory.

His death occurred at his home in Elmira, N. Y., on Saturday morning, November 20, 1886, resulting doubtless from serious injuries he had sustained by an explosion of gas in the vault of the Chemung Canal Bank, of which he was the managing officer.

The injuries he then received proved nearly fatal at the time, but careful nursing and a robust constitution tided him over until the sunset of the year.

He never recovered from the shock he had received. When he returned to his seat in the first session of the Forty-ninth Congress, it was a subject of common remark he was not the same John Arnot as before. At times during this session he would rally and seem to grow stronger, encouraging the hope for his ultimate restoration to health, but for months prior to his death his rapidly failing strength gave unmistakable evidence the end was near.

John Arnot was born March 11, 1831, and was therefore nearly fifty-six years old at the time of his death. Fourteen years less than the three score and ten allotted to man by the psalmist were measured to him.

Cut down in the days of his ripening manhood, who can tell—with his immovable integrity, with his rare fidelity to every public trust, noble minded, true hearted—who can tell what he might not have attained in the councils of the nation had he been spared in the vigor of his manhood.

In his own home city, where he had lived all his life, among those who knew him from infancy to boyhood, from boyhood to manhood, generous, just, and kind-hearted, he could reach no higher place in their hearts.

Respected by all who knew him, venerated as a benefactor by hundreds who have been the recipients of his bounty, none loved him better than those who knew him best. The grief of his people was unmistakable.

Sir, it was not my good fortune to know John Arnot as he was known by his neighbors and friends, who have enjoyed his friendship for years, and the hospitalities of his home; but, sir, the press of the city of Elmira, irrespective of political affiliations, voice the sentiment of his people, before whom passed in review every act of his private life, and who sat in judgment upon every movement in his political career. They feelingly and eloquently bear witness to-day to the uprightness of his life and the sterling integrity of his character.

That his personal and public life merited the confidence of his people is evidenced by the fact that he could at any time have any office within the gift of the people of his city.

Sir, he was thrice elected president of the town of Elmira, and after it became a city he was chosen its first mayor, and was subsequently elected to the same office for two successive terms.

In 1882 he was nominated a candidate for Congress, but declined the proffered honor; a second convention was held a few days before the election. Yielding to the earnest solicitation of friends in all political parties he was again nominated, and notwithstanding a large adverse majority was overwhelming elected. Again in 1884 he was renominated by his party, indorsed by the opposition, and unanimously elected. He served his constituents in Congress with honor and distinction. His judgment was as sound as the impulses of his heart were generous.

John Arnot was a man of great kindness of heart; his charities were boundless. So much was this so that it was a proverb in his city to say, "As generous as John Arnot." And I hesitate to speak of these things, for I knew him so well that I know if he were to be consulted he would much rather this distinguishing virtue should be passed over in silence.

Everybody in want went to him; churches with depleted treasuries, societies, and individuals, and, as my friend from New York [Mr. MILLARD] said, "No deserving person came away empty-handed."

In Washington he was always doing some good and generous thing. I know personally of many of his charities; but no one ever knew half the good he did. Fortunately "his purse was as big as his heart."

He was a safe counselor, an incorruptible public servant, an able, conscientious Representative.

I do not know that I need say more of his public life than that he was faithful to every public trust. His judgment was sound, and his intellectual methods were based upon such personal experience as had brought success.

In his family relations the kindness he manifested everywhere was here amplified. His home was his refuge-place from the storm and worry of life, the abode of mutual self-sacrifice.

He leaves a wife, two sons, and a daughter. May God bless and comfort them in this their great bereavement and teach the children to emulate the virtues of a distinguished father!

The wife loses a faithful, loving husband; the children an affectionate, devoted father. The city of Elmira loses her foremost citizen; the country a safe, able, conscientious, and patriotic Representative.

Mr. MILLARD. I move the adoption of the resolutions.

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to.

EULOGIES ON HON. LEWIS BEACH.

Mr. VIELE. Mr. Speaker, I submit the resolutions I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That this House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Lewis Beach, a Representative in Congress from the State of New York.

Resolved, That all other business be suspended in order that fitting tributes of respect may be paid to his memory.

Resolved, That these resolutions be communicated to the family of Mr. Beach.

ADDRESS OF MR. VIELE.

Mr. VIELE. Mr. Speaker, these resolutions are offered for the consideration of the House in pursuance of an honored custom that permits us to perform the sad duty of respect for the memory of our lamented colleague. Mr. Beach was born in the city of New York on the 30th day of March, 1835. In that city his early boyhood was spent, and having accomplished the necessary preliminary education he entered the Yale Law School where he graduated in the year 1856, at the age of twenty-one, was admitted to the bar the same year, and commenced the practice of law in the city of his birth.

In 1861 he removed to the town of Cornwall, Orange County, New York, where he combined with the practice of law the, to him, genial pursuit of farming, following the example of many illustrious men. At the same period he devoted a portion of his time to literary pursuits, contributing many interesting and instructive articles to various periodicals and newspapers. In fact his mind was always active in matters connected with the varied interests of life, and he gave a great deal of time to the study of social problems, especially the laws of sanitation. He subsequently published a history of the town of Cornwall. Having shown a warm interest in public affairs he was elected a supervisor of the town in 1869, and filled other public positions.

In 1880 he was placed on the Presidential electoral ticket, but having received the nomination for Representative in Congress from the district in which he resided he resigned his place on the electoral ticket and was subsequently elected a member of the Forty-seventh Congress and was re-elected to the Forty-eighth and to the Forty-ninth Congresses. It was near the close of the first session of the Forty-ninth Congress that, after having devoted himself with untiring assiduity to his duties, he found his health impaired, and had he yielded in time to the solicitations of his family and friends he could probably, by taking a respite from his arduous labor, have recuperated his energies; but such was his conscientious devotion to his duty that he undertook to fight off the insidious approaches of disease until it was too late for him to rally from its effects. He had barely strength to return to his home when he was overtaken by the dread destroyer.

The peculiarity of Mr. Beach's character, and that which marked his whole career as a member of this House, was his steadfast adherence to his convictions of the right in spite of all opposition, from whatever source it came.

No argument, no inducement could persuade him to swerve for an instant from the course he had marked out for himself to pursue. No Representative could possibly be more devoted to the interests of his constituents.

No member of the House was more industrious and indefatigable in his efforts to fulfill all the duties of his position. The first in his seat and the last to leave it, he followed with assiduity every detail of legislation, scanned every measure, and watched every resolution.

But, above all things, he was almost painfully conscientious in regard to any delays in the transaction of the public business. He felt that those measures that related to the interests of the country at large should at all times take precedence over the claims of private individuals, no matter how just they might be. For his efforts in this respect he acquired the temporary ill-will of many who felt annoyed at the persistency with which he interposed objections to what he regarded as obstructions of the ordinary business of the House. And yet no one for a moment doubted the sincereity of his motives. To those who knew him best he did not hesitate to express the feelings of sorrow and regret at the pain and annoyance he knew that he caused to others by the discharge of what he considered his solemn duty to the country.

He was almost morbidly sensitive in regard to what he considered a loss of time in the transaction of the public business caused by obituary proceedings. He believed that it was the duty of Congress to set apart the Sabbath day for such exercises as being more appropriate to the occasion and as a great advantage to the public business. Having by a careful calculation ascertained that in one session alone nearly a month was lost by the motions and exercises incident to the death of deceased members, he offered a resolution that all such proceedings should take place on the Sabbath, and if his spirit is allowed to know what we are now doing it must rejoice that his death has in no manner impeded the course of legislation.

No man possessed a more kindly disposition, a warmer heart, or a more generous nature. To do an act of kindness was to him a source of the deepest pleasure, and he was always ready to go out of his way to serve another without feeling that he thereby conferred an obligation. He always had a pleasant word for any one, and never spoke a harsh word except in denunciation of an act of wrong or injustice. In his domestic relations he was beloved as a husband and father, and his whole time was divided between his devotion to his family and to his official duties. He knew no pleasure or enjoyment beyond them.

Among his immediate friends and neighbors Mr. Beach was warmly esteemed. The triple life that he led of farmer, lawyer, and legislator brought him into close relation with all classes of people, and all found in him a ready and willing counselor and friend. He possessed an intuitive knowledge of the wants of his constituents, and the humblest among them never sought his advice or assistance in vain. With these brief remarks, Mr. Speaker, I yield to others who may perhaps have known him longer, although I doubt that any more fully appreciated than myself the sterling qualities, both of mind and heart, that he possessed.

ADDRESS OF MR. BACON.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Speaker, I should fail entirely to express the sentiment of the district which Mr. Beach formerly represented in this body did I not take advantage of this opportunity and this time to bear public witness to the feeling of profound grief with which the announcement of Mr. Beach's untimely death was received throughout the whole section of country in which he lived. By his faithful services to the interests of his constituents Mr. Beach had elevated himself from the position of a newcomer in that country, an unknown man, to the place of the most prominent resident of his district.

His people had learned that no claim they could make upon his services was refused, that no man was too humble for him to recognize or help, and no man's position was such that it was possible for him to be awed or in any way disturbed by his denunciations.

It happened to him that he was selected to run upon the Democratic ticket for Representative in Congress from that district at a time when the district was in much disorder and there was no little difficulty in the Democratic party. He was elected, though almost at the time of his election unknown to a large portion of his constituents. By the time he was elected a second time, so faithful had he been to their interests, so attentive to their demands, that it was almost impossible to find a man willing to contest the election with him, and his election therefore from the first was a foregone conclusion.

Again, and contrary to all precedents in my district, contrary to all rules of parties since it has been a district, Mr. Beach was nominated a third time, and elected without serious opposition.

No one, sir, seemed to be in better health, no one in the fullest vigor of life could have rendered more faithful services to his people; and his death came as suddenly upon his constituents as it did unhappily to them.

I was present at his funeral at his modest but exceedingly beautiful home. I saw gathered there men from all portions of his district, men who lived upon the banks of the Hudson where it is almost as wide as a sea, and men who had their homes up in the mountains where the trees bridge across the streams that find their outlet through the capes of the Delaware. I saw there men who were mechanics and men who were merchants. I saw there bankers, brick-makers, and saw there also, above all, and perhaps more numerous than any other class, the veterans of the war, and I saw the evidence on all sides of a deep personal bereavement.

The district has had no more faithful servant; it can have no more beloved one at any time. It is not my place, it is not within my power to tell this House how he performed his public duty in this place. But I can not pass the opportunity of bearing to this House the message of sympathy in the grief which it feels from the persons whom Mr. Beach represented as a member upon this floor.

ADDRESS OF MR. HENDERSON, OF IOWA.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, it is a sad duty to pay tribute to the memory of a dead colleague. But this duty becomes lighter when one can speak without reserve and with candor touching the merits and the character of the departed Representative.

Though a sad duty on this occasion, still it is mingled with pleasure, since our deceased friend possessed those qualities of head and heart that invite the freest and fullest commendation from those who knew him.

I had the pleasure of knowing well Mr. Lewis Beach, of Cornwall, N. Y. Prior to the Forty-eighth Congress I did not know him personally, but during the long sessions of the Forty-eighth and Forty-ninth Congresses he and I, with our families, lived in the same house; and as members, so to speak, of a common household, and of the two Congresses named, I came to know him intimately.

I knew him as a representative of the people, as a neighbor, and as a friend. As a legislator he had some critics, but no enemies; some whom he annoyed, but none whom he angered. No man, perhaps, in the Forty-eighth and Forty-ninth Congresses interfered more with special legislation than did the deceased; but I am clear that this was always done with a conscientious desire to do what he conceived to be his duty to the people. He was an independent man and fearless, but his highest ambition seemed to be to bravely prevent an unnecessary and unwise expenditure of the public money.

He aspired in a marked degree to represent the agricultural and the laboring interests, and this aspiration had for its foundation sincerity and zeal. Such men are often called demagogues. Those who knew Mr. Beach best will acquit him of being that, and concede him sincerity, zeal, and courage in making the objections which so often thwarted us all in our efforts at legislation in this body.

There were few harder workers in the House of Representatives than Mr. Beach. He was always at his post of duty in the House; and hardly a night was he absent from his desk, working with the greatest patience and industry. He attended to the correspondence with his people, and sought in every way to meet their wishes in the thousand little details which so fully tax the strength and patience of a Representative of the present day.

His nature was kind and his disposition obliging; he was a man of clean purposes, clean thoughts, and clean life. His open nature, his unvarying good temper, his genial manners, made his presence always pleasant and welcome to his friends.

He was a strong partisan, but this was only visible in the field of political conflict, and at moments when brave men should assert their honest political convictions. He never needlessly obtruded his political views upon those differing from him in politics; and in the parlor, in the home, and in all his social relations he dropped the politician and became the genial, companionable gentleman, and the warm-hearted, obliging friend.

Though he was strong in his district, though a potent factor in this House, perhaps the highest compliment that I can pay to his memory is to say that his greatest strength was in his own home. He was fond of pleasure, but he wanted his family to share his pleasure with himself. He was fond of society, but it never had charms or strong attractions for him unless his own family formed a part of the social life. When not absolutely called away by his public duties his evenings were always spent with his family. His workshop was there; the family was his republic; and he sought to make each member of it independent and happy. He who will honestly speak plainly of the simple life of Mr. Beach, bringing out his every-day acts, and opening his whole life as God saw that life, will pay the highest and most eloquent tribute to his memory.

He has been missed by us all; his district will have difficulty in finding a more faithful Representative; and none but the stricken hearts will ever know how irreparable is the loss in his quiet home. An honest, earnest, active, kind, good man left us when Mr. Lewis Beach died.

[Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri, withholds his remarks for revision. [See Appendix.]

DEATH OF HON. ABRAHAM DOWDNEY ANNOUNCED.

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL. I offer the resolutions which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That in the death of the Hon. Abraham Dowdney, late a Representative of the twelfth Congressional district of the State of New York, that district and State have lost an able, conscientious and faithful servant and the country a safe, intelligent, and prudent legislator and a public-spirited and patriotic citizen.

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be directed to transmit a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect the House, at the conclusion of these ceremonies, do adjourn.

ADDRESS OF MR. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL.

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, the solemn duty of delivering a eulogy on the memory of a beloved friend, the Hon. Abraham Dowdney, is assigned me this evening. An office which I fear I can not fulfill with full credit to the name of the deceased.

In my humble way, I rise in my place to pay such tribute as I am able to the character of him whom I esteemed in life, and whose name I revere in death.

Since the assembling of the second session of the Forty-ninth Congress the messenger has called our fellow-member of the twelfth district of New York from the bosom of his family. Mr. Abraham Dowdney, whose career will be the subject of my brief remarks, was stricken down without warning or apprehension, on the evening of December 10, while entering the house of his sister in New York city. His death, though very sudden, found him not unprepared. He was identified with the Catholic Church, and devoted himself to his religious duties with characteristic earnestness and zealous devotion. It was only on the day previous to his death that he bade me good-bye on the floor of this House feeling in good health and cheer, and started for his home to attend to private matters needing his attention there.

The next morning I was apprised by telegram of his death. Thus "in the midst of life we are in death," and none of us upon our brief pilgrimage here below can lift the veil which closes out the "unknown realm" where the king and the serf meet upon an equal basis; from whence the Reaper cometh with his scythe to cut down his weeds and his flowers.

But one fact we all know, our hour must come, do what we may to ward off the mysterious touch which stills forever all joys, all sorrows, all strifes, all conflicts, all hopes, and all earthly aspirations. Amid this stern truth we realize a nameless comfort in the thought that everything passes away—the stars, the dust, and the granite rocks; but, as Bulwer beautifully expresses it,

> To rise upon some fairer shore,
> And bright in Heaven's jeweled crown
> To shine forever more.

Mr. Abraham Dowdney was born in Ireland, and came to this country when quite young. After finishing his studies in the public schools of New York he apprenticed himself to a plumber, and mastered his trade at the early age of nineteen years and embarked in business for himself. Impelled by duty to espouse the cause to which he adhered, he left his home and business to face the dangers, trials, and privations of war. Assuming the responsibilities devolving upon a captain, he proved an efficient, brave, and praiseworthy officer. Always scrupulously careful of the feelings of others, even at the sacrifice of his own feelings and interests, he made firm friends wherever fickle fate chanced to cast his lot, irrespective of the congeniality of clime or the people with whom he was thrown in contact.

A few years after his return from the army Mr. Dowdney was married to Miss Mary E. Crimmins, sister of John D. and Thomas E. Crimmins, the well-known contractors in New York city. She died eight years ago, leaving two interesting children; two years later he married Miss Lellie Purcell, daughter of Dr. John Purcell, formerly of the Seventh ward, New York city. The fruit of the second marriage was four boys. The widow and all the children survive him.

Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege and duty as the friend and associate of Mr. Dowdney to say he possessed the keenest sense of honor, which word, in its fullest acceptation, means the reflection of a man's own action shining like the sun in the face of all about him and from thence rebounding upon himself.

Hence, it is my sacred duty to publicly proclaim the virtue of him who in life was the builder of his own name, and who, upon being taken away by relentless death, left behind him a monument of deeds more lofty than the proudest gifts known to the books of heraldry.

In 1881 he was selected to become school trustee in the Nineteenth ward of the city of New York, which position he occupied in so satisfactory a manner as to give unanimous approval; unsought and unsolicited he was prevailed upon to accept the nomination and election to the Forty-ninth Congress.

He was the candidate of all factions, and was selected to harmonize the conflicting elements within his party.

Moulding his opinions into such shape as to give offense to no man, showing in every action the magnanimity of an expansive mind unshadowed by prejudice, guile, or malice, he attained the highest honors it was within the power of his constituents to bestow as an acknowledgment of his worth. The strife and turmoil of public life was uncongenial to him. His delicacy of feeling and extreme modesty suffered at every turn in conflict with selfish politicians who were more wordly wise than he, yet not more ardent in purpose. He therefore declined a renomination to the next Congress, hoping after this session to pursue the even tenor of home life in the midst of a happy family, when, suddenly, in the zenith of his manhood, God saw fit to close his career on earth.

Each man was sent into the world to do his own work; to bear his own burdens; to form his own principles; to maintain the laws of God, and respect the laws of man. Our deceased friend was not only a God-fearing man but a philanthropist. Truth is violated by falsehood, and it may be equally outraged by silence. So the highest praise that can be awarded in this case is simply to say he was an honest, upright, and just man.

Mr. Dowdney's life critically reviewed leaves no trace of uncertainty in the minds of those who knew him. He was prepared to be led by the shadowy hand into the presence of the never-erring Judge.

> All that breathe
> Will share thy destiny. The gay will laugh
> When thou art gone, the solemn brood of care
> Plod on, and each one as before will chase
> His favorite phantom; yet all these shall leave
> Their mirth and their employments, and shall come
> And make their bed with thee. As the long train
> Of ages glide away, the sons of men,
> The youth in life's green spring, and he who goes
> In the full strength of years, matron and maid,
> The speechless babe, and the gray-headed man—
> Shall one by one be gathered to thy side,
> By those, who in their turn shall follow them.

ADDRESS OF MR. VIELE.

Mr. VIELE. Mr. Speaker, the announcement of the sudden death of our lamented friend and associate, Abraham Dowdney, was received with feelings of utter incredulity; and even now it seems almost impossible to fully realize the fact that he has passed forever from the scenes of busy life, in which he took such an active part. He was in the very prime of life, and a wide field of usefulness and honor was opened out for him in the future. He was a type of many of our worthy fellow-citizens, who, born in a foreign land, came to this country in their boyhood, and growing up under the auspices of our free institutions, have given to the home of their adoption a love and allegiance so true and loyal as if it were their birth-place.

His life was one of uninterrupted activity; with earnest and untiring effort he trod the paths that lead through industry to competency, and yet not forgetful of his obligations as a citizen he gave a large portion of his time gratuitously to the duties of an office of the public schools. On the breaking out of the war he organized a company of soldiers, and at a large pecuniary sacrifice left his business and went into the field.

The loyalty to his country thus promptly shown was the key to his whole character, for he was loyal and true in every relation of life. Representing so far as individual possessions are concerned the wealthiest constituents in the United States, his personal feelings were nevertheless absorbed by the interests of the poor.

None among them ever appealed to him in vain. The circumstances which brought him to the House of Representatives were not of his seeking. He accepted the trust as he would perform any other duty, simply because he considered it his duty. He never sought or desired the applause of the multitude, nor did he expect to receive through popular plaudits any return for the services it might be in his power to render to his fellow-citizens. A man of innate modesty of character and demeanor, he felt much more the responsibilities involved in holding a public position than of any honor it might bring to him personally. All who remember him on this floor will recall his earnest attention to every subject under discussion.

His opinions were formed on a careful examination of the questions at issue, and they were generally characteristic of a mind that conscientiously weighed all the facts presented, and decided only after mature deliberation, and when his conclusions were once arrived at they were unalterable. Unobtrusive almost to diffidence, he had no false aspirations or selfish ambition, and yet no Representative possessed a warmer regard or a greater degree of confidence among his constituents than Mr. Dowdney had secured for himself through the sterling traits of character that belonged to him. No one could doubt this who saw the multitude that gathered in the great cathedral of the metropolis on the occasion of his obsequies.

The vast temple was filled with mourners, whose illy suppressed feelings testified to the sincerity of their sorrow. It was indeed an impressive scene. The softened rays of varied light that poured through the limned windows, the solemn requiem from the deep-toned organ, the priests in their robes of sanctity, the long procession of acolytes, the burning tapers, the incense from the golden censers, all gave testimony that the plain and unostentatious man was as much to the church as the highest and most conspicuous in the land. And that church received his remains with the deepest love and veneration, to be cherished and remembered in its daily intercessions so long as prayer shall be offered to the Throne of Grace and Mercy, and so shall we, his friends and associates, keep his memory green.

His generous nature and kindly disposition can not soon be forgotten. He has gone before, but is only waiting for us to follow, waiting where the angels wait, beside the shining river. May we all hope to leave behind us as kindly remembrances, unalloyed save by sorrow and regret.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, when these memorial services were appointed by the body, the Hon. Abram S. Hewitt, of New York, was a member of the House. Expecting to withdraw to another field of public labor before the arrival of the day set for these services, he asked and obtained permission to submit in writing at this time some remarks in honor of his late colleagues. Those remarks he has placed in my hands with the request that I should read them for him to-night. It is to me a gratification to comply with this request, not only out of deference to the wishes of Mr. Hewitt, but because of my very sincere respect for the memory of those whom his remarks commemorate.

ADDRESS OF HON. ABRAM S. HEWITT.

The fact that within a brief period three members of the New York delegation have been stricken down by death, and that they all belonged to the same political party, naturally arrests attention, and appeals to the imagination as something out of the usual course of nature. With the exception of Lewis Beach, no one of these members was a man of conspicuous mark in the House, but they were all greatly respected, and, so far as they were known, beloved by their immediate associates. In regard to Mr. Beach I shall have but little to say, because I am informed that his career and his services will be fully recounted by other members; but I do desire to say in regard to him that he was a thoroughly honest man, who not only had convictions but the courage of his convictions. He had carefully matured his opinions, and with him it was a matter of conscience to adhere to what he regarded as the very truth, without turning aside for expediency or temporary success. It has been thought that his range of statesmanship was too narrow for the broad field of duty spread out before the House, which is to determine the destinies of the country, and to deal with questions of the greatest interest of this and succeeding generations. I think that Mr. Beach, at times, found his principles in conflict with the immediate interests of his constituents. When he was thus embarrassed he never failed to make clear what he regarded as the sound view for the whole country, but he usually cast his vote so as to represent the wishes of the people who sent him here. This conflict of conviction with the duty which a Representative undoubtedly owes to his district often detracted from the weight which his opinions otherwise would have had with the House.

Again, he thought that the rules of the House were sufficient for the conduct of its business, and that the public interests would better be subserved by a rigid maintenance of the rules, with only such exceptions as were made necessary by unforseeable contingencies. His habit of objecting to the suspension of the rules was therefore founded upon an opinion deliberately formed, that in this way he could best serve his people and the country. Through his long term of service he was most diligent in his attendance on the House, and all would admit that he cast his vote and his influence from motives of the highest honor, so as to preserve a conscience void of offense.

The death of Mr. Arnot had been for some time expected by his friends and neighbors. He was a man of very different type from Mr. Beach, not less honorable and conscientious, but more inclined to accommodate himself to surrounding circumstances and the immediate demands of the hour. Although allied with the Democratic party, the tie which bound him to it was not of principle so much as a conviction that in the long run the Federal Government would be more economically and purely administered by the party which had finally given it shape and direction. The condition of his health naturally interfered with his regular attendance in the House, so that he may be said not to have possessed or exercised any substantial influence in reference to legislation. On critical questions dividing the parties he was as apt to be found on the one side as the other, and hence he came to be regarded not so much a partisan as a fair-minded man who could be relied upon to do what was expedient at the moment and trust to the future for a more permanent policy. His popularity in his own district was without limit, and it is a striking evidence of the personal regard in which he was held in this House that his presence at rare intervals diffused a genial sunshine, tending to remove the asperities of party differences and to bring about that era of good feeling which in the main has been so remarkably preserved in the Forty-ninth Congress. The memory of Mr. Arnot, as well as that of Mr. Beach, will therefore long be held in great respect by the members of this House who had learned to know their virtues, and who had found in them only those faults which are incident to the personal character of every member.

I propose to enter into the career of Mr. Dowdney a little more at length, because of the three members he was the least known to his associates in the House, and his modesty had kept him from showing the sterling qualities of mind and heart which made up a manly and admirable character. To me personally he was unknown until after his election to Congress. At first I was disposed to wonder why a man of such quiet and reserved temper and habits should have been selected for a position which requires force, courage, and intellect; but as I came to know him better, I saw that he possessed a solid stratum of sound sense which could be relied upon in every emergency to lead him to a sound decision and to honest action. I think his peculiarities of character were largely due to the influence of a good mother to whom he was passionately attached, and for whom his love and respect increased to the last hour of his life.

Abraham Dowdney was born in Youghal, in Ireland, the native place of his mother, in the year 1840. He was the son of an English sea captain, a man of some means and of great energy of character. His father's family had long lived at Topsham, in England, but his mother continued after her marriage to reside in Ireland, where the family were born. When he had reached the age of eight years his father met with an injury at sea, which resulted in his death within two weeks after being landed at the nearest port in England. There were four children of whom Abraham was the eldest. They remained in England for several months, in order to settle up the modest estate of the father, but when this was accomplished Mrs. Dowdney returned to Ireland, where the family resided until Abraham was thirteen years old. He passed the interval at school, where he seems to have been a diligent student, and to have shown, not only great fondness for books, but a general intelligence which made him a favorite with the officers of the garrison stationed at Youghal, so that they often made a companion of him in their little excursions, and doubtless gave him larger views of the world than he would otherwise have possessed. He lived in a romantic country, the home of the Desmonds, made famous by song and tradition, and filled with the scenes of many a hard-fought conflict. He had a taste for nature, and wandered among the hills at his own free will, developing that honest spirit which never deserted him through his subsequent career.

An illustration of his personal self-reliance is to be found in the fact that, having fallen from a tree and broken his arm, he went directly to the doctor and had it set and properly bound up, and then returned to his home, saying nothing to his mother as to what had happened, so that she first learned of the accident by the inquiries of others who knew how the boy must have suffered. At the age of twelve he calmly signified his intention of going to America to seek his fortune. His mother was quite willing to accommodate herself to his wishes, as she had a brother residing in New York, who was anxious that she should join him with her little family, and especially with the bright and intelligent lad who had not only made himself beloved by his companions but had shown a spirit of self-reliance in action and in argument which gained the respect of those who were older than he was, and who foresaw the success of the career upon which he was about to enter with an honest soul, a clear head, and with hands ready to turn themselves to any work that might come for them to do.

His self-reliance was made manifest even in the embarkation of his family at Liverpool, so that the captain remarked that if he had been twenty years of age he could not have shown more judgment in the management of the troublesome work of getting the family and their possessions on board the ship. On the voyage over, owing to a careless accident, a fire broke out on board the ship, which our little emigrant was the first to discover and to give the alarm. When help ultimately came, he was found stamping "for all he was worth" on a piece of tarpaulin which he had thrown over the flames. The captain and the officers were immensely gratified, praised him highly, and told him that he was, as he had proved himself to be, a brave boy.

This event made such an impression that the officers, when they came to New York on subsequent voyages, were in the habit of calling on the family and of ascertaining how their little protégé was making his way in the world. He was soon apprenticed to a plumber, but after working at the trade for about a year he became dissatisfied and told his mother that he was tired and disgusted with the business. She immediately made arrangements for his release, and for several months he seemed to have passed the time in studying the city and in solidifying his constitution, which doubtless had been weakened by rapid growth, accounting for a spirit of lassitude which induced him to give up his trade. Meanwhile he kept up his reading and employed his active mind in making inventions which may or may not have been of some value.

But the one conclusion at which he arrived was that if he had $300 in cash he could buy a house and lot in Harlem for his mother to live in. He got some employment in a lock factory in Brooklyn, but at last, with that tenacity of purpose which characterized him under all circumstances, he calmly decided to complete his apprenticeship at plumbing, at the old shop and with the old master, because, as he said, he had not finished the contract which he had made. As soon as his time was out, at the early age of seventeen years, he opened a shop for himself and prospered so well that he was able in a short time to furnish a little home in which he installed his mother, so that once more the household was reunited.

At this time, just as his business may be said to have been firmly established, the civil war broke out and appealed to all the enthusiasm and patriotism of his manly nature. He proceeded to raise a company, and was chosen its captain at the age of twenty-one years. He gave two years of diligent and honorable service, when he felt that his duty to his mother and her family required him to return to New York and resume his business. In this he was successful, enlarging it very rapidly by transactions in real estate and in building, which brought him fame as well as profit. He was school-trustee for four years, and for two years was chairman of the local board. In 1884 he was elected to Congress by an overwhelming majority, and thus we came to know him.

This is not the record of a very eventful life. In truth, hundreds of men of equal merit live and die without calling for any special eulogy. But there is enough in this life, simple as it was, for the purpose which we have in view. It was indeed a manly life, He asked and received no favors from fortune. As a boy he early realized that there was work for him to do, and he prepared himself for it as well as he could. He saw that the world was full of opportunity. He did not ask for charity, which now often it is the fashion to miscall justice, but he sought for himself an opportunity for a display of the energy and the intellect and the ambition that fired his soul. He did not seek success by falsehood, by fraud, or by the betrayal of trusts. He did not think that the accumulated wealth of the world belonged to him, but he did think that its existence offered an opportunity for him to acquire his fair share of it by work and brains. It is curious to observe how easy it seems to have been for him to get the means of livelihood, and to pass from one stage of fortune to another until he had acquired enough for all his wants and of those who were dear to him.

To accomplish this end he did not think it necessary to cause others to refrain from working; but, instead of putting obstacles in the way of honest labor, he was diligent to search out and open for himself and others the pathways of industry so that labor might have its just reward. The equitable distribution of wealth came easy to him, because he recognized the primal law that man must gain his living by the sweat of his brow and that upon himself chiefly depends whether his labors shall be crowned with success or failure. Such a man is in the nature of things a thorough gentleman. He knows no meanness, he seeks no sharp advantage, he strives to help and not to hurt his neighbor, he gives freely of his substance for good works, and he never is in doubt whether a promise once given is to be kept, "for though he promise to his loss he keeps his promise good."

I was very much interested in this simple, straightforward, and manly soul. We parted in the House for the last time with a shake of the hand, during which I said to him, "Dowdney, you are a good friend and a true man." I can add no higher testimony now to the feeling in which I hold his memory, and I can only say, "Good-bye, good friend! You will never be forgotten by those who sounded the length and breadth and depth of your noble soul!"

ADDRESS OF MR. SCRANTON.

Mr. SCRANTON. Sudden death has its terrors for the living, but is merciful to its victims. Such was the mortal end of our associate, Abraham Dowdney; stricken down in the prime of manhood, without warning, at the threshold of one of his family. The startling intelligence sent a shudder through this House on that chill morning early in December, for he had been with us only two days before apparently in robust health. But while his life work was cut off at the untimely age of forty-six years, its record is complete and admirable. The brave, honest, ambitious spirit of the Irish lad who landed on our shores at thirteen years of age developed into the successful business man, the patriotic and useful citizen, the honored Representative of the wealthiest constituency in the country.

Abraham Dowdney was emphatically a self-made man, and in his great success, financially, socially, and politically, illustrated conspicuously the possibilities of achievement to the American citizen. As proud as is the distinction of American citizenship to-day, each succeeding decade will add to its luster. The English-speaking people are to rule the world, and before the next century completes its first half a majority of the English-speaking people on earth will be included in the population of the United States. As great as are the possibilities of the present, as great as they have been in the past, they are to be greater for the American of the future. Whoever does not realize his ambition must look within himself for the controlling cause.

Mr. Dowdney gave to the land of his adoption his entire allegiance, and contributed more than one man's share to the prosperity of its industries and its material advancement. A widowed mother brought him here and carefully watched and trained his boyhood, placing him for several years in the public schools, subsequently apprenticing him to a trade. In his after life he was actively interested in educational matters, officially connected with the public schools of New York, and a patron of parochial schools. He early became master of his trade, was a large employer of workmen, and amassed great wealth.

The outbreak of the rebellion found Dowdney at the age of twenty prosperously started in business. With warm patriotic purpose, common to Irish-American citizens, he abandoned trade and enlisted for the war, organizing a company of which he was elected captain. His noble spirit was manifested in the following lines to his sister on November 20, 1862, from the headquarters of his regiment at Fort Halleck:

> Banish all fear from your mind. Think I am absent engaged in the cause of that country and Government that made a man of me, and which I feel in duty bound to stand by in her need.

Mr. Dowdney was possessed of enlarged and liberal views, and had the courage to enforce his convictions. He was a man of affairs, of keen perception, and excellent judgment. Eminently practical, always successful and influential, he was not charmed by the glamour of Congressional life, and early in his first session determined to leave it. He was of a retiring nature, and consequently well known to but few of our membership. He was a good counselor and a wise legislator, representing an unobtrusive, experienced business element, of which it were better for the country were Congress more largely composed. My committee duties brought me into close personal relations with him, and I am gratified to bear testimony to his worth and purity of character. During our brief acquaintance I conceived a high regard for him, and in his death I mourn the loss of a valued friend.

The legacy of such a life is better than silver and gold; it may well be emulated, not only by the family of boys he has left, but by the youth of the land. It may encourage the toiler in every pursuit to deserve success and to win it.

His last rites were solemnized with all the circumstance of his church in the grand cathedral of his adopted city. We paused at his bier while pleasant memories banished saddened thoughts, and then committed all that was mortal of Abraham Dowdney to the silent tomb. There may it peacefully rest until the end of time.

> We, too, will go over the river of rest,
> As the strong and the lovely before us have gone;
> Our sun will go down in the beautiful west,
> To rise in the glory that circles the Throne.
>
> Until then we are bound by our love and our faith
> To the saints who are walking in Paradise fair;
> They have passed beyond sight at the touching of death,
> But they live, like ourselves, in God's infinite care.

ADDRESS OF MR. WILLIAM S. HOLMAN.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I became acquainted with Mr. Beach soon after he entered Congress. He was a modest, unassuming gentleman, and during the earlier period of his Congressional experience not inclined to take a very active part in the current business of the House, but from the beginning he manifested a lively and earnest interest in all matters of legislation, and became at an early day one of the most vigilant and attentive of the members. It was soon apparent that Mr. Beach as a legislator was fully imbued with the principles in government common to the school of Democratic politicians of the earlier period of our political history.

It was apparent that he drew from the teachings of Jefferson his opinions as to the scope and domain of a republic. He believed that a plain and frugal government, securing protection and justice to all men, and leaving all else to the energy and unrestricted enterprise of the people, was the best political system that human intelligence could devise. Mr. Beach was severely consistent in his course as a legislator with this theory. His sympathies were uniformly with the people. He resisted with earnestness and fidelity every encroachment of corporate power or concentrated wealth on individual rights and sought to limit the expenditures of the Government to the actual requirements of the public service, leaving nothing for splendid embellishment or to tempt the cupidity of the unscrupulous.

Mr. Beach was a courteous, cheerful, and pleasant gentleman, devoted to his interesting family, fond of society, and anxious to enjoy friendly and pleasant relations with those around him, and in the main his relations with gentlemen in this Hall and on both sides of the House were cordial and pleasant. Yet these social qualities were made subordinate to his sense of public duty. He believed that any tendency in Congress to loose methods of legislation, especially in appropriations from the public treasury, was fatal to economy in government. He saw that much of our legislation, especially in private bills involving the expenditure of the public money, rested on the courtesy of unanimous consent, in which the objection of a single member seemed to be an act of personal discourtesy to the gentleman moving the measure.

He questioned this method of legislation as a surrender of the duties of the Representative to the demands of kindly relations between gentlemen in daily intercourse with each other, and at a later period in his service in this House sought to restore the methods of actual legislation. It must be admitted that in attempting to carry out his views in this respect Mr. Beach, while arousing antagonism on every hand, bore himself courteously, bravely, and well. No man ever attempted a reform, especially in methods of legislation, however supported by a sense of duty, without encountering unpleasant incidents, and at least, partial disappointments. Yet I am sure that Mr. Beach, who manifestly was never actuated by any other motive than a sense of public duty in his effort to secure legislative reform, when he left this Hall never to return left it with only kindly feelings in his heart toward all the members of this House, and I am sure that all gentlemen here, even those who questioned most his methods of legislative reform, recall to mind Lewis Beach with feelings of kindness, and concede to him integrity of purpose and the honor of a manly effort to carry his views of public duty into effect.

I knew Mr. Beach well during the period of his service in this Hall. He honored me with his confidence and often consulted with me on public measures. I can, therefore, speak with confidence of his character as illustrated by his career in Congress. While he was not a great leader or superior in statemanship he was a valuable member of this House. He was a fearless and manly representative of the people. No temptation could shake his integrity. He was animated by an earnest desire to promote the public good, and the record he made in this Hall will bear, for all time, enduring evidence of the fidelity and singleness of purpose with which he fulfilled the high duties of a representative of the people.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak a few words of another distinguished member of this House from the State of New York, John Arnot, jr., to commemorate whose memory also is the duty of this hour.

When Mr. Arnot first came into this Hall on the opening of the Forty-eighth Congress an incident occurred illustrative of his generous and kindly nature. In drawing seats, a subject of great interest to members, it was Mr. Arnot's good fortune to draw a seat I had long occupied, favorably located, while I was thrown into the extreme southwest corner of the Hall. Mr. Arnot refused to take my seat and quietly took possession, whether I was willing or not, of the remote seat I had been compelled to select. You, gentlemen, more than those unaccustomed to the Hall, will appreciate the unselfish generosity of this act.

But I soon learned that generous and kindly acts were common to Mr. Arnot. Many I could recall. I will mention one only. A poor boy, feeble and deformed, but bright and intelligent, was occasionally, by the kind permission of the officers of the House, allowed to sell newspapers at the doors and occasionally when it was raining to come inside of the corridors. This poor boy soon attracted the kindly attention of Mr. Arnot, who, learning something of the boy's history, gave him the handsome sum of $50, and laid the foundation of the boy's fortunes; the little fellow when speaking of Mr. Arnot can never keep the tears from his eyes.

Mr. Arnot, long in feeble health, was seldom able to take an active part in the business of the House; but as a good and just man, a kind and generous gentleman, a warm, courteous, and steadfast friend, Mr. Arnot will always be remembered with kindly affection by his associates in Congress.

The other honored citizen of New York, Mr. Dowdney, late a member on this floor, whose death is deplored and whose memory we seek to honor, was less known to me than either of the other gentlemen named. I only knew him as a useful and well-informed member of the House, a pleasant gentleman, faithful to his public duties. Others honored with a more intimate acquaintance with him have spoken his eulogy in fitting words.

ADDRESS OF MR. ADAMS.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. Mr. Speaker, it is befitting on an occasion like this, devoted to a commemoration of one of our dead colleagues, that those who knew him well should bear some testimony to his life and character.

It is not my purpose to pronounce any extended eulogy over Abraham Dowdney, but, from a knowledge derived from the close social relations of years, to say a few simple words expressive of my love and respect for the man whose tried worth, whose genial character, whose warm heart and generous friendship endeared him to all who knew him living, and forces us out of honest truth to pay tribute to his memory when dead.

Born in Ireland in 1840, coming to this country at the age of thirteen, he was obliged, after a few years attendance at the public schools, to embark on his life's voyage.

It is to be remarked that, with but a scant education, with no social or financial backing, with nothing but the resources of a strong purpose and an honest heart, he quickly won among his equals both name and position.

Though attached to the land of his birth, from which an oppressive and tyrannical policy had driven him, he always displayed the keenest interest in all that affected the honor or welfare of his adopted country.

When the tocsin of war that he believed affected the perpetuity and integrity of his adopted country sounded his ardent spirit led him to enlist in the cause of the Union and against slavery.

But twenty years old, he gave up a business but just established and organized Company C of the One hundred and thirty-second New York Volunteers, and as captain of that company he served with distinction during a period of three years, thus adding another to that list of gallant men who demonstrated at that time that although of foreign birth he could still be a patriotic American citizen, and, if needs be, to prove his patriotism, willingly risk his life.

He gave many evidences of this during the war, but the tenor of his thought may be gleaned from a single letter sent from the headquarters of his regiment at Fort Halleck, to his sister on November 30, 1862:

Banish all fear from your mind. Remember only that I am absent, engaged in the cause of that Government and country that has made a man of me, and in defense of which I feel in duty bound to stand in this her hour of need.

After an honorable discharge from the Army he left the scenes of blood and carnage and returned to the more peaceful and congenial pursuits of life.

As a contractor on a large scale, many of the largest public works in the city of New York bear testimony to his energy, skill, and success.

But not only did he achieve success as a contractor and builder, but as a man of rare financial ability; he made his mark as president of the Bull's Head Bank, which, after an unprecedented career of prosperity, became apparently hopelessly involved, and to extricate which institution from its troubles Mr. Dowdney was selected by the unanimous choice of directors and depositors.

He so managed its affairs as president that after an administration of two years he paid all depositors in full and netted to stockholders a fair proportion of their capital.

Untiring in his energy and desire to serve some good cause, he was scarcely free from his labors as bank president when he assumed the arduous duties of chairman of the board of trustees of the public schools of the Nineteenth ward, which position he held until his death.

Notwithstanding his large business interests, so impressed was he with the advantages of that education which his necessities had deprived him of, that without pay he devoted some of the best years of his life to reforming and elevating that system upon which so much of the honor and continued prosperity of our country depends.

All honor, then, to one who, amid the toils, the cares and the excitements of a season of struggle, would rescue the golden hours of the youth around him from debasing pleasures and more debasing sloth, and enable them to set to the world in a great crises of its moral condition the glorious example of intellectual courage and progress.

Such in brief was the public career of the representative of the twelfth Congressional district when he entered as a member of this House.

Is it to be wondered at that he was selected to represent one of the largest and by far the richest Congressional district of the United States?

Quiet and unobtrusive in his manner, with no ambition to shine as an orator, he came prepared to do his utmost in accomplishing whatever was demanded of him in promoting the glory and welfare of his country.

Though not well known by all the members his record as a member of this House, as observed from his punctual presence at all sessions of the House and committees, is a splendid one.

And though this House lost a most valued member, what a tribulation his death has been to his family and friends. We from New York who enjoyed the benefit of his sound judgment, his close social contact and generous friendship, have indeed a sad duty to perform. Never shall we forget his memory.

His gentle bearing, his warm friendship, his genial smile, and noble heart have produced on all who knew him feelings and memories that will defy the march of time.

Fortunately his life and character need no commemoration of mine, for Abraham Dowdney himself lived long enough to see both crowned with undisputed and unenvied honors.

His sad and sudden death brought to a close a successful life. To-day we bear tribute to the qualities of head and heart which, while living, made him a model husband, father, friend, and colleague, and which, now that he is dead, will cause us to sincerely mourn his loss and treasure his memory as we would the recollection of a beautiful dream.

The life has gone, the breath has fled,
And what has been no more shall be,
The well-known form, the welcome tread,
O where are they? And where is he?

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL. I now move the adoption of the pending resolutions.

The resolutions were unanimously adopted; and in accordance therewith the House (at 9 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) adjourned.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, February 9, 1887.

The Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D., offered the following prayer:

PRAYER.

Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who, according to His abundant mercy, hath begotten in us a living hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead to an inheritance incorruptible and undefiled, and that fadeth not away.

Let the words of our lips and the meditation of our hearts be acceptable in Thy sight, O Lord, our strength and our Redeemer. And as we turn away from the open grave with sympathizing hearts may we ever be filled with the spirit of Him who is touched with the feeling of our infirmities, the great Redeemer, the conqueror of death, who liveth and reigneth forever.

Inspire us, we pray Thee, with courage and with faith, as from day to day we meet the responsibilities and trials and temptations incident to this mortal life. Fill us ever with Thy Good Spirit, sanctifying Thy providences, comforting those who are in sorrow, O Thou judge of the widow and Thou father of the fatherless ones, enabling us to meet the duties of each day with courage, with fortitude, with faith, and with patience, so serving our generation that when we shall fall asleep we may enter upon the everlasting rest. Blot out all our transgressions, and grant us grace and peace. Our Father, who art in in heaven, hallowed be Thy name; Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done upon earth as it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread. Forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us. Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil; for Thine is the kingdom, the power, and the glory, for ever and ever. Amen.

THE JOURNAL.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

DEATH OF SENATOR LOGAN.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I ask leave to introduce resolutions at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois presents resolutions, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate, That as an additional mark of respect to the memory of John A. Logan, long a Senator from the State of Illinois, and a distinguished member of this body, business be now suspended, that the friends and associates of the deceased may pay fitting tribute to his public and private virtues.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be directed to communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and to furnish an engrossed copy of the same to the family of the deceased Senator.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, for the third time within a year we are called upon to raise our voices reverently in speaking of our dead. For the third time within a year death has laid his icy finger on a brother Senator and beckoned him to the unknown realms of eternity.

To-day we lay our tribute of love upon the tomb of Logan.

Suffering from a sense of personal loss too deep to find expression, I despair of being able to render adequate praise to his memory.

But yesterday, as it seems, he stood among us here in the full flush of robust manhood. A giant in strength and endurance, with a will of iron, and a constitution tough as the sturdy oak, he seemed to hold within his grasp more than the three score years and ten alloted to man. No one thought in the same moment of Logan and death—two conquerors who should come face to face, and the weaker yield to the stronger. It seemed as if Logan could not die. Yet, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, as it were, "God's finger touched him, and he slept."

Almost without warning he passed from strength to weakness; to death and decay, from life pulsating with vigor to dare and to do. The physician's skill, the loving, agonized, devotion of those most dear, his own invincible will, were alike powerless to resist the approach of the grim destroyer who stole upon him "as a thief in the night," and has given us another striking warning of the fact that "No king nor nation one moment can retard the appointed hour."

John Alexander Logan was born on a farm located in what is now the town of Murphysboro, in Jackson County, Illinois, on February 9, 1826. Had he lived until to-day, sixty-one years—eventful, glorious years—would have rested their burden as a crown upon his head. Life is a crucible into which we are thrown to be tried. How many but prove the presence of alloy so base that refining "seven times" can not purify. But here was a life generous, and noble, an open book from which friend and foe alike might read the character of the man.

General Logan was the eldest of a family of eleven children. His father, Dr. John Logan, was born in the north of Ireland of Scotch ancestry, and came to this country early in this century. He first settled in Maryland and then in Missouri, afterward moving to Illinois and locating in Jackson County. There he met and married Miss Elizabeth Jenkins, who was a native of North Carolina, but came of a Scotch family. Dr. Logan was a man of marked characteristics, and a physician and surgeon of unusual skill.

He was noted for his integrity, his sturdy independence of character, his devotion to his friends, and his recognition of the equality of all men who were honest and upright, without regard to their social position. His wife was a woman of determined courage, strong in her prejudices, who never swerved from the path she had once marked out for herself. The characteristics of the father and mother were conspicuously combined in the son, who owed his success in life largely to the possession of the traits most prominent in the character of both his father and his mother.

The professional services of Dr. Logan were in such demand that he had little time to devote to the care of his farm or the education of his children, but he was an educated and studious man, and gave his children the best educational facilities he could command.

In those days money and schools were scarce in that new country, and the education of the youth was not considered so essential as it is to-day, but Dr. Logan managed to secure the services of a tutor who resided in the family and trained the children in the branches not taught in the schools of that day, including the rudiments of Greek and Latin. While young Logan failed to receive such a classical training as a college gives, he was eager and quick to learn, and made the most of his opportunities.

Reared upon a farm under such circumstances, his character was unconsciously molded and formed by surroundings similar to those which gave to Lincoln that strength and steadfastness which served him so well in later years. The men with whom young Logan came in contact during his boyhood were generally without the refinements of life, but they were rugged, sturdy, and self-reliant, of powerful physique and healthy intellects. His association with these vigorous, hardy, pioneers of civilization imbued the young man with unconquerable energy, indomitable will, and a stern sense of honor which through his manhood to the end of his life made him a master spirit among men.

At the age of sixteen he was sent to Shiloh College and subsequently added to the education obtained there whatever he could glean from the books within his reach. When barely of age he made his entrance into manhood upon the field of battle.

When the Mexican war broke out young Logan plunged into it with all the fire and enthusiasm of his nature, enlisting in the First Illinois Volunteer Infantry. Though then but twenty years of age, he served with distinction, and by the end of the war had become quartermaster of his regiment. This beginning of his career might have been to him an omen of future fame to be won on fields of blood. On returning home he was received as a student in the law office of Alexander M. Jenkins, his mother's brother, but, being an ardent admirer of Stephen A. Douglas, Logan soon became fascinated with political life, and in less than a year was elected clerk of Jackson County.

In 1850 he became a student in the law department of Louisville University, graduating in the spring of 1851, and entering upon the practice of law at Murphysboro in partnership with his uncle. In 1852 he was elected to the State Legislature, and soon afterwards to the office of prosecuting attorney for the judicial district in which he resided. In this position he was called upon to prosecute some remarkable criminal cases, and it is a notable fact that he secured a conviction in all the cases which he prosecuted and tried.

On the 27th of November 1855 he was married to Miss Mary S. Cunningham, a daughter of Capt. J. M. Cunningham, and established his home and law office in Benton, in the adjoining county of Franklin. In 1856 he was again elected to the State Legislature, and it was during the session of 1857 that it became my privilege to become acquainted with this remarkable man, who at that time demonstrated his power as a leader.

In 1858 Mr. Logan was elected to represent his district in Congress, and from the time he took his seat in the House of Representatives his rise was rapid and his public career became known to the country.

He had not been cradled in luxury. Fortune had not been especially kind to him, but he had been bred honest to the core, was incapable of meanness, and among the strong men of that Congress, the young, resolute, courageous Representative from Illinois held his own. He was again elected to Congress in 1860 when Abraham Lincoln was elected President. Logan was elected as a Douglas Democrat, and had advocated the election of Douglas to the Presidency with all his power before the people. When Lincoln was elected and mutterings of rebellion and whisperings of secession were heard, the fire of patriotism began to burn in his breast, and on the floor of the House of Representatives, on the 5th of February, 1861, before the inauguration of President Lincoln, he defined his position upon the burning question of the hour in the following unmistakable terms:

I have been taught—

He said—

that the preservation of this glorious Union, with its broad flag waving over us as the shield of our protection on land and sea, is paramount to all parties and platforms that ever have existed or ever can exist. I would to-day, if I had the power, sink my own party and every other one, with all their platforms, into the vortex of ruin, without heaving a sigh or shedding a tear, to save the Union, or even to stay the revolution where it is.

What a declaration of unselfish patriotism! Placing party and platforms under his feet, he was first of all for the Union and the flag, which were dearer than all else to him. With the flash of the first gun which thundered its doom upon Sumter he was up and in arms. Consecrating all the energy of his ardent nature to the cause of the Union, he left his seat in Congress, saying he could best serve his country in the field. Falling into the ranks of the Union Army he took his part as a civilian volunteer in the first battle of Bull Run.

To describe the part he took in the late war after he raised the Thirty-first Illinois Regiment and took the field would be to recite the history of the war itself—a story impressed as in letters of fire upon the memory of the American people. The record of his bravery at Belmont; of his gallant charge at Fort Donelson, where, as a colonel, he was dangerously wounded; of his service as major-general commanding the Army of the Tennessee; of the memorable siege of Vicksburg, when with the great leader of the Union armies he stood knocking at the door of that invincible stronghold; of his service with the gallant Sherman in his famous "march to the sea"—all are written on the pages of history to lend undying luster to the name of Logan.

It is said that poets are born, not made. So it may be truly said that General Logan was a natural soldier. Every instinct within him was inspired with fervid love of his country. His figure was massive, his shoulders broad, his presence commanding, with his swarthy face and coal-black hair, and "eye like Mars to threaten or command," he was every inch a warrior. The soldiers of the late war believed in him as a leader in the field, and those of that great Union army who survive him mourn his loss to-day as their nearest, most earnest, ablest, and most devoted friend.

During the war General Logan rose by regular promotion through every grade from colonel to the highest rank, save that of lieutenant-general, that the nation could bestow in recognition of his bravery and great capacity as an officer. How appropriately the words which, on April 6, 1870, he pronounced in eulogy of that other great soldier, General George H. Thomas, can now be applied to himself. On that occasion General Logan said of General Thomas, as we can now say of him:

He has gone. Grief sits visibly on every soldier's brow and pervades every loyal heart of the nation. His noble form lies low ready to be committed to its kindred dust. Earth never received into her bosom a manlier form or a nobler breast. The halo of his deeds and brilliancy of his achievements may almost be said to illuminate the grave into which his body descends, and the fragrance of his acts of kindness perfumes his sepulchre. He has gone from our sight, but not from our hearts and our memory; he must live on embalmed by our love and garlanded with our affection, his name growing brighter and brighter as time rolls on. The cold marble bears in mockery a name forgotten but for the letters chiseled on the icy slab. It can not be so with the name of General George Henry Thomas, which is chiseled on the tablets of too many hearts to need the aid of marble or bronze to perpetuate it.

Is it enough to say of General Logan that he was the greatest volunteer general of the Union army? By no means. A quarter of a century and more has passed since that terrible struggle, and civil honors were won by him during that period as rapidly as military ones were won during the war. When gentle peace, which "hath her victories no less renown'd than those of war," returned, he was at once called to again take his place in the councils of the nation. Twice elected to the House of Representatives since the war and three times chosen by the Legislature of his State to represent it in the Senate, it may be truly said that General Logan spent his life in the active service of his country. He was a man of high honor and singular boldness and frankness of character. He made no concealments. He fought always openly and above-board. His integrity was beyond the whisper of suspicion.

He was aggressive and impulsive with the courage of his convictions. Eager to do, tireless in effort, persistent in purpose, by his indomitable will he made each obstacle in his path a stepping-stone to greater things. The more he was antagonized the stronger he became, and, as in battle, he pushed on until his enemies gave way and left him master of the situation. Goethe has said that "he who is firm in will molds the world to himself;" and so it could be said of Logan, who had become recognized as one of the most prominent factors in national affairs.

As a Senator he devoted himself steadfastly to the duties which crowd a Senatorial life, never turning a deaf ear to the appeals of his constituents, or from whatever quarter of the country they came. He was a ready speaker, full of energy and forceful in manner, and when aroused by debate and the importance of the subject he would pour forth thoughts that breathe and words that burn into the ears of his hearers.

Many passages may be selected from General Logan's writings and addresses which exhibit his ardent patriotism and love for the Union. In a letter to his friend, General Haynie, a gallant Union soldier, on December 31, 1861, he said:

I am for the Union, and for maintaining it, if such a thing is possible, and am uncompromisingly opposed to any man or set of men that countenance disunion, with its horrible consequences. There is no sacrifice I would not make for it. I have no opinions that I am so wedded to that I would not modify them in any way, consistent with the honor of my constituents and myself, to give peace to the country.

Again he said, in an address to the people of Chicago on August 10, 1863, while fresh from the field of battle:

I do not propose to discuss party politics or questions with a view to the advancement of any party organization, but desire only to speak to you with reference to the troubles that now environ the country and threaten the perpetuity of the Government. * * * In this war I know no party. * * * Although I have always been a Democrat, and cherish the doctrines of that old and honored party, yet in this contest I was for any man, let him belong to whatever party he might, who was for his country.

Being criticised for being an Abolitionist, General Logan said:

If it makes a man an Abolitionist to love his country, then I love my country, and am willing to live for it and willing to die for it.

General Logan's devotion to his country was the moving impulse of his heart, and he was willing, from the hour in which he saw the danger threatening the perpetuity of the Union, to give his life to save it. When the war was over and the integrity of the Union had been maintained, when he had laid aside his victorious sword, he used the following language in a speech at Louisville, Ky., on July 21, 1865:

Peace has come at last. * * * The dark clouds of war that have been piling in terrific grandeur along the southern horizon for four long years, and ever and anon bursting with fatal and fearful fury upon the land, have at last, Heaven be praised, rolled away. The trumpet clangor and the cannon's roar resound no longer from embattled plains. God grant that they never may again; that it may be as literally true of the soldiers who survive as it is bound to be of those who "sleep their sleep" that they have all "fought their last battle."

Like his great and true friend, General Grant, while General Logan was a great soldier, he did not love war, but with a heart full of human sympathy he loved peace and preferred her victories to those of war. Logan had a tender and sympathetic nature. His heart was full of sorrow for the sick, the wounded, and the dying soldiers who were constantly around him. He regarded the institution of slavery as the cause of the war and all its attendant distress, and in the address at Louisville already referred to he used these graphic words:

Oh, that I had the power to bring together all the slaveholders of the land, and have them look on in solemn silence while the cripples, the widows, and orphans that have been made by this war could pass before them in grand review and tell their tales of misery and woe that slavery has brought upon them. Were their hearts not made of stone they would melt while gazing at such a scene, and with one voice they must cry out: "Let the land be at once rid of the curse that has caused such a dreadful scene as this."

General Logan's earnest feelings in regard to those who fought to preserve the Union are illustrated by a statement made in a speech in the other wing of this Capitol in 1867, when, in speaking on the subject of the reconstruction of the States that had been in rebellion, he said:

God forbid that the day shall ever dawn upon this Republic when the patriots whose patriotism won them crutches and wooden limbs shall have apologies and explanations to make for their public conduct!

Mr. President, I make these few quotations from the many striking passages that illuminate General Logan's addresses in Congress and to the people to show how earnest and undivided was his devotion to his country, his love for his companions in arms, and his opposition to slavery as the cause of the war.

General Logan was the idol of the volunteer soldiers of the late war, and since the war closed no man in the nation has been so universally recognized by them as a friend upon whom they could confidently rely for help as he was. His heart went out to them and theirs to him. On one occasion he said:

My consent can never be commanded to ignore the claims that I feel the gallant dead who fell fighting under our flag have upon my devotion to their fame while I live.

The death of no man since the war has been so sorrowfully mourned by the volunteer soldiery of the Union as has been the death of General Logan. The soldier of that grand army mourns his loss to-day as "one who will not be comforted."

You will call to mind, Mr. President, General Logan's speeches on education, on the needs of the Army, his defense of General Grant, and his arraignment of General Fitz John Porter. These constitute an important part of the records of Senatorial debates, and should be classed among the ablest and most exhaustive speeches ever made in the Senate. As a political leader General Logan was conspicuously successful. He was naturally in the front rank, whether on the field of battle or in political contests. Living in an era when corruption was not uncommon, when strong men of both parties sometimes stood aghast and saw their reputations blasted by public exposure, he remained throughout his long public career above suspicion.

Wealth could not tempt him to soil his spotless name. He never used the opportunities of his official position as a means of obtaining gold. He died as he had lived, a poor man.

Throughout his long and conspicuous public career he came many times before the people, but there never was a ghost of dishonor in his past to rise up and cry upon him shame. May his children "rejoice and be glad" in the example of a father of whom the whole nation could rise up and say, "There was an honest man."

But let us not indulge in adulation. General Logan was not a perfect man. Faults had he, "child of Adam's stem," but they were small, and served by comparison but to enhance his virtues. His prejudices were sometimes narrow, but he was never a hypocrite. He never professed to be what he was not.

He sometimes erred, for he was possessed of like passions with other men. He sometimes alienated a friend, as every strong, independent man must in the course of a public career. He had his bitter enemies, but, in the words of a revered and venerable friend of General Logan's, ex-Senator Simon Cameron, "a man who makes no enemies is never a positive force." Logan was a positive force. He took his position on questions as they came up, and was always ready to defend it with all his power.

Mr. President, few men in American history have left so positive an impress on the public mind and so glorious a record to be known and read of all men as has General Logan. The pen of the historian can not fail to write the name of Logan as one prominently identified with the great movements and measures which have saved the Union and made the nation free and great and glorious within the last thirty years.

Like Lincoln, his heart and hand were ever for the people. He came up from the ranks of the people, believed in the purity and integrity of the masses, and was always ready and eager to speak for them. He was a true republican and believed firmly in republican government. He despised tyranny in all its forms wherever he found it. He was always true to his convictions and to his friends, and no power or influence could induce him to forsake either.

His sturdy character has been so often demonstrated upon this floor and in his work and in his powerful speeches in every part of the country, always showing his most earnest devotion to the Union, his never flagging zeal in behalf of his comrades-in-arms, his love of liberty and human equality, his belief in universal education as in the interest of the happiness of the people and of the perpetuity of republican government, his adherence at all times to his convictions of duty, his unfaltering determination to stand by his friends—that it seems needless for me to dwell upon it longer. In his remarks in this Senate upon an occasion similar to this, in speaking of a once distinguished member of this body, the lamented Chandler, General Logan used the following language:

> 'Tis true the grave in its silence gives forth no voice nor whispers of the morrow, but there is a voice borne upon the lips of the morning zephyrs that lets fall a whisper, quickening the heart with a knowledge that there is an abode beyond the tomb. Sir, our lamps are burning now, some more brightly than others; some shed their light from the mountain's top, others from the lowly vales; but let us so trim them that they may all burn with equal brilliancy when relighted in our mansions beyond the mysterious river.
> I fondly hope, sir, that there we will again meet our departed friend.

Mr. President, he who uttered those tender words, thus giving expression to his faith in the hereafter and to his love of his departed friend, has gone to join him in the mansions beyond the mysterious river, may we not trust in that better land where there is no more pain nor suffering nor sorrow, but in the mansions of eternal bliss.

As time passes and the men who did the most in the late terrible civil war pass rapidly away one by one we have the consolation of knowing that they leave to us a united country, with the Union of the States restored and liberty secured to all the people, to be transmiteed by us to those who come after as a glorious inheritance.

Death is a good Samaritan, throwing the mantle of charity over the faults of men, burying in oblivion the sins of the flesh, and bidding their good deeds "live after them."

And now we stand as at an open grave to say our last farewell. Here was a man who could ill be spared to country, friends, or home. "Our life is scarce the twinkling of a star in God's eternal day," yet we bow in resignation to the divine decree when the summons comes to one weary with the burden of years and with labors ended. But to see the darkness fall at noon-time, the sun go down while we look for a brighter day, is a mystery of Providence too deep for human comprehension.

When death claims the strong and great, those to whom we look for help and strength, we ask why, why was he taken, and can not understand the dealings of an Infinite Wisdom. As the autumn leaves drop and enrich the soil, so are the great men of our nation falling by the way, leaving a golden heritage of honored names and fame to generations yet unborn.

Our friend and brother has crossed to the other shore to join the immortal throng. He has left a desolate hearthstone, a loved companion, prostrate in her grief, refusing to be comforted. His conflicts are over. He is at peace "where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest."

> In halls of state he stood for many years,
> Like fabled knight, his visage all aglow!
> Receiving, giving sternly, blow for blow!
> Champion of right! But from eternity's far shore
> Thy spirit will return to join the strife no more.
> Rest, soldier-statesman, rest; thy troubled life is o'er.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, this is not an unmeaning ceremonial. The Senate has not paused in its great labors and arrested its important service to the people of the United States for the purpose merely of indulging in passing eulogistic remarks upon the character of our brother who has left us; but we consider that it is due not to him alone but to this whole country that a man who was so marked in his grand individuality and splendid characteristics should be spoken of here, and that we should contribute what we are able to do to enhance the value of his memory for the sake of posterity as well as for the present generation of men.

The pathetic remarks that fell from his lips which were quoted by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] at the time that we were holding obsequies over the departed Senator from Michigan, Mr. Chandler, bring forcibly before my mind, as I have no doubt it does before the mind of the Senate, the question, whence has gone this man so powerfully clothed with every element of strength, goodness and greatness of character? Has the Divine hand that fashioned a man like this and made it possible for him to build himself up through the toils and labors and vicissitudes of life found no use for him in the great economy of His providence, since that sad and startling moment when he was taken, yes, snatched from our midst? I think, sir, of John A. Logan to-day as a powerful factor in the hands of his Creator, still working out diligently and faithfully the good that he seemed so well designed to accomplish. I do not regard him as lost or passed into a mythical land where there is no longer use for the valuable services which he has been so conspicuous in rendering to his race while he lived among us. I think of him as a living, moving energy, still useful in the great purposes of the Divine economy.

I do not come here, Mr. President, to pronounce about a man so sincere as he was any word of eulogy or praise in which there will be a coloring of insincerity. For twenty-five years I was opposed to almost every measure of public policy that he espoused. It so turned out that in the first battle of the war and in the latest battle in which I participated we were confronted with each other. It so turned out that having our political principles cast much in the same mold in early life, we separated, as did the sections of this great country, upon questions that it appears could not be settled or reconciled otherwise than by war.

After we had again come in the presence of each other in this Senate, he, with an absolute sincerity of purpose, which I claim for myself also, took the opposite view from that which I held of most of the great questions that have engaged the attention of this body since that time. But in all that he did and in all that he said John A. Logan was a thoroughly sincere and a resolutely upright man.

The differences of opinion that exist between men in this country, where freedom of speech and of debate are sanctioned and encouraged by the Constitution and by the traditions of our history, develop men who oppose each other with great strength and power frequently, and develop even in ordinary men a strength of will and purpose that is honorable to them and beneficial to the people. Our divisions of sentiment and opinion are altogether natural and indispensable. They merely mean that the questions with which we have to deal are debatable and often doubtful, and that they must finally be settled in this body, as in all other legislative bodies in this country, by the power of a majority, the minority always yielding to the majority as being right in substance and in effect. So that when I controvert with a man of the strength of Logan's will and a man of his ability, his learning, his enterprise, and his genius, for he possessed all in a large degree, I feel that the combats in which we engage are those in which men on either side may be absolutely sincere.

John A. Logan was, more than almost any man in my remembrance, the typical American of the Western States. He was born and reared in the West, that country of marvelous strength, power, and progress. All of his efforts were given to the service first of that particular section and afterwards to the more enlarged service of the general country. But Logan seemed to be the embodiment of the spirit and power of that wonderful West, which has grown and strengthened in our country as no other section of this Union ever has within a given time. The energy of his nature, the fortitude, the persistence, the industry, the courage with which he encountered every question that arose seemed merely to exemplify the pervading spirit of the western part of the United States, and he will go down to posterity, not because we describe him in our speeches here to-day, but because he has described himself in every act of his life as a man perfectly understood and the recognized exemplar of one of the strongest and most splendid types of American character.

I confess, Mr. President, that I feel a certain joy in the power of our country to develop men like this. I think it is greatly to the credit of the country that a man can be brought from the bosom of the people and lifted into the highest stations of place and power without, in the slightest degree, losing his identity with them; reflecting here upon the floor of the Senate what they feel in their hearts and what they believe and teach in their homes, keeping up a perpetual bond of affectionate union between those highest in authority in this land and those who are in the retirement of private life.

Institutions that can produce men and results like these are worthy of preservation, and no man more regrets than I do that there was ever one moment of time in the history of this country when it seemed to be necessary for the preservation of rights, that a large portion of the people of this country believed to be sacred, that these institutions of ours should have been put under a threat. That time has passed away, and with it all the rancors of the occasion. You can not point out in the history of any race of people that degree of mutual magnanimity and forbearance that has characterized the people of this great country in returning to unite hands and hearts in the maintenance of its institutions, in the elevation of its honor, and in the perfection of its glory.

In these efforts men who thought and felt as I have thought and felt always gladly stretch forth the hand of honest brotherhood to men like John A. Logan. We were never afraid of such men, because they were candid and true. No guile beset that man's life, no evasion, no finesse. No merely political strategy ever characterized his conduct in public life or marred his honor in private life. He was a bold, pronounced, dignified, earnest, manly, firm, generous, true man, and I value the opportunity to express these sentiments about such a man on the floor of the Senate on this solemn occasion.

Passing beyond the events to which I have alluded, where he and I had adverse opinions, and taking this young man in company with thousands of his confrères of like age who were in the army that invaded Mexico, we find there the earliest display of those qualities which continued in unabated vigor and distinctiveness down to the very hour of his death. I have always felt that we had sent out with the army to Mexico the very flower of American chivalry in the persons of those young men who bore our banners in triumph to the halls of the Montezumas. Scarce a man who distinguished himself in that war has not received great honors at the hands of his country and has not proved himself thoroughly worthy of them. We can scarcely recall an individual who had a prominent place in that war—I do not mean official place, but who won his position by dutiful service in that war—who has not received at the hands of the American people a complete recognition of those abilities and courageous manhood which enabled him to go out in this early trial of his life and to prove himself upon those fields as a man of valor and of power.

I believe that no man has died in this country in a half century for whom the people of the United States at large had a more genuine respect or in whom they had greater confidence than in General Logan. The Senate has witnessed, on various occasions, his antagonism even to his best friends, when his convictions led him to separate from them upon political and other questions that have been brought before the Senate. Always courageous, always firm, always true, you knew exactly where to place him; and when his manly form strode across the Senate Chamber and he took his seat among his brethren of this body this country as well as this august tribunal felt that a man had appeared of valor and strength and real ability.

Though perhaps he could not handle the refinements of disquisition and logic with as much skill as some, Logan did not want to use such methods in his argument. He desired to have strong materials out of which to build powerful argumentation. If the facts that appeared before his mind convinced his judgment and his conscience that his course was right, he seldom stopped to see whether the path that he had marked out for himself was one justified by the doctrines of any political party or had been explored by some great man. While I feel that there is great attention always deserving to matters of the kind I have been mentioning, it is nevertheless true that those strong and earnest men who take hold of facts as they arise, and in handling them follow the dictates of judgment and of conscience, oftener meet the approval of the American people than those who refine too much and, from timidity, fail to reach the results that the people themselves have fastened their hearts upon.

I am glad, Mr. President, of the opportunity to render to our late associate what I conceive to be a merited tribute, and to extend my remarks a little further and to say of him that in his domestic relations he was one of the fondest and most lovable of men. In that crucial test of an honest character and of a gentle and forbearing nature, no man excelled John A. Logan. He was a true husband, a true father, a true friend, and when that is said of a man, and you can add to it also that he was a true patriot, a true soldier, and a true statesman, I do not know what else could be grouped into the human character to make it more sublime than that.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I first knew General Logan about twenty years ago. He was then a member of the House of Representatives, and I had just come to the Senate. His fame as a soldier, of course, was well known to me. His personal characteristics I then knew nothing of. I soon met him in committees of conference and otherwise as representing the opinions of the House of Representatives in matters of difference with the Senate, and I was struck, as everybody has been who has known him, with the very extraordinary characteristics that he possessed. They have been stated by his colleague who first addressed you and by my friend on the other side of the Chamber—the characteristic of candor, the characteristic of simplicity of statement, the characteristic of clearness of opinion, the characteristic of that Anglo-Saxon persistence in upholding an opinion once formed that has made our British ancestors and our own people the strongest forces for civilization of which we have any account in the history of the world.

There was no pretense about the man; there was no ambuscade; there was no obscurity. What he was for he understood his reason for being for, stated it briefly and clearly, and stuck to it; and that, as we all know, and as it always ought to be, means in the great majority of instances success, and where success fails it is an instance of honorable defeat.

His industry, Mr. President, which I have so long had opportunity to know and to know intimately, for later when he came to the Senate it was my good fortune to serve with him in one of the committees of the Senate having a very large amount of work to do—his industry, as well as these other characteristics that I have spoken of, was of the greatest. He seemed never to tire, to be ready to stay out and finish the things that were to be done, an example to us all of that fidelity to the administration of public interests, the things to be done and accomplished that I think were extremely conspicuous, and I must say among the living are somewhat rare.

So speaking of him, Mr. President, as a Member of the House of Representatives and as a Senator performing his public duty, I can speak of him with the simplest sincerity and say that he was entitled, in my opinion, to the highest praise for these qualities and these things that he both had and did in performing important public duties.

No more can be said, Mr. President, of any man, whether he have the gifts of eloquence or the boundless resources of learning. He who does his deed of duty in the place where he stands is the best patriot, the best citizen, the best legislator, the best ruler, and the best man. That he did.

For many years General Logan and I have sat here side by side. His temper, like that of some of those who sat very near to him, was not always of the most stolid kind, and he and I, sitting here side by side, very often in our constant conversations and intercourse differed and disagreed; we sometimes got warm and angry; but I think I can say truly that the sun never went down on his wrath toward me or any other man from occasions arising from differences of opinion and warmth of words.

He was the gentlest of hearts, the truest of natures, the highest of spirits, that feels and considers the weaknesses of human nature and who does not let small things stand in the way of his generous friendship and affection for those with whom he is thrown. And so in the midst of a career that had been so honorable in every branch of the public service, and with just ambitions and just powers to a yet longer life of great public usefulness, he disappears from among us—not dead—promoted, as I think, leaving us to mourn, not his departure for his sake but that the value of his conspicuous example, the strength of his conspicuous experience in public affairs, and the wisdom of his counsels have been withdrawn.

And so I mourn him for ourselves, not for himself; and so I look upon an occasion like this not so much—far from it—for the regrets that belong to personal separations as the testimonial that a great body like this should make for ourselves and for our people of a recognition of the merits and of the examples and of the services that are to be not only a memorial but an inspiration to us all and to all our countrymen as to the just recognition and worth of noble deeds and honest desires. And so I lay my small contribution upon his grave in this way.

Mr. MANDERSON. Mr. President, as I stood a few weeks ago by the vault that received within its gloomy walls the honored remains of John Alexander Logan, and heard the impressive words of the solemn ritual for the dead of the Grand Army of the Republic, it seemed to me a most fitting ceremonial. The aged comrade of the order who, in tremulous tones, read the lines that breathe in every word the spirit of fraternity, charity, and loyalty, represented the three hundred and fifty thousand companions in arms, comrades of the illustrious dead, to whom he was endeared by much of self-sacrifice and a devotion to their interests that never knew fatigue. As the clear, well-sustained notes of the bugle hung, as though loth to leave, upon the wintry air,

> And the dingle's hollow throat
> Prolonged the swelling bugle note, sounding the call "lights out," it was fit finale to the life of activity and conflict so lately ended. It spoke of rest after fatigue, of the peaceful camp after the wearisome march, of quiet after the din of arms, of sweet sleep after battle. It meant the restful darkness after the wakeful light, the covering of the camp-fire to retain its warmth until the dawn, the promise of the coming day, the resurrection and the life eternal.

The familiar bugle-call brought most vividly to my recollection the first time I met our friend and comrade, nearly twenty-five years ago. The disaster to our arms on dread Chickamauga's bloody day—the only battle approaching defeat that the Army of the Cumberland had ever known—had been redeemed by the glorious and substantial victories of Mission Ridge and Lookout Mountain. These battles had been won with the aid of the Army of the Tennessee, and Sherman, its leader, had come to fight by the side of Thomas, "the Rock of Chickamauga."

With Grant, the great captain, to direct the movements of these most able lieutenants, the victory was assured, and with the capture of the rebel stronghold upon the frowning heights of Mission Ridge and lofty Lookout the Georgia campaign, that ended in the capture of Atlanta and the march to the sea, that "broke the back of the rebellion," became possibilities. The fair fame of our brethren of the Tennessee was familiar to us of the Army of the Cumberland. We had fought by their side at Shiloh. We knew of their high emprise at Corinth, Champion Hills, and Vicksburg. We had heard and read of Sherman, McPherson, and Logan.

I do not disparage the bright fame of either of the first two when I say that the chief interest centered at that time about the name of the third of these famous leaders of the Army of the Tennessee. He was the great volunteer soldier. He came from civil life—was without education in the art of war save that which came from a limited experience during the war with Mexico. He resigned his position as a member of Congress to enter the army of the Union as a private. With burning words of eloquence and lofty patriotism he gathered his neighbors of his Congressional district about his recruiting flag, organized and became the colonel of the Thirty-first Regiment of Illinois Volunteers. The baptism of blood came to him at Belmont, where he led the charging column upon the foe.

At Fort Henry his regiment captured eight of the enemy's guns. At Fort Donelson, while impetuously urging his men to the assault, he was badly wounded in the arm and hip but never flinched, and by his intrepidity kept his men in place until they were reinforced, their commander leaving the field only when faint from loss of blood. His regiment in this bloody fray lost 50 per cent. of its number in killed and wounded. Promoted to be brigadier-general, he returned before full recovery of health and strength, and, at Corinth, General Sherman acknowledged his special obligation to General Logan, and described how gallantly "he held the critical ground on the right against a large force of the enemy."

Advanced to the command of a division he saved the day at Raymond, and the historian wrote of him—

> He was full of zeal and wild with enthusiasm, and to his division belongs the honor of the victory. Fearless as a lion, he was in every part of the field and seemed to infuse every man of his command with a part of his own indomitable energy and fiery valor.

At Jackson and at Champion Hills his splendid division, as usual, immortalized itself. He seemed a born leader, displaying "unflinching endurance, daring bravery, and determined energy." At the siege of Vicksburg, and particularly in the assault after the mine explosion, he was the prominent figure. His division was the first to enter the captured stronghold on that memorable 4th day of July. A witness of the scene wrote:

> The General rode at their head worshiped by his men—a man of iron will and lion-like courage, who seemed under the blasts of war to change into a demi-god.

As a tribute to his gallantry and effective service during the siege, he was made military governor, and in that capacity displayed wonderful executive power in caring for the captured thousands of Pemberton's army and the many other thousands of citizens who were reduced almost to starvation. He brought "order out of chaos, restrained disorder, and treated the conquered with impartial justice."

Having been made major-general of volunteers, he succeeded General Sherman as commander of the Fifteenth Corps.

His parting address to the gallant division he had so frequently led to victory is well worthy of remembrance. He said it "had made for itself a history to be proud of; a history never to be forgotten; for it is written as with a pen of fire dipped in ink of blood in the memories and in the hearts of all." He besought his men in these words: "Remember the glorious cause you are fighting for, remember the bleaching bones of your comrades killed on the bloody fields of Donelson, Corinth, Champion Hills, and Vicksburg, or who perished by disease during the past two years of hardship and exposure, and swear by these imperishable memories never, while life remains, to prove recreant to the trust Heaven has confided to your charge."

This was the meteoric military career of the junior of the three splendid soldiers who came from the great valley they had immortalized by their valor to the central West, to join with Thomas, Schofield, and Hooker in the campaign against Atlanta—"the gate city of the South."

I first saw Logan in front of the confederate position on Kenesaw Mountain, when his corps made that desperate assault upon Little Kenesaw—so fruitless in results, so costly in human life. The sight was an inspiration. Well mounted—"he looked of his horse a part." His swarthy complexion, long black hair, compact figure, stentorian voice, and eyes that seemed to blaze "with the light of battle," made a figure once seen never to be forgotten. In action he was the very spirit of war. His magnificent presence would make a coward fight. He seemed a resistless force.

> The sword
> Of Michael, from the armory of God,
> Was given him, tempered so that neither keen
> Nor solid might resist that edge.

The splendid record of achievements won along the Mississippi was to remain unbroken. His name is written upon every page of the Georgia campaign of over one hundred days of constant fighting. Says one of the historians of the Army of the Cumberland: "As the united armies advanced along the battle line, where for four months the firing never wholly ceased by day or by night, everbody came to know Logan. Brave, vigilant and aggressive, he won universal applause. Prudent for his men and reckless in exposing his own person, he excited general admiration.

When the lines were close his own headquarters were often scarcely out of sight of the pickets, and he generally had a hand in whatever deadly work might spring up along his front.

At Resaca, at Dallas, in front of frowning Kenesaw, at Peach Tree Creek and New Hope Church his corps under his leadership added to its fame. When McPherson was killed Logan assumed temporary command of the Army of the Tennessee, and "wrested victory from the jaws of defeat." We of the Cumberland heard the noise of the cannon and the rattle of the musketry that told of the severe assaults made by the desperate foe on Logan's line. I visited the field the next morning and saw the terrible results of the deadly struggle.

The ground was thickly strewn with the slain, and the face of nature had been changed by the conflict as though

> Men had fought upon the earth and fiends in upper air.

Logan's battle presence here is said to have been sublime. The death of his beloved comrade in arms seemed to transform him into a very Moloch. Bare-headed he rode his lines, encouraging his men by word and deed, his battle-cry, "McPherson and revenge." Sherman's official report of the battle says:

> The brave and gallant General Logan nobly sustained his reputation and that of his veteran army and avenged the death of his comrade and commander.

I would fain speak of Ezra Chapel and Jonesborough, but lack of time forbids.

On September 2 the campaign of constant fighting that began May 2 closed by the occupation of Atlanta, and no one man did more to bring about the glorious result than he whose death we to-day deplore. Of his services during the march from Savannah through the Carolinas I can not take time to speak. He rode at the head of the victorious veterans of the Army of the Tennessee at the Grand Review. Long its leader, he had at last become its commander. No more knightly figure appeared in the marching columns. No braver or truer heart swelled with the lofty emotions of the hour.

Through all of General Logan's military career it is evident that he was far more than a mere soldier. Although terribly at home upon the field of battle it was not love of the life that took him there. His sensitive and sympathetic nature caused him many unhappy hours as he saw the horrors war had wrought. He was no mere seeker for "the bubble reputation." The speeches made and letters written immediately before and during the great struggle for national existence show him to have been imbued with the spirit of loftiest patriotism. In Congress he said:

> I have been taught to believe that the preservation of this glorious Union, with its broad flag waving over us as the shield for our protection on land and on sea, is paramount to all the parties and platforms that ever have existed, or ever can exist. I would to-day, if I had the power, sink my own party and every other one with all their platforms into the vortex of ruin, without heaving a sigh or shedding a tear, to save the Union.

In 1862, when solicited to represent Illinois as Representative at large, he wrote:

> A compliance with your request on my part would be a departure from the settled resolutions with which I resumed my sword in defense and for the perpetuity of a government, the like and blessings of which no other nation or age shall enjoy if once suffered to be weakened or destroyed. In making this reply I feel that it is unnecessary to enlarge as to what were, are, or may hereafter be my political views, but would simply state that politics of every grade and character whatsoever are now ignored by me, since I am convinced that the Constitution and life of this Republic, which I shall never cease to adore, are in danger.
> I express all my views in politics when I assert my attachment for the Union. I have no other politics now, and consequently no aspirations for civil place or power. No! I am to-day a soldier of this Republic, so to remain, changeless and immutable, until her last and weakest enemy shall have expired and passed away. Ambitious men who have not a true love for their country at heart may bring forth crude and bootless questions to agitate the pulse of our troubled nation and thwart the preservation of this Union, but of none of such am I. I have entered the field to die if needs be for this Government, and never expect to return to peaceful pursuits until the object of this war has become a fact established.

While deeply in earnest and desirous of serving his country in the largest sphere, it can not be said that he was ambitious. He never sought promotion. It came to him as proper recognition of great fitness and much service.

The trait in his character upon which my thoughts dwell with fondness and emotion was his generous regard for the rights of others. It shone out conspicuously in his treatment of that noble soldier and true patriot, General George H. Thomas, whom all men loved. There was impatience that Thomas did not move to the attack of Hood. The fact that the rain, which froze as it fell, covered the earth with ice upon which man and beast could scarcely stand was really cause sufficient for delay.

Logan was ordered to supersede the great leader of the Cumberland army. He proceeded westward without haste, although the command of that splendid army of veterans was something greatly to be desired. Reaching Louisville and hearing that the thaw had come and Thomas ready to move, he delayed in that city. The glorious news of the great victory at Nashville soon came to him. Logan, with the order assigning him to supreme command in his pocket, telegraphed the glad tidings to Washington and asked that Thomas might remain at the head of the men who had followed him for so many years, and that he might return to the inferior command.

No desire for self-advancement could prompt him to disregard the rights of a comrade. Without a murmur he had before this time seen the command of the Army of the Tennessee pass to another when it seemed matter of right that it should be his as the natural successor of the lamented McPherson. General Hooker, with less of claim, wanted it, and in his grievous disappointment asked to be relieved from duty. Logan did not sulk an instant, but, with unselfish patriotism, went wherever duty called.

It is not my purpose to speak of the great dead in any other capacity than that of a soldier. Let others speak of him as a civilian, lawyer, legislator, statesman, and tell of his merits as citizen, husband, father, and friend. I was his recognized comrade, as was every other man who wore the blue. He never forgot them. They will never forget him. He made it impossible so to do by his devotion to the volunteer soldiers' interests. The statute-books are full of laws for the maimed and disabled, the widowed and the fatherless, that he either originated or actively helped to pass. His life here and in the other House since the war was one of constant devotion to those with whom he had served. It was this strong feeling of comradeship that prompted him to aid materially in the organization of that great order—the Grand Army of the Republic.

He originated the ever-beautiful Memorial Day and constantly urged its observance. It was a revelation to many that this sturdy soldier should have conceived the poetic idea that the graves of the Union dead should receive their yearly tribute of flowers. The thought was born of his love for them. There was much that was refined beneath the bold, frank exterior.

> The bravest are the tenderest,
> The loving are the daring.

A friend who knew him well writes of him:

> His domestic life was an exquisite idyl. It was fragrant with faith and tenderness. It was a poem whose rhythm was never marred.

Our hearts go out in sympathetic love to-day to the lonely woman who was his helpmeet all the days of his manhood life. Her's the desolation of a great loss, but with it the consolation of a great love.

Peace be with her.

Mr. HAMPTON. Mr. President, I understand and appreciate fully the motives which prompt the tender and touching tributes paid here to the memory of our late and distinguished colleague. I sympathize with them as honorable alike to the living and to the dead. It is eminently right and proper that the political associates and the comrades in arms of the dead statesman and soldier should bear grateful testimony to his services and pay homage to his virtues. This is his due; it belongs of right to him, and none are more willing to accord this to him than those who were his political opponents. For one, I join gladly in every mark of respect paid to the memory of General Logan. But, sir, in the few remarks which I shall make on this mournful occasion which recalls a calamity that has filled, not only the Senate, but the whole country with profound sorrow, I must speak from a standpoint different from that occupied by the political friends and the comrades of him who has been stricken down in the prime of manhood, and in the midst of his usefulness so suddenly and so mysteriously. The political school in which my creed was formed inculcated other doctrines than those held by General Logan, and these necessarily not only arrayed me in the ranks of his political opponents, but in those which were opposed to the cause he espoused and so bravely upheld in the late unhappy civil war. As a Democrat, a Southern man, and a confederate soldier, I am called on to speak of him as a Republican in high and deserved honor with his party, as a Northern man who offered his life and gave his blood to prove the sincerity of his convictions, and as a Federal soldier whose fame was as wide-spread as it was fairly achieved.

I therefore leave to others better fitted than myself the grateful duty of portraying his remarkable military career which placed him high in the ranks of successful commanders, and of tracing his no less remarkable political career, which led him up to become an honored and recognized leader of his party. But I may say, in connection with his brilliant military service, and it is due to him that I should say it, that when war was flagrant, and the passions of men were inflamed to their highest pitch, we of the South knew of no act of cruelty, of barbarity, or of inhumanity to stain his record as a brave and honorable soldier.

I shall speak of him as I knew him here, as a Senator and as a man; and while we held opposite opinions on nearly all of the great questions which have divided parties in this country, I hope that I may be able to speak with impartiality and with truth. His ability commanded my admiration; his many high qualities won my personal regard, and every feeling of my heart prompts me to do full justice to his merits. My acquaintance with General Logan began upon my entrance into this body, and by a curious coincidence the first utterances I heard in this Chamber were from him while he was criticising my own State sharply. His language on that occasion, as may readily be supposed, was not calculated to inspire me with friendly feelings toward him, and it created in my mind a prejudice against him which doubtless warped my judgment to some extent. It was in this condition of things that I found myself placed on the Committee on Military Affairs, of which he was a member, and over which he subsequently presided as chairman for years, zealously and efficiently.

Our service together on that committee was continuous from that time until death freed him from earthly labors, and my long association with him there taught me to respect his great ability and to admire the many good and generous traits which marked his character so strongly. Thoroughly familiar with the Army rules and regulations, earnestly desirous of promoting the efficiency of the service, laborious and conscientious in the discharge of his duties, devoted to the old soldiers, he was fully equipped to fill the arduous and responsible position he held. Of ardent temperament and strong will, he was not free from the prejudices which always belong to natures such as his was, but these were rigidly subordinated to his stern sense of justice and of honor. And, sir, I can say truthfully that he frequently tempered justice by mercy, and I acknowledge gratefully that on many occasions the people of the South were the recipients of his kindness. His words in the heat and conflict of debate were sometimes bitter, but his acts, inspired by his generous heart, were generally kinder than his words. By his acts I prefer to judge his character, and by them my estimate of him has been formed.

The characteristics which gave him such marked individuality as chairman of the Military Committee were constantly illustrated on the floor of the Senate. A strong adherent and supporter of his party, he never failed to assert his independence of thought and of action whenever he deemed that his duty demanded this. Frank, fearless, and outspoken, he professed in an eminent degree the courage which springs from sincere convictions, and he had the ability to defend these convictions. While doing this he dealt heavy blows, but they were always delivered in an open, straightforward, manly manner. He never fought in ambush; he asked only an open field and fair play. Possessing as he did so many rare and generous attributes, it is not strange that he found warm friends even among his political opponents, nor is it surprising that he was a tower of strength to his own party.

His services, his talents, commanded the position of a leader, and he filled that position ably. The ancient Romans, Mr. President, regarded courage as among the highest virtues, and the word used by them to express this quality has given to our language its beautiful word "virtue." If the Latin and the English words are synonymous, as they should be, then surely we can ascribe courage and virtue to John A. Logan.

No braver man ever lived, and the Almighty Creator endowed him with many other and great virtues. His work on earth is done, and he is at rest.

> And from heaven of heavens above
> God speaketh with bateless breath:
> "My angel of perfect love
> Is the angel men call Death!"

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, whosoever shall hereafter faithfully write the annals of our country's history for the last quarter of a century will have occasion to speak often and in words of high praise the name of General John A. Logan.

His death came suddenly and unexpectedly to us all, as but a few days before he was in his seat, apparently in his usual health. When it came it disclosed not only the warm affection, friendly devotion, and high esteem of his associates in this Chamber, but also the firm and enduring hold he had upon the affections of his countrymen everywhere. In public halls and churches and in other places they assembled to give expression to their grief and sorrow by memorial services and public addresses, recounting the story of his life.

This universal manifestation, spontaneous and sincere, did not come by chance or accident, but because his long public career rendered him worthy of the great honors that were paid to his memory.

Others have spoken of his early history in Mexico, at the bar, and in the State Legislature, all preliminary to larger field, opening up to him in the National Congress and upon the great theater of war. He first appeared in the National Capitol and took a seat in the House of Representatives, to which he had been elected from the State of Illinois in December, 1859. He was elected as a Democrat, and whatever part he took in the public discussions of that session was in the line pursued by the Democratic party. It is not fitting here and now to speak of the momentous questions which then agitated the public mind and sharply divided political parties. He was thrown into the midst of this terrific political conflict which even then threatened the country with war. He arrayed himself on the side of the great leader of one faction of the Democratic party, and in the Presidential struggle of 1860 he espoused the cause of this great leader with all the zeal of his strong personality, and in his own State aimed heavy blows at the Republican party and the Southern wing of his own.

That struggle ended in the election of President Lincoln, which was soon followed by the opening of a struggle of a very different nature. This conflict of arms, though long predicted by many, at last came suddenly upon the country without preparation. It has been said that "once to every man and nation comes the moment to decide in the strife of truth with falsehood for the good or evil side." This supreme moment came then not only to the country, but to the citizen, whatever his station. General Logan did not hesitate, but at once, with his great leader, arrayed himself on the side of his country. So deciding he immediately resigned his seat in Congress, surrendering for the time his political ambition, returned to his native State, and with all the energy and impetuosity of his nature proclaimed his purpose to enter the military service and remain in it until the Union was restored. This among his constituents was a courageous resolve, as from their location and political education they were not easily persuaded to risk all, as he proposed, to save the Union. Such was the force of his character and the persuasiveness of his arguments that in a very few days he found himself at the head of a regiment largely composed of his political associates and friends.

Here began that conspicuous military record which four years later by common consent placed him foremost among the many eminent civilian commanders of that great conflict.

I shall leave others to speak in detail of his military career, but can not refrain from saying that through it all he had the confidence of his military superiors as one fitted to command a great army in battle. Sherman assigned him to the supreme command on the battlefield of Atlanta after McPherson was slain; he justified that confidence by leading the army to victory. Later on Grant did not hesitate to select him as the man most likely to achieve a victory at Nashville, when he was growing restless at the delay of General Thomas. Here as everywhere he showed the magnanimity and generosity of the true soldier by not wresting the command from Thomas on the threshold of a great victory.

He not only held throughout the war the undiminished confidence of the great chieftains I have named, but his great qualities as a soldier also secured for him the respect, esteem, and confidence of those serving under him, which he held firmly and unreservedly to the end; and the soldiers who served with him, now grieve because of the loss of a comrade, companion, and friend, and they will repeat to their dying day around their camp fires recounting the stories of the war, "I fought with Logan at Atlanta," or "at Jonesborough," or "at Vicksburg."

General Logan reappeared in this Capitol as a Representative in March, 1867, and from that time until his death, except for a period of two years, he was continuously a member either of the House or of the Senate.

His ability as a popular orator and his great military reputation gave him prominence at once in the House of Representatives. He fully sustained himself in that great popular body by the earnestness of his convictions, by his skill as a debater, and by his knowledge of public affairs. He soon became one of the recognized leaders in the consideration and discussion of the great questions before the House. At that time, and by the vote of his associates in that body, he was chosen to appear here as one of the managers in behalf of the House to conduct the trial of the impeachment of President Johnson.

The questions then prominent were questions growing out of the war, covering the entire range and scope of the powers of the General Government, the reorganization of the Army, the management of the public debt, the reduction of taxes, changes in our tariff and internal-revenue systems, the currency, specie payments, the new amendments to the Constitution, and the restoration of the States deprived of representation because of the rebellion. All these questions and many others were in a brief space of time forced upon Congress for its consideration. General Logan had decided views upon them all, and expressed his views fearlessly and with great force and power.

General Logan was transferred to this Chamber in 1871. He was then in the full vigor of his matured faculties, and brought with him the valuable experience of a long service in the House, and at once took high rank in the Senate, which he maintained undiminished to the end, always taking an active part in the discussion of the great questions constantly appearing here for action. His sympathy with his old comrades and their devotion to his personal fortunes imposed upon him unusual labor in caring for their interests and welfare.

He was assiduous and constant in the advocacy of all the measures which he and they deemed of especial interest to them, whether respecting pensions, bounty, back pay, or the reorganization of the Army itself, and he became their conspicuous advocate and friend. So that for all the years following the war whatever legislation there is upon our statute-books upon these topics bears the impress of his advocacy.

He was a man of tireless activity and industry in the Senate. The Fitz-John Porter case is a conspicuous example of these characteristics. He found time in the midst of the multiplied cares of a seat in this body to write an exhaustive history of the causes which led to the conflict in which he bore so prominent a part.

This brief retrospect discloses that the life of General Logan was one of ceaseless activity and exceptional usefulness to his country.

Few men of this generation in our country have achieved a more illustrious career.

Coming into active political life at the beginning of the great civil war, he has linked his name imperishably with the military achievements that resulted in the restoration of the Union. Coming into the councils of the nation soon after the close of hostilities, he bore an honorable part in the legislation which then seemed necessary for the perpetuation of the Union.

General Logan was not, in the common acceptance of that phrase, an eloquent man; yet he had extraordinary power as a popular orator. There was something inherent in his character and method and in his utterances intensely attractive to large assemblies. Few men in our country could attract larger audiences, or hold them more firmly, or direct them more certainly to the views he expressed. This characteristic was well illustrated in the campaign of 1884, when great multitudes gathered to hear him, and listened with intense interest to every utterance, and were persuaded by his arguments and eloquence.

Mr. President, this body in its organization is perpetual, and unless the Constitution shall be changed will endure as long as the Government remains. It is now the same body it was when organized in 1789. Its members have the longest fixed term known to the Constitution except the tenure of the judges of our courts; yet its membership rapidly changes. When we met in December only six Senators appeared in their seats who were in this Chamber fourteen years ago, when I entered it. One of these was General Logan; and of all the men who have come and gone in these intervening years, none were more conspicuous and none will be more missed by the country and by those of us who still remain.

My service with him began in the other House, in 1867, and since that time we have been associated together continuously upon important committees. So I had opportunity to know him well. Like most of us, he was not free from faults and peculiarities of disposition; his nature was sensitive; he was quick to resent an injury, and as quick to forgive it. He never knowingly did an injustice to his associates, and if he found that he had done so unconsciously, he was swift and ready to make reparation. He was conscientious in the discharge of his public duties.

In his death the nation has lost one of its ablest counselors, his comrades in the army one of their most ardent and devoted supporters, we in this Chamber a valued co-worker and friend.

The arduous labors, the conflicts and struggles incident to high public station with him are ended. Those who survive him here will struggle on for a few brief years at most, and will then like him be gathered to the world beyond, to receive the reward which awaits those who perform faithfully and well all their duties here.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, a stranger seeing General Logan for the first time and observing him in these Halls a few days ago would perhaps have said that the most prominent feature of his character was his combativeness. He snuffed the battle afar off; he never lagged in the rear of the column; he crowded to the front; he never shirked the combat; he went out to look for it.

He was quick and strong in his likes and his dislikes. He scorned double-dealing and meanness, but I do not think that he hated anybody.

We have seen him in committee and here in this Hall, impetuous, trampling down all obstacles to his cause, and perhaps trampling upon the feelings of his associates. We have seen him then, upon a protest, drop the point of his sword instantly, become gentle, quiet, conciliatory, and evidently full of regret that he had even appeared to be unjust to any one.

He had a matchless courage, as everybody knows, a courage not only upon the battlefield but a high courage and spirit of self-sacrifice in politics. He had a right to suppose from all that was said to him by great multitudes, that he was a fair and honorable candidate for the Presidency, yet he cheerfully accepted a subordinate position upon a Presidential ticket in 1884 in the belief, in which he was strengthened by friends, that his influence and his acquaintance with tens of thousands of soldiers would bring something of strength to his political party.

We remember very well the famous Fitz-John Porter controversy.

He was well aware in what he was doing there, that he was strengthening old animosities and creating new ones; but you know with what a splendid courage he carried himself through, with what power, with what indefatigable industry he accumulated his facts and arguments, and renewed the battle again and again.

I remember with interest that during the controversy over the famous anti-Chinese bill he was absent. He returned after a time, and while he was under no obligation to say anything, he was opposed to the bill, and lest he might be even thought to shirk—no, not that, but because he desired to be sure in whatever was being done—he took an early occasion to rise here and manifest his vigorous and determined opposition to that measure. He knew well what chances he took then of losing political support.

Not a great while ago there arose here a very painful controversy concerning the Senatorial representative from one of our great States. He took his ground firmly; he argued it with all his accustomed vigor and energy. He recognized well that he was creating again enemies and opponents—yes, more than opponents, bitter enemies—in a great State that would be essential to the support of his ambition.

I remember that General Logan was several times much annoyed by a charge that about the time of the breaking out of hostilities, previous to it, he had been concerned in raising troops for the confederate service. It was a charge that had not a shadow of truth in it. He was a Democrat, of course, before the war, and, as he was in everything else, intensely a Democrat, fierce, combative, bitter sometimes; but as the contest drew near the fire of his patriotism blazed up and consumed like flax all obstacles in his way, and he became, as you have learned from some declarations of his made at the time, nothing but a defender of the Union. And not only as a soldier, for he carried with him politically the people of Southern Illinois, many of whom in their political prejudices and convictions were as completely Southerners as the people of Alabama. He swept them along with him by the power and fierce energy of his oratory.

He went into the war. After Vicksburg General Grant said that McPherson and Logan had demonstrated their fitness to become the commanders of independent armies. He had a right to suppose, after the gallant McPherson had fallen, under the very feet of an advancing and temporarily triumphant confederate force, he had a fair right to suppose that he would succeed to that officer's command. He was second in rank. The soldiers desired it. They had seen his great leadership on that battlefield as on many others. Another took the place, an honorable and gallant soldier.

The manly generosity and high courtesy of his bearing when he was ordered to relieve the noble General Thomas have been described today. I do not contrast General Logan's action on that occasion with the conduct of certain others in similar situations, though there were examples of wonderful contrast; but he was as obedient as a child, faithful as ever. His complaints were probably uttered, for he could not disguise himself, but they are not upon record.

He labored under the reproach that he was something of a political soldier in those days, but he did not then disclose the fact that he had received a suggestion he could not disregard, that he should go to Illinois, another battlefield as important as the battlefield of Atlanta.

He came to be the eminent figure among the volunteer soldiers. It is so recorded; it will be so remembered in history. There is no soldier of the old Army, the most captious or the most jealous, who regrets or carps at any of the great honors paid to Logan; for whatever is said of Logan as the chief of volunteers is claimed to be the common glory of them all.

I heard General Grant say once of him in private conversation that he was uneasy in camp but all right when he charged. He sulked in his tent, but it was because it was a tent. When the bugle called him to the saddle he was exultant, happy.

He was classed as a political general. I do not know that it was altogether an unfriendly remark. He was, sir; he had the honor to be a political general. It was a political war, and he was as strong in one field of battle as the other; the political generals did double duty. The anxiety during some of the great days of those four years was not that the soldiers of the Union would be unable to put down the rebellion in due time, but that the voters at the ballot-box might put down the war too early; and some of the political combats won by Logan and others at home were as useful to the cause of the Union as the triumphs of Vicksburg and Gettysburg. Baker, matchless as an orator, chivalrous and lovely in battle, was a political general. Garfield, giving promise of great generalship by an unconquerable industry and energy and a brilliant courage in the face of the enemy's guns—Garfield, obeying what was almost a command, went from the army to Congress. Frank Blair, with the trumpet tones of his voice and the quiver of his uplifted finger, was worth a corps of soldiers in his influence over Missouri, and he was a political general.

Scandal spared General Logan from its insinuations of dishonor in private or public life. Perhaps calumnious mud was thrown at him, but nothing of it is recorded or even retained in the memories of men.

He loved his country. Why, sir, that is true of sixty millions of people, I hope; but he loved it with a devotion immeasurable and unfathomable. He believed in the justice, the equality, and the liberty of its Constitution and its laws. He had no doubt whatever of the wisdom of this great experiment, universal suffrage and all. He was no agnostic; he had a creed and a purpose always, in every contest. He did not assume all knowledge; but what he knew, he knew he knew; and what he believed he was always ready to say. Whatever he wanted, he greatly wanted; he was very much in earnest. He trusted the great jury of twelve million voters and had no doubt about the future prosperity, honor, and glory of the great Republic.

He was an ambitious man, politically; he had a right to be, and he won a high place. He was ambitious of a great place among soldiers, and he won it.

He was generous, he was frank, he was tender. Possibly that will sound strangely to many people who did not know him as we did. He had as tender a heart as entered these doors. He was one of the bravest men physically and morally that ever lived. He was a brilliant and great volunteer soldier. He was an incorruptible citizen and legislator. His patriotism was unsurpassed in enthusiasm, intensity, and faith.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, the busy hand of death beckons us again to the side of a new-made grave. Amid the tears and sobs of this great people, to the music of muffled drums, and under the furled flag which he loved, we tenderly bore John A. Logan to his rest.

It was to be expected that the words of tribute spoken in this Chamber, still so filled with his presence, would come fresh and strong from warm hearts, for his wonderful career was of our own day and generation, and we were his colleagues and friends.

But, sir, no one need fear for Logan the cold analysis of the historian yet to come. How little dependent is this man's fame upon the speech of his contemporaries. It rests upon the solid foundation of glorious deeds and splendid public service. We may well say that he was born for the service of the people, for the active years of his whole life, with hardly an intermission, were spent in the discharge of public duty. That life was an open book, read and known of all men, and biographical details of it are for my purpose, quite unnecessary. It is said that "history is the essence of innumerable biographies." Logan's life is of the essence of our history.

With him love of country was a passion, and with him the union of the States was "the country." He could see, save through the perpetuity of that Union, nothing of any worth in the future of the Republic.

Of strong convictions and prejudices, a stern partisan, reared among those whose predelictions and views of constitutional right were distinctively of the Southern school, the friend and trusted lieutenant of Douglas, it will stand forever to the credit of his clearness of mental vision and of his independence of character, that when the war cloud which had been so long gathering, broke in fury upon the country, he straightway took his rightful place by the side of Abraham Lincoln, under the beautiful flag, which, at the threshold of his manhood, he had followed upon the plains of Mexico.

His star shot into the sky at Belmont, to shine fixed and unobscured forever.

It would be idle for me to recount the battles which he fought and won, the precipitous charges which he led, the marvelous personal magnetism and daring which, communicating itself to a whole army, turned, as by the will power of one man, defeat into victory. It is enough to say of him as a soldier that by common consent he stands forth the ideal volunteer soldier of the war. He was, among a million brave men, original, picturesque, and unique. There was but one John A. Logan. What a pitiful combination of folly and malignity was that which thrust at such a one the charge of disloyalty!

The world loves, and easily remembers, the soldier. Tales of the bivouac, the siege and the charge, of personal daring on the field of battle, have had peculiar fascination for men in every age, and doubtless Logan's chief renown will be as a soldier. He would have it so.

But, great as he was in war, he was great also as an orator of the people, and in the councils of peace. He won as an orator a reputation which, if he had no other claim to be remembered, would keep his name alive and would satisfy any reasonable ambition. His popularity as a speaker was not ephemeral, nor was it peculiar to any section. He was everywhere welcome. Listening thousands hung in rapt interest upon his words. It is not at all difficult to account for his power as a speaker. His evident sincerity and earnestness, his commanding presence, the flash of his eye, the like of which I never saw in any other face, the boldness of his utterance, the impetuous flow of his speech, and the trumpet tones of his voice, gave to him as a popular orator a charm indescribable. No man could catch more quickly than he the spirit of his audience, or more deftly adapt himself to its fancy.

The law of his life was action. He could not rest. It is said of him that as a soldier he was chafing and unhappy unless the army was in motion and the battle near at hand. This characteristic was quite as marked in civil life.

He was a student and a worker, and as the years went on he grew in mental strength and stature and in oratorical power.

As the nominee of his party for the second great office in the gift of the people, he added greatly to his civic fame. The dignity of his bearing, the method and manner of his thought and speech, were everywhere a revelation to those who then heard him for the first time. Other orators have been more finished, but, sir, it is not the language of fulsome eulogy to say that, taking John A. Logan all in all, he was a great orator, and will be known as such.

He possessed, also, indisputable claims to high statesmanship. Look through the statutes and the records of Congress, and you will find there the strong impress of his character and individuality. Many acts of great public consequence he devised and draughted. As a legislator, he was broad-minded and fearless. Neither the love of commendation nor the fear of criticism swerved him in the least from the path blazed out by his convictions. He was ready in debate and a dangerous antagonist on the floor of the Senate.

One cannot fail to notice, looking through the record of his work in the national Senate, everywhere the evidence of service rendered to the soldier, and to the soldier's widow and orphan. Every thought that loving comradeship and appreciation of great service and sacrifice could suggest for the soldier's good, you will find at some time formulated into statute by his faithful hand. He took it upon him as a sacred trust that he should look always to the interest of those who with him had stood in the shock of battle. Well may the surviving soldiers of the Federal Army—now, alas, fast falling by the wayside—as they gather around their camp-fires, weep bitter tears for the loss of Logan.

Though a chieftain of his party, he was not narrow or sectional as a legislator. He met more than half way those who had but lately been his adversaries on the field of battle. No man more desired the restoration of perfect harmony between the sections and the upbuilding of the waste places of the South or gave readier aid to that great consummation. He demanded only in return that every man and woman and child, of whatever condition, class, or degree, should enjoy unobstructed and in the fullest measure, every right given by the Constitution and the laws. With less than this he thought it moral treason to be content.

Logan was a leader by divine right. All the elements combined to make him such. Of resistless energy, iron will, knightly daring, lofty moral courage, quick and acute intelligence, fervent patriotism, unselfish loyalty to principle and friendship, and unswerving honor, it is impossible to conceive of him as other than a great leader in any field of human effort. Scan his eventful life however critically, study the forces which moved him, analyze the characteristics which marked him from his fellows, and you find little indeed of accident or adventitious aid in the achievements which will glorify his name. It is no marvel that he was a great soldier, or that he was an orator of high repute, or that he was conspicuous among the leading statesmen of his day, but that he united in himself all of these is conclusive of his genius.

He was, with all his rugged strength of will and bravery and fortitude, a sensitive man, easily wounded by a personal or party friend. In the retrospect we see now, with unavailing regret, how keenly he may have suffered in spirit from what gave us little thought or concern. Quick to resent what seemed to him a wrong, he was, like all great natures, as quick to forgive and forget. He was magnanimous. No manly man found it difficult to repair, without loss of self-respect, a quarrel with John A. Logan.

He was, in many ways, a proud man. He carried for a quarter of a century upon his body, wounds received in battle. He bore, without complaint, racking pains, born of the privations of the soldier's life, of the pelting storm, the comfortless bed upon the frozen earth, the cold, wearisome march, the sleepless nights and toilsome days. Standing in his place on the 16th of March last, he said:

> I could say—but I dislike to mention myself—that I was entitled to a pension early in the war, and have been ever since the war, but I have never asked for it, and never expect to.

Mr. President, we now know that there were times in his later years when the days were dark, and when the stress of financial embarrassment pressed him hard, but he was too proud and delicate to claim the pension which was his due under the laws which he had been so potential in fashioning and in enacting. I hope if the words I am about to utter are a sin against the proprieties of this occasion that I shall be forgiven; but I do not doubt that as he stood there, announcing to the Senate and to the country his right to a pension, he had abiding faith that should he, in the providence of God, be first called, the people whom he had served so long and so well, would pay, not grudgingly, but as in cheerful payment of a debt of honor, to the womanly woman who in all the years of his growth had kept pace with him, who had been his love, his pride, his companion, that which was his due, but which he had forborne to claim.

That is not a full tribute to the memory of John A. Logan which takes no thought of her whose life has been a part of his life and whose fame is linked inseparably with his fame. What tenderer, sweeter tribute can the American people pay to his memory, than to place above the calamitous vicissitudes of life, the woman who was ever by his side, not alone in the hour of triumph but in the hour of pain and suffering; not alone in this beautiful capital city, but in the rude hospital on the banks of the distant Western river where he lay wounded nigh unto death?

He died in the service of his country, and we know from him—for he "being dead, yet speaketh"—that his strength and vigor were sapped and mined by the privations and the wounds of war.

How difficult it is to think of him as dead!

> Can that man be dead
> Whose spiritual influence is upon his kind?
> He lives in glory; and his speaking dust
> Has more of life than half its breathing moulds.

He will live, sir, in the hearts of men until the history of his time shall have faded utterly away. With each returning May, wherever there is a soldier's grave—and where is there not a soldier's grave?—the people now living and those to come after us will remember the name of Logan, the patriot, soldier, orator, and statesman, and will bring, in honor of his memory, the beautiful flowers of the springtime and the sweet incense of praise and prayer.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, with profound sorrow and deep grief I join in paying the last official tribute of respect, honor, friendship, and love to the memory of our late distinguished colleague, John Alexander Logan.

For the first time, in March, 1875, I had the pleasure and honor of his personal acquaintance in this Chamber.

For the succeeding two years, and then from March 4, 1879, to the day of his death, I was a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, of which he was the honored chairman. Our official and personal relations at once became, and uninterruptedly continued, most intimate, cordial, and friendly. However widely we may have differed upon many questions, I respected, admired, honored, and loved him for his many noble, manly, generous, magnanimous, and chivalrous qualities of head and heart—the distinguishing attributes of the true soldier and great man among all nations and tongues.

It was my sad privilege on December 26, 1886, at 2.55 p. m., to stand at the foot of his bed, and, powerless for relief, to see him quietly, peacefully, and unconsciously breathe the last breath of his life on earth.

His deathless soul, freed from its earthly body, racked, tortured, and paralyzed by disease and pain, triumphantly passed through the mystic vail intervening between the grievous afflictions and bereavements of earth and the fullness of joy in the presence and the everlasting pleasures at the right hand of our Heavenly Father, and entered upon its glorious unending life upon the beautiful shores of the "bright forever," far, far beyond the touch of disease, suffering, or death.

Now beyond the reach of fulsome praise or eloquent panegyric, we can calmly consider his life, and profit therefrom.

About the year 1823 Dr. John Logan emigrated from Ireland and located in Jackson County, Illinois, and there married Miss Elizabeth Jenkins. Of this union John Alexander Logan was the first born, February 9, 1826, and inherited a robust physical constitution and vigorous mind, the richest inheritance bequeathed by parents to children.

In that section of the then West educational advantages were very limited, and young Logan was taught at home, and attended the common schools of the neighborhood as opportunity offered, and a neighboring academy; and by industry, perseverance, and self-reliance obtained a fair education.

We see him a young man about twenty years old in his native county, without wealth, family distinction, or influential friends to aid him, having only the future and its possibilities before him to inspire and nerve him for the battles of life, the architect of his own fortune, free to plan and execute as he would and could. With honesty, determination, and self-reliance he boldly moved forward, conscious that "life gives nothing to mortals without great labor." He enlisted as a private soldier in the First Illinois Regiment for service in the war with Mexico, and became a lieutenant, acting adjutant, and quartermaster, faithfully discharging his duties.

Upon the conclusion of peace he returned home with a broader view of life and laudably increased ambition, and began the study of law in the office of his uncle—Hon. A. M. Jenkins—and in 1849 was elected clerk of the county court of his native county; served as such about one year, then resigned and attended the law school of Louisville University, and graduated therefrom in 1851.

Returning home, he entered upon the practice of law with his uncle, and was elected to the Legislature of Illinois in 1852–'53–'56 and '57, and to the office of prosecuting attorney for the third judicial district in 1853.

In 1855 he was married to Miss Mary Cunningham, a most happy and fortunate union. In 1856 he was Presidential elector, and cast his vote for Buchanan and Breckinridge. In 1858 he was elected a Representative in the Thirty-sixth Congress, and in 1860 was re-elected to the Thirty-seventh Congress, and served his term in the Thirty-sixth Congress from March 4, 1859, to March 3, 1861, and entered upon his term in the Thirty-seventh Congress, and attended the called session in 1861. While attending that session he shouldered his musket as a private soldier in the Second Michigan Volunteers, and marched to and participated in the battle of Bull Run. He then resigned his seat in the Thirty-seventh Congress, entered the Union Army, raised and was appointed colonel of the Thirty-first Regiment Illinois Infantry August 16, 1861, marched to the front in the field, and there continued.

He was promoted to be brigadier-general in March, 1862, and then major-general, and commanded succesively a regiment, brigade, division, an army corps, and the Army of the Tennessee. On August 17, 1865, after full four years' service, he resigned his commission as major-general, and was honorably mustered out. He was then appointed by President Johnson minister to Mexico, and resigned.

Returning to the walks of civil life he resumed the practice of law in his native Illinois. In 1866 he was elected a Representative at large from Illinois to the Fortieth Congress, and re-elected to the Forty-first Congress, serving from March 4, 1867, to March 3, 1871, and was elected to the Senate of the United States for the term beginning March 4, 1871; and was again elected to the Senate for the term beginning March 4, 1879, and re-elected for the succeeding term from March 4, 1885, to March 3, 1891.

In 1884 he was the nominee of the National Republican party for Vice-President.

This bird's-eye view of his life-record and services is just sufficiently distinct and full to enable us to form correct impressions of this great man—our lamented colleague in this Chamber. In all these varied positions of trust and honor he was, and proved himself to be, honest, determined, self-reliant, faithful, and efficient, and the worthy recipient of the friendship and confidence of the people.

For the length of time devoted to his profession he was a good lawyer.

Among all the many great and distinguished volunteer officers during the late war it is no disparagement of any of them to say that General Logan was the greatest and most distinguished. Courageous, fearless, energetic, untiring, generous, and dashing, he was the beau-ideal of the American volunteer soldiery. For four long, weary years, during the greatest military conflict the world has ever beheld, General Logan, as a private soldier, a commander of a regiment, then of a brigade, then of a division, then of an army corps, and then of an army, met and satisfied the highest expectations and demands of the administration, the country, and the people. No man could do more. As a Representative and Senator in the Congress of the United States he was incorruptible, faithful, diligent, and laborious, and was earnest in his convictions and forcible and aggressive in their advocacy.

His repeated re-elections to both the House and Senate by the same constituency attested their continued friendship and confidence, and their approbation of his character and services. In his personal intercourse he was manly, generous, candid, and sincere.

As a husband and father he was devoted, faithful, tender, loving, and warmly appreciative of the boundless love and undying devotion of his noble wife and dutiful children. As a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church he was "not ashamed of the gospel of Christ; for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth."

The name, the fame, the life, and the illustrious and successful achievements of General Logan are now the common heritage of our great country and people, and will be cherished and remembered by the present and coming generations.

Many poor, worthy, and honorably ambitious young men, just entering the arena of active life, faint, weary, and despondent, will remember the great disadvantages surrounding General Logan when at their age, and then his subsequent illustrious and successful life, attained by his honesty, perseverance, and self-reliance, and made possible to all by our unequaled systems of government—the best ever yet devised by the wisdom of sages or attained by the blood of heroes—and will take fresh courage and worthily imitate the illustrious pattern, and make themselves a blessing and honor to country and people.

The life and achievements of Logan, cast upon the bosom of the public life in the United States, have started waves of influence and power for good which will widen and extend until they break against the shores of eternity in the resurrection morning.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, Senators have brought to-day, and will bring, garlands and wreaths with which to decorate the grave of our dead soldier and Senator. I shall content myself with offering a single flower.

Logan was an honest man. I do not mean by that simply that he would not steal, that he would not bear false witness, that he had not an itching palm for a bribe. If this were all, he would not be unlike every man I have been associated with in both Houses of Congress during a sixteen years' service, nor essentially different, in my opinion, from a large majority of his fellow-citizens.

Sir, the press very generally and occasionally an eulogist to-day, in assigning to General Logan this admirable quality of character, have contracted and dwarfed it, have seemed to make money its measure, by producing as evidence in its support the fact that he had served long in public life and died poor. The Senator from Missouri has just said that he was poor, that he was incorruptible. I trust, sir, that the same honesty and incorruptibility may truthfully be ascribed to every Senator within the sound of my voice, to every member of the two Houses. Is there any necessary connection between honesty and poverty? Is the one the logical sequence of the other? Are dishonesty and wealth in copartnership? I have been taught to believe, and do believe, that honesty is the broadest, safest, and surest pathway to prosperity.

I do not regard it as eulogistic of this great man to say that he was honest in that narrow sense. I do not cripple my declaration by any such limitation, nor sustain it by any such questionable testimony. I mean that General Logan had an honest mind, an honest purpose, an honest habit of thinking. I mean that he never played tricks with his mental machinery to serve his own ends and his own purposes. I mean that he never attempted jugglery with it. I mean that he permitted it, in spite of his ambitions, his prejudices, his jealousies, and his passions, to move straight forward in its operations; and that the legitimate results were convictions—convictions followed always by earnest, determined, intense action. In my opinion that largely constituted General Logan's strength in the Senate, in the Army, and with the people.

Let me illustrate by a few brief incidents of his life. He was living in Southern Illinois, where there was little if any anti-slavery sentiment, at a time when slavery was never more firmly established by enactment of law and judicial decision, at the time when it was arrogant and aggressive in its demands. Yet Logan stemmed the current, disregarded his own apparent self-interest, and resisted the demands. He was associated with a party whose shibboleth was State rights, whose overshadowing fear was centralization of power in the National Government; and when that doctrine culminated in secession he dropped it at once forever and tendered his sword so to the threatened and imperiled Republic.

War came on. He believed that war was a serious fact; that it was to be waged for the suppression of rebellion and the restoration of the Union. Hence in every council of war his voice was always for battle, and in every battle he was ever at the front.

Some of the prominent officers were for temporizing, were studying political enigmas, were nursing Presidential aspirations, were casting obstacles in the way of supposed rivals. Logan never swerved to the right nor to the left, but pressed ever straight forward to the goal of ultimate victory.

When in the midst of the war preferment was offered him, aye, more, urged upon him by his friends, he did not hesitate a moment, but with emphasis declared to them that he had enlisted for the war, and that, God helping him, he would fight it out on that line to the end. When he was superseded, as he believed unjustly, as has been well said to-day, he did not sulk in his tent a single hour, but marched straight forward in the line of duty.

When the war was over, the Union was restored and peace was enthroned, and a grateful people showered upon him public honors he exhibited everywhere the same characteristics. Take the case which has been alluded to here to-day of General Porter. Logan believed, whether justly or unjustly is not for me now to say, that this man was jealous of his superiors, that criticisms and complaints subversive of discipline were made by him, that he neglected plain and open duty, that he refused to obey peremptory orders, and that his punishment was just. In this Chamber we listened to his matchless, marvelous, powerful, convincing speech against his restoration; and when his great captain, with a voice infinitely more powerful with this soldier hero than the glittering bribes of gold or of fame, called him to a halt he did not hesitate a moment, but with renewed vigor, with redoubled power, urged his convictions upon the Senate.

We all remember perfectly well that Logan knew his comrades saved the Republic, and in season and, as many thought, out of season he was ready to propose and to advocate any measure for their relief that commended itself to his judgment, not taking for a moment into account any public sentiment that might be hostile.

When his great commander was for a third time urged by his friends for the candidacy by the Republican party for the office of President, and it was apparent to all thinking men that it was to be a struggle fierce, full of intense bitterness, Logan went to the front in that fight utterly regardless of any effect that it might have upon his own political fortunes.

I have seen within a few days ago an item floating in the press that in that ever to be remembered convention, when it was apparent that Mr. Blaine could not be nominated, Senators HALE and FRYE visited General Logan and tendered to him the support of their friends for the nomination if he would accept the candidacy. Of course it was a myth. Senators HALE and FRYE both knew John A. Logan, and had known him for years, and even if they had been vested with the authority, which they were not, they never would have dreamed of undertaking to bribe him from his allegiance. They knew that no gratification of personal ambition (and it is the greatest temptation to a man on earth) would move him from his allegiance to Grant in that fight any more than a summer breeze would stir a mountain from its base.

Sir, when subsequently Logan himself justly had aspirations for the same nomination I sat here in this seat, by the side of that which now is empty, a curious observer, and I dare assert that I never saw him trim his sail in the slightest. I never could perceive that the fact made any change in his thought or word or vote.

About that time the Republican national committee met here in Washington to determine upon the time of holding the convention and to settle upon the basis of representation. Logan was present. A delegate from one of the Territories raised the question about Territorial representation, and insisted that his Territory must have three delegates in that convention, and that it was the duty of that committee to increase the representation of the Territories generally. As he was closing his speech he turned to Logan and significantly said, "Candidates for the Presidency had better take notice." Logan sprang to his feet in the twinkling of an eye and boldly denounced the whole system of Territorial representation in national conventions as unjustifiable, utterly oblivious of the fact that perhaps he was hazarding that marvelous prize for which he was then contending.

Mr. President, there is not a Senator within the sound of my voice, and there are Senators here who have served in the councils of the nation many years with John A. Logan, who ever knew him to hesitate or waver in or shrink from any expression of opinion as to any subject under consideration, who ever knew him to avoid a vote, who ever suspected him of taking any account whatsoever of what effect his words or his acts would have upon his own personal or political fortunes. There is not a Senator within the sound of my voice who, when Logan had expressed his opinions, the result of his convictions, ever dreamed that he was not entirely, faultlessly sincere in the expression.

Mr. President, Logan was a fearlessly honest man. May our dear Lord give him a blessed rest and a glorious immortality. [Manifestations of applause in the galleries.]

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, it is one of the chief excellencies of our institutions that no man, however exalted in station, great in intellect, or rich in graces of character, is indispensable to their security, growth, and permanence. Where rank comes by inheritance, and the essence as well as the symbols of authority is transmitted from generation to generation, a single life often stands as the only barrier against threatened revolution or anarchy.

How different here! Great characters, in whom center the affections of the people and the forces of the state, pass from the current speech of men into the repose of history, while the state itself, dominated by the popular will and secure in the popular affection, gives no pause to its beneficent progress nor relaxes the least of its necessary functions.

Garfield—himself destined to succeed to the station as well as the martyrdom of Lincoln—upon the assassination of his immortal predecessor, gave utterance to a sentiment as significant as it was eloquent: "The President is dead; but, thank God, the Government at Washington still lives."

This consideration by no means implies inadequate appreciation of the illustrious men who have gone from among us. It is rather an added tribute to them that the Government had received no detriment at their hands, but had been so strengthened by their patriotic solicitude, shared by the great average of their fellow-citizens, that it was made capable of passing unharmed through the severest crises.

We do not honor Lincoln less because when his unrivaled authority was paralyzed by death the good ship of state under other control and guided by Providence passed safely through the perils of the time into the serene anchorage of restored peace and prosperity. Grant, the greatest hero in our military annals, breathed out his life amid the mountain pines, and the orderly progress of the great affairs of state, over which he had so faithfully presided, was only temporarily suspended by the universality of public and private sorrow.

Logan has gone from among us to return no more. Another sits in his place. The burden and responsibilities which he bore so well and discharged with so much acceptance have fallen upon other shoulders. The Senate, permanent in its organization, and renewed from time to time, continues its round of duties, sustained against shock and disaster.

Yet Logan will not be forgotten. No individual, no association of men is proof against the salutary teachings of example. Others among us may have excelled our dead friend in many of the qualities which are combined in true statesmanship, but who will deny to him those rare gifts and virtues which make their possessor conspicuous anywhere?

His zeal was restless, his energy intense, his industry tireless, his intellect clear and incisive, his courage unshaken in any and every circumstance, his loyalty to truth and duty undoubted, and his fidelity to friendships, in these days of self-seeking, almost phenomenal. Always impetuous, sometimes impatient in controversy, his nature was ardent without rancor, and in private and social life he was sunny and persuasive.

General Logan's speech was vigorous and forceful. He subordinated the graces of rhetoric to the logical results sought to be compassed. The pith and marrow of his discourse was seldom embellished by fanciful allusions or poetic imagery. His weapons of debate comported with his rugged, practical nature, and challenged the judgment rather than the fancy and the imagination. Beyond all and above all his candor and sincerity were so evident that no one ventured to question them.

He was a zealous friend and a sturdy opponent. His blows were delivered in honorable fashion, and those he received in like manly controversy were accepted in a chivalrous spirit.

It was the crowning felicity of his association with us that, as the most conspicuous of our volunteer soldiery during the war of the rebellion, he became the special champion of the interests of not only his immediate comrades in the field, but of all who had helped to bear the flag of the Union through trials and discouragements to final victory. With what fidelity and energy this sacred trust was discharged the Senate and the country alike bear witness.

It is given to but few to so happily unite in their own experience heroic martial achievements with eminent civic successes. Yet he bore his accumulated honors mildly, and delighted more in the calm content of his home and fireside than in the loud acclaim of men. It will be one of the most grateful remembrances of him who has gone that what he became he owed to his own exertions. No man of his time more strikingly illustrated the beneficence of a Government which, looking for its support and maintenance to people of all conditions, pursuits, and beliefs, offers its honors and its trusts to the competition of all.

Logan fought his own way, won his own victories, made his own fame secure.

Scrutinizing the list of those who, emerging from comparative obscurity, have contributed the noblest service to the Republic and made themselves a record for immortality, the name of Logan will be found written not far below those of Lincoln and of Grant.

Mr. EVARTS. We are collected here to-day, Mr. President, neither to bury nor to praise the soldier and Senator whose life in its full luster and at its zenith was so lately eclipsed before our eyes by the impenetrable veil of death. Not to bury him, for his obsequies have been celebrated with all the observance that admiration of his career, applause for his conduct, reverence for his love and labors for his country, and affection for those humble, common traits that affect as with a touch of kin all who love the character in the home which this our friend manifested in all his life. Not to praise him, for we do not need to display, and we have no power to enhance, his fame.

It is that we and the communities that we may speak for are to associate ourselves and them in this hour to recall our enforcement of his relation to the public life of this country, the benefits that he has conferred, and the power he is yet to exert over them in the future.

It can not, I believe, be doubted that at every stage of General Logan's life he was a capital figure in his own share of public power and influence and in the recognized estimate of his countrymen of that position.

If in the first few months of the opening struggle, after he had taken his position in animating, arousing, confirming the movement of this people to sustain the Government, if in the first battle bullets had taken away his life, Logan would have been a capital figure in the memory of that great scene and on that great theater. If in his military career, commemorated and insisted upon so well, at any pause in his advance he had fallen in this battle or that battle, he would have been a capital figure in that scene and on that theater. And if at the end of the war, when the roll was made up of the heroes, and he then had not moved before this great people in any subsequent career, the angel of death had then taken away his life, he would have been a capital figure in the whole honor of that war.

And, Mr. President, in the great civic labors and dangers that attended the rearrangement of our political and social condition in this country consequent upon the war, if that share and if that part of his career had been the only one to be commemorated, he would have been a capital figure in that. But when these strifes were composed and the country was knit together in allegiance and loyalty to the Government he loved and served, he thenceforward in this Chamber had presented for the record of his life only what should have been manifested and known and observed here, he would have been a capital figure in that single scene and theater.

We therefore must agree in what in his lifetime and so recently now after his death meets a universal concurrence, that he was of the citizen soldiers of this great nation the greatest, and that of that class of citizen soldiers that were numbered among statesmen he was the greatest of statesmen, and we must confess that on this larger area he still remains a capital figure which could be missed from no narrative of any portion of the story of his life.

Mr. President, it has been said by a profound political philosopher applied to a condition of political life not far different from our own, that by whatever path great places are to be gained in public life in the opinion and support of the community, that path will be sought. If it is an honorable path, if it be of uprightness and openness and straightforwardness of conduct and of character that these high places are to be gained, then that path will be trod. And what better encomium upon his own path, what more creditable to our people's estimate and their own approval upon this or that path in public life, than that General Logan by the path that he pursued, never in ambush, never in devious paths, never agitated about his own reputation, and never defaming that of others, led on in a path that brought him up to the highest distinction and has left him this capital figure in the memory of all his countrymen.

In every form of popular influence on the largest scale, near to the topmost of the culminating crown of a people's glory to the fame of one of their citizens, he was before us in the most recent contest for the Presidency. He, at the moment that he died, was held, in the judgment of his countrymen, among the very foremost for the future contest. And this illustration of his distinction knows no detraction, no disparagement, no flaw touching the very heart and manhood of his life and character.

Let us, then, applaud our people and applaud this great character as being a just answer to much of the contumely and opprobrium that is aimed at the public life of this country. I can find no capital figure in the politics of other nations that more plainly shows that this is a path of honor, and in the sunlight, and arrives at the final glory of its consummation.

Mr. President, for some imperfection of our nature, which we can not lay aside, it is said that the fullness of the heart and of admiration can not show itself.

> Not till the sacred dust of death is shed
> On each dear and reverent head,
> Nor love the living as we love the dead.

If it be so, nevertheless it is a part of our nature that when thus liberated from the threat and fear and competition of the living, nevertheless after this obscurity is removed, it is an honest and not a vague and extravagant judgment that gives prominence to the life and character and removes the shade.

The times are never idle and the busy fingers of the fates are ever weaving as in a tapestry the many threads and colors that make up our several lives, and when this is exposed to critics and to admirers there shall be found few of brighter colors or of nobler pattern than this life of General Logan.

Mr. SABIN. Mr. President, the melancholy event which engages the attention of the Senate on this occasion accords with the course of nature, and must in due time overtake us all.

While no man may hope successfully to contend against like consequence, our interest therein but increases as we near it.

This interest, however, as it concerns another, is chiefly retrospective.

The death of one having occupied so important a place in the service and affections of the public as General Logan naturally leads to a survey of his life, and an inquiry into those personal qualites that molded his being into whatever fullness and roundness of outline it possessed. And I am pleased to find so many members of this body qualified with familiarity with General Logan's public and private life, and knowledge of the mainsprings of his conduct, who are ready to venture into this field of inquiry with a spirit of generous consideration to which his memory is conspicuously entitled.

Hence, I approach with great diffidence so delicate a task, offering as my only excuse my personal admiration, esteem, and love for one of the best of men and noblest of characters. I shall, therefore, attempt to treat the subject more from a personal standpoint and my own impressions and experiences.

The personal and public history of General Logan is of that marked character, and so far-reaching in its proportions, that it is impossible to encompass it within the tribute which the present occasion permits. I leave especially the history of his marked and brilliant military career, his devotion, services, and friendships to his comrades in arms during and since the war; to those who were with him in service during that long and sanguinary struggle, and who know so well how to speak of his labors and his victories.

To follow the career of a life having within its bounds such a range of developments, and marked by so many acts which stand out in bold relief upon the panorama of our national progress, would require a latitude embracing space and time only to be covered through the compilation of volumes.

This session of the Senate has been dedicated to the offering of a tribute to him who but recently sat with us in council, and who, it is entirely within the limits of moderation to say, has left a stamp upon the public affairs of our country during the period of his life which time will not efface while the Republic endures. The name of General John A. Logan is at once a glory to the American people and a natural heritage to future generations. He was a Colossus among the giants of American history. The impress of his individuality and genius must remain upon the institutions for the perpetuity and perfecting of which the lives of Washington, of Hamilton, of Jefferson, of Sumner, of Lincoln, and of Grant were dedicated.

Long before I had personal acquaintance with General Logan his name and fame had become an object of interest and pride to me in common with all other American citizens.

I think it was General Logan's attitude at the outbreak of the rebellion that first directed the attention of the public to him. A Douglas Democrat, he shared the confidence of that great leader.

During the troublesome period intervening the first victory of the Republican party in the election of Lincoln and the bombardment of Sumter Logan found his path of duty in companionship with life-long political associates, struggling in the fruitless endeavor to resist one of the greatest evolutionary movements of a people of which history speaks—a movement characterized by those who participated therein in terms appropriate to mere civil strife, but which in securing for us a more perfect Union may be discovered at this day to have been an evolutionary development of the Constitution.

In those days the mists which lowered in the political sky obscured the vision of our wisest men. But the fall of Sumter, like a fog-horn at sea, determined the course of Logan. For him party machinery had been a means of directing the united efforts of citizens sharing the same views of public polity. To divert the mechanism to other purposes was to release him from party fealty. The Union was to him the paramount good, and party but a means of accomplishing it.

That great chieftain, with palsied speech, and death seeking to arrest his hand, determinedly wrote the imperishable "memoirs," and deliberately recorded the first results of General Logan's example upon the people of Southern Illinois. "As a result of Logan's speech at Springfield," writes General Grant, "every man enlisted for the war." What a glorious tribute did that great man thus render to the noble character whose memory we honor to-day.

Loyalty to the Union left Logan no alternative, and he accepted it with a resoluteness of purpose not afterward shaken.

Logan's life-current flowed a steady, strong stream; and once directed against the forces of disunion nothing could satisfy his ambitious courage but the heat and labor of the day in the forefront of the battle. Here, to the fulness of every patriot's hope, Logan served his country. Here, amid all the horrors of four long years of civil strife, Logan's character received those deep impressions which so intensified his subsequent utterances and lent vehemence to much of his after life.

Comradeship in the perils of battle was ever to him an all-sufficient claim upon his utmost service, and the genius of our institutions so molded his conduct toward all classes of people that his sympathy, with an appreciative comprehension of their situation and wants, secured for him their utmost confidence and esteem as a tribute of the people.

Logan's opportunity for serving his country was not closed at Appomattox.

The restoration of the reign of law in those regions long dominated by the force of arms, the readjustment of those communities in their relations as members of the Union, the formulation of legal enactments demanded by the elevation of the black man into the light and liberty of American citizenship, the whole scheme of national restoration and civil rehabilitation known as "the period of reconstruction," called for ability equal in importance to the demands of civil strife. In this new field was General Logan found the constant, effective, and honored representative of the people, and the sturdy champion of the most effective measures calculated to secure for the entire country the benefits of a restored Union.

For over twenty years the untiring industry and the genius of General Logan as a statesman is to be found on almost every page of the records of the House of Representatives or of this Senate; and it is a fact perhaps not generally known that General Logan originated and introduced more public measures than any other member; and we, his colleagues upon this floor, are familiar with that record, which is destined to grow brighter and more legible with the lapse of time.

Such was the openness and simplicity of his character and the candor of his demeanor that those differing most from him in conviction were the first to yield him that respect and regard due and given only to real nobility of character.

Logan's character presents three distinct aspects—that which relates to his career and services as a soldier, that which considers his eminent ability and services as a statesman, and that which pertains to his whole career, from the growth of the boy to the lamented death of an honored man. It is presented not only to the people of America but to the whole civilized people as a bright example to be held up to the illumination as well as emulation of every youth beginning his struggle with the world.

But who shall be able to do justice within the limits of a few minutes' eulogium to the brilliant record of a soldier who abandoned relations of family, kindred and friends, of party popularity, arraying bitter hostilities to himself, throws his whole energy with all the power of his vigorous young manhood and enthusiasm against the armed enemy of his country. During the storm of misrepresentation which always assails a man of such marked character, the sublime heroism of General Logan's first act in that dreadful ordeal through which our country passed has not yet received that appreciation which time and a considerate people will give it.

The popular idol of his party in a State of supreme importance during that crisis to the Union cause, recently elected after conducting a brilliant campaign by a large majority over his party opponent, with youth and strength, rare intellectual endowment as his heritage, let it be considered for a single moment what would have been the consequence if he with all his power and enthusiastic following had clung to the party of disunion. No man at this day can do more than form a conjecture of the terrible disaster which might have followed such an event.

Happily for the American Union, no such contingency was possible in the character of General Logan. In elevating him to honor and power the constituency then at his back had "builded better than they knew." With a rare self-abnegation and devotion to his country, he resigned political position, and offered his services as a soldier, in any rank, to his imperiled Government. Thousands upon thousands rushed to the defense in that hour of national danger, and every honor is due them all. While the brilliant military genius of General Logan, confessedly the greatest volunteer soldier of his or any other time, served his country with patriotic force upon the field of battle, yet the influence of his example in its effects upon an element which he undoubtedly turned from service against the Government seems, viewed from a dispassionate standpoint of subsequent developments, almost like a miraculous interposition in the affairs of men.

Others upon this floor have touched in flowery words and beautiful phrases upon these portions of our departed colleague's career, and I will only add the brief and feeling tribute of another to his military genius:

> Closing his career as a soldier at the end of the war in command of that army he loved so well, and whose devotion to him was so enthusiastic and unparalleled, in the temple of fame, in the great galaxy of heroes, pure and bright as the sun, firm and solid as the foundation of freedom, will John A. Logan forever stand. A soldier of transcendent military genius, a fearless, skillful, and accomplished leader, a peer among the commanders of armies, his name will go down to history the synonym of purity, loyalty, and patriotism.

Let me in brief terms refer to those traits of character which must ever be held as shining examples to the youth of the land.

General Logan was born and reared under adverse circumstances of an early Western frontier life. In his day there was none of the educational advantages possessed by the youth of the present time. Born in a cabin, his youth was passed in the hard labors of farm life. The few months of winters' schooling were assiduously utilized by the boy whom nature had marked for a brilliant future. But the ambitious youth was not content with these meager advantages. After the toils of the day were over and when the youths of his age were enjoying the pleasures of a social country existence young Logan was poring over books in his father's cabin and drawing from the fountain of knowledge by the aid of a tallow dip and blazing fire in the old-fashioned log fire-place.

Less than a half century ago the man whose loss is now mourned by the millions of America's freemen might be seen as a boy lying on the floor of his father's cabin, eagerly scanning his books in his thirst for knowledge, illuminated only by a flickering light, and intent upon an education which fitted him for that career he afterwards achieved. No more interesting picture can be placed before the youths of America than that which is thus presented by the ambiguous genius, asserting itself and achieving its destiny through adverse conditions and surroundings.

Fixing a standard of excellence high in the ideas of men, our dead colleague sought to reach the stars through almost insurmountable difficulties. Through a long and useful life he maintained principles which he had cultivated in youth; and amid all the brilliancy of his service in field and forum he left an untainted and unstained private and public character.

What an eulogy is this brief and simple announcement! A man enjoying unlimited opportunities that place and power conferred upon those of such strength of leadership, moving through an orbit of public functions for a whole generation, resisting the blandishments of wealth, faithfully serving his country, and in the end sinking to his rest poor in purse, though enormously rich in all of the virtues which ennoble humanity; indeed, this is a spectacle which must claim the admiration of the pure and the good. General Logan was a pure man and a good man.

A Christian gentleman, a man of temperate, simple, and frugal habits, his private life was spotless. No man living ever dared to approach him with a corrupt proposal.

It was indeed fitting that such qualities should have led the Republican party to honor itself by honoring him with the nomination of Vice-President, a nomination that added great strength to the ticket, and will ever be regarded as a wise and considerate act.

It is a common observation that General Logan was an ardent partisan. If by that expression is meant that he ardently devoted himself to the success of his party, it is doubtless true; but he was not a blind partisan. That he looked to his duty to the country, sufficiently appears from his whole public life. Such partisanship represents the high pride of American citizenship, and by it Logan has been raised to an exalted place in the hearts of the people. It is an open secret, but not a matter of public history, and therefore not generally known, that General Logan left his command in the field at the request of President Lincoln to bear a conspicuous part in the political campaigns during the darkest days of our Republic. In the light of these accusations of partisanship, let me ask you to observe carefully his generous and kindly sentiments in the eloquent appeal to his fellow-citizens in that famous speech at Chicago in 1863:

> Under circumstances of this character, and surrounded by the perils that have heretofore been strangers to us, it behooves every citizen to pause and reflect; to divest himself of all manner of prejudices, and to ask himself without regard to former party associations what duty he owes to himself, to his country, and to future generations. It makes no difference that you may have been a Democrat, a Republican, or an Abolitionist, this Government was established by your fathers for you; it is a sacred trust committed to you; the laws have been enacted by the people for themselves and their protection, and no one can escape the duty he owes to the Government to reverence its Constitution, to yield a respectful obedience to its laws. * * *

> May our untarnished escutcheon kiss every breeze that is wafted from the balmy waters of the South to the frozen regions of the North, or that comes from the golden plains of the far West to mingle with those in the East. May it be unfurled in honor and pride upon every ocean where civilization has penetrated, and stand side by side with the banners of the proudest empires of the earth.

An inscrutable Providence has removed a great and good man, and the memories which cluster about his name as a member of this body are so fresh and personal that we can scarcely realize the great loss which this Senate and country has sustained; but his useful life and shining example are left to guide the feet of coming generations.

His form we shall see no more, but his work and his character are ours forever; the body is dead, but the spirit lives—

> For there is no death;
> The stars go down to shine on a fairer shore,
> And bright in heaven's jeweled crown they shine forever more.

More fitting words can not be said of our dear friend and lamented associate than his own touching and eloquent tribute to the memory of the immortal Lincoln:

> Yes, his sun has set forever; loyalty's gentle voice can no longer wake thrills of joy along the tuneless chords of his moldering heart; yet patriots and lovers of liberty who still linger on the shores of time rise and bless his memory; and millions yet unborn will in after-times rise to deplore his death and cherish as a household word his deathless name.

Mr. PALMER. When the news reached me many thousand miles from here that General Logan was dead, I felt that something more than a great man had passed away. I felt that a great impelling force—a bulwark whose resistance had been never overcome—a cohesive power which bound together many atoms which otherwise would have been unrelated had been eclipsed.

Among the many prominent characters that have come before the public gaze in the last twenty-five years he can be assigned to no secondary place. Born in the then far West, where advantages were few, he had developed from within. He had evolved what was involved. All that he appeared to be he was. His nature could not tolerate meretricious aids if proffered. If he had been caught in the eddies and cyclones of the French Revolution he would have been Danton's coadjutor, if not Danton himself; Danton the furious, the generous, the unrestrainable, the untamed. His motto would have been as was that of his prototype, to dare, and by that sign he would have saved his country if human power could have availed. Placed in another environment, inspired by other traditions, his daring was none the less conspicuous, and he was none the less a factor in that memorable conflict which unified his native land.

Born in Switzerland he would have been a Winkelried or Hofer, had the exigencies of the times demanded.

If there is to be a type of the Caucasian race to be known distinctively as the American, it will have as its substructure spiritually the pronounced traits which have made the name of Logan famous—directness of aim, intrepidity of spirit, honesty of purpose, generosity for the vanquished, tenderness for the weak, and catholicity of feeling for all. Some of these qualities were at times obscured in him because of the intensity of his nature, which subordinated all things to the demands of the time and occasion.

He detested pretense. He denuded shams. He projected himself with such force that to me he seemed to have the dual nature of the catapult and the missile which it throws.

Others have spoken of his military career, of how he learned tactics and the manual at the cannon's mouth, of his legislative career with all the honor that attaches thereto; all this has become history. He enjoys the proud distinction, not only of military leadership which he achieved in common with others but of that of a leader and controller of the minds of men.

The spirit, the fire, the intensity, the insight, the fortitude which made him effective at the head of his legions were none the less potent when the sword was turned into the pruning-hook and material force had been supplanted by legislative methods.

My acquaintance with General Logan was confined to the last three years of his life, but I had known him ever since that fateful day when with his leader he was about to move on the enemy's works at Donelson. I had watched him at Vicksburg—on the march to Atlanta. I had followed him to the field, when, recovering from his wounds, he met his corps as it struck the sea on that dramatic march which captured the minds of men by the mystery which hung over it, the uncertainty of its outcome, the brilliancy of its execution, and the plenitude of its results. I heard of him again in the Senate. I saw him in defeat and always without variableness or shadow of turning. His face as a subaltern was as firmly fixed on the objective point as if he had been in command. He was no Achilles furious in action, who could permit his bosom friend and thousands of his fellows to perish that he in his tent might nurse and enjoy his wrath.

He was a partisan; but he was a partisan because he was a patriot. He did not "narrow his mind and give up to party what was meant for mankind," but he stuck to his party because it was his good sword excalibur with which he hoped to hew down giant wrongs and to accomplish great results for his fellow-man.

He was direct; because with the eye of a soldier and not through the lens of the schoolmen he saw the weak spot in the enemy's line and threw all he had and all he hoped for upon the salient point. His purpose did not "lose the name of action" by collateral issues. The side-tracks which divert or distract the philosophic or the less earnest might as well have not existed as far as their effect on him was concerned.

He was honest—not in the vulgar sense that he was unpurchasable with money—that goes without saying—but he had fixed views of right and wrong, and before the tribunal of his conscience he determined his course where the ways divided.

He was intrepid; his temper, iron-like, grew by blows, and in debate, as in the field, opposing forces stimulated and sustained.

He was generous; and although at times his indignation at real or supposed wrongs spurred him to extremity I never knew him to treasure up a hatred.

I was thrown with him during the last Presidential contest for a season in my own State. The canvass was bitter and exhausting. His capacity for work then illustrated was marvelous. The methods by which he reached the hearts of the people were spontaneous, subtle, and effective. His progress was an ovation. He never appeared without evoking the most rapturous applause, and he never disappointed expectation. He carried about him an atmosphere that attracted and cemented men to him. The secret was he was in rapport with the heart of humanity. No man so low but felt he was a brother, no man so high but felt he was his peer.

In the Senate he united the valor of the soldier and the temper of the legislator to the tenderness of the child with its quick resentments quickly set aside.

The last time I saw my friend he was at the head of a cavalcade at one of the fairs of our country. He had been impressed for the occasion and compelled to serve. He was the cynosure of all eyes. The men cheered, the women waved their handkerchiefs, and the children loaded him with flowers. It was as much a triumphal march as ever went up the sacred way with captives from remotest Gaul.

But one short year ago he helped to lay away his leader and friend in his narrow cell mid all the pomp and circumstance which people love to lavish on their heroic dead. Summoned by the same bugle-call to duty upon earth—the trumpet that shall call the one to renewed effort in the great hereafter will rouse the other to share his labors, his joys, and his triumphs. He has fought the good fight; he has finished his course.

If in another age, under other conditions, he had died like Danton, on a scaffold raised by those whom he had helped to save (I can fancy), he would have said, as Danton said to his friend when the mob were howling for his blood, "Heed not that vile canaille, my friend;" and again, as he stepped upon the scaffold, "O my wife, my well beloved;" and I believe the historian would have said of him as of Danton, "No hollow formualist, deceptive and self-deceptive ghastly to the natural sense, was this; but a man—with all his dross he was a man, fiery real from the great fire bosom of nature herself."

If, like Sidney, wounded and dying, he had lain upon the battle-field he would have been equal to the re-enactment of the story which has made Sidney's name a sweet savour unto Christendom.

But Providence had reserved him for a kindlier fate. The hand of affection cooled his brow and his eye had lost its speculation and the ear its sensibility before the tears and moans of those he loved attested to others that the strong man had at last met a power that was silently, speedily, surely bearing him to the dark house and the long sleep.

Amid the many heroic figures which stand out on the luminous background of the past quarter of a century none will be regarded with more affection and interest than that sturdy and intrepid form portrayed in silhouette, clear cut and pronounced in its outlines as in its mental traits.

Happy the State which has borne such a citizen. Thrice happy the people who, appreciating his virtues, shall give him a place in the valhalla of her heroes for the encouragement and inspiration of the youth of the future.

Mr. FARWELL. Mr. President, after the many eloquent words which have been said upon this mournful occasion, I feel that any word which I could say would be idle and vain.

General Logan was the bravest of soldiers, an able statesman, and an honest man.

No higher tribute can be paid to man than this, and this is the offering which I bring. The late President of the United States, General Grant, said to me that he could never forget General Logan's great services to his country. In battle always brave, never faltering, always ready.

He is greatest who serves his country best. And shall we not class him as one of these?

Mr. President, I second the resolutions of my colleague.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the resolutions.

The resolutions were agreed to unanimously.

Mr. CULLOM. I move, as a further mark of respect to the memory of General Logan, that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, February 10, at 12 o'clock m.

Strike out all after the enacting clause and in lieu of the matter stricken out insert:

"That the Court of Claims is hereby given, subject to the proviso hereinafter mentioned, like jurisdiction to hear and determine the claim of the legal representatives of C. M. Briggs, deceased, for the proceeds of 455 bales of cotton, now in the Treasury of the United States, alleged to have been owned, in whole or in part, by said Briggs, as is given to said court by the acts of March 12, 1863, and July 2, 1864, upon petition to be filed in said court at any time within two years from the passage of this act, any statute of limitations to the contrary notwithstanding: Provided, however, That unless the said court shall, on a preliminary inquiry, find that said Briggs was in fact loyal to the United States Government, and that the assignment to him hereinafter mentioned was bona fide, the court shall not have jurisdiction of the case, and the same shall, without further proceedings, be dismissed: And provided further, That if the court shall find that the alleged assignment from one Morehead to said Briggs, of date of April 18, 1862, under which said Briggs claimed said cotton, was intended only as security to said Briggs for indebtedness, and against contingent liabilities assumed by him for said Morehead, judgment shall be rendered only for such portion of the proceeds of said cotton as shall equal the moneys actually due to said Briggs at the date of said assignment, and such as were afterwards actually paid by said Briggs to or for said Morehead."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STONE] that the amendment be non-concurred in, and the request of the Senate for a conference agreed to?

Mr. SPRINGER. I object. I want this matter to go to the Committee on Claims.

The bill, with the amendment, was referred to the Committee on Claims.

BILLS REFERRED.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House bills of the following titles, returned from the Senate with amendments; which were severally referred as indicated:

The bill (H. R. 3760) to enlarge the jurisdiction of the probate courts in Wyoming Territory—to the Committee on the Territories.

The bill (H. R. 4083) to empower the Commissioner of Agriculture to transfer a certain appropriation—to the Committee on Agriculture.

The bill (H. R. 4308) to regulate steam engineering in the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

MAJ. MICHAEL P. SMALL.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House, with the amendment of the Senate, the bill (H. R. 4616) for the relief of Maj. Michael P. Small.

Mr. FINDLAY. I move that the House non-concur in the amendment, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

E. P. M'NEAL.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House, with the amendments of the Senate, the bill (H. R. 4839) for the relief of E. P. McNeal.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I ask unanimous consent that the amendments to this bill, which are merely formal, be concurred in.

The amendments were read, as follows:

In line 4, after the word "to," where it occurs the second time, insert "the personal representatives of," and after the word "McNeal," in the same line, insert "deceased, late of;" so as to make the bill read:

"Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the personal representatives of E. P. McNeal, deceased, late of Hardeman County, Tennessee, the sum of $12,781.81, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the same to be in full compensation for all property taken from the said McNeal by the United States Army during the war."

Mr. RICHARDSON. These amendments are rendered necessary because the claimant has died since the bill passed the House.

There being no objection, the amendments were concurred in.

JAMES M. M'KAMEY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House, with the amendments of the Senate, the bill (H. R. 5775) for the relief of James M. McKamey.

Mr. HOUK. I ask unanimous consent that the amendments of the Senate be concurred in.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let them be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 8, after the words "and to," insert "grant him an honorable;" in line 9, after the word "discharge," strike out "him;" in the same line, after the word "therefrom," strike out "as of the day before the date of his muster as a first lieutenant and recruiting officer for the Eleventh Regiment Tennessee Cavalry, and also to muster him as a lieutenant as aforesaid from the 1st day of October, 1862, and to discharge him from this last service as on the 1st day of November, 1864, that his record may be made consistent with the facts proven;" so as to make the bill read:

"Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion from the record of James M. McKamey, late of Company E, Third Regiment Tennessee Infantry Volunteers, who is reported to have deserted from his command, captured by the enemy at the battle of Richmond, Ky., and to grant him an honorable discharge therefrom."

Mr. SPRINGER. What is the effect of these amendments?

The SPEAKER. The bill as amended will remove the charge of desertion and grant the soldier an honorable discharge.

Mr. SPRINGER. All right.

There being no objection the amendments were concurred in.

H. C. WILKEY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House, with the amendment of the Senate, the bill (H. R. 6046) for the relief of H. C. Wilkey.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate amendment be concurred in. It simply strikes out a provision in the House bill which allowed interest on the amount of the claim.

The SPEAKER. The amendment will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the word "cents," in line 5, down to and including the word "eighty-two," in line 6.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the words stricken out.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the following:

"And interest thereon from June 8, 1882."

Mr. SPRINGER. What is the amount provided in the original bill?

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

The Clerk read the original House bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay to H. C. Wilkey, late postmaster at Columbus, Ky., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $307.87, and interest thereon from June 8, 1882, for Government money stolen from him by burglars, and which he was required to keep on hand to pay United States postal clerks with, the payment for the loss of which is not provided for in the act of Congress of March 17, 1882.

There being no objection the Senate amendment was concurred in.

SAINT PAUL, MINNEAPOLIS AND MANITOBA RAILWAY COMPANY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 10056) granting to the Saint Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railway Company the right of way through the Indian reservations in Northern Montana and Northwestern Dakota, returned from the Senate with amendments.

Mr. TOOLE. I move, by unanimous consent, that the Senate amendments be concurred in.

The SPEAKER. The amendments of the Senate will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 12, after "thereof," insert:

"And also to ascertain and fix the amount of compensation to be paid to individual members of the tribe by reason of the construction of said road."

Page 2, line 19, strike out "and."

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

MODERN NAVAL ORDNANCE, ETC.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a bill (S. 663) to encourage the manufacture of steel for modern naval ordnance, armor, shafting, and other naval purposes, and to provide heavy ordnance adapted to modern naval warfare; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, I ask, by unanimus consent, for the consideration of the bill, the title of which has just been read.

Mr. HOLMAN. I object.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask the bill be read.

Mr. REED. I ask that it be considered next Monday after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let it be read first.

Mr. REED. I ask for the reading of the bill.

Mr. ROGERS. I desire to know what is the title of the bill?

The SPEAKER. The clerk will read the bill.

Mr. EDEN. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will first state the gentleman's request.

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. Speaker, under the rules it belongs to the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks so; but the gentleman asks that the bill be considered in the House next Monday.

Mr. EDEN. I object.

Mr. REED. By whom is objection made?

Mr. SPRINGER. I object, then.

Mr. REED. The gentleman from Illinois; I thought so.

The SPEAKER. There are several gentlemen who objected.

Mr. REED. To whom is it referred?

The SPEAKER. To the Committee on Appropriations, unless the House orders otherwise.

Mr. REED. I desire——

Mr. CUTCHEON. Does it not under the rules belong to the Committee on Military Affairs?

Mr. REED. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. REED. Is this a bill which the Committee on Appropriations would have the right to report back for immediate consideration?

Mr. SPRINGER. I think points of order should be decided when they arise.

Mr. REED. I want to fix the responsibility of the refusal [cries of "order!"]—I want to fix the responsibility of the refusal to consider this matter.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, debate is not in order.

Mr. REED. I fix the responsibility on the Democratic party of this House.

Mr. SPRINGER. And we will take it here now.

Mr. RANDALL. The Democratic party is not afraid of defeating such a bill of jobs as this.

The SPEAKER. It seems to be partially for the support of the Government, and would go under the rules to the Committee on Appropriations; and that committee would have a right to report at any time under the rules.

Mr. REED. The committee will have the right to report at any time for consideration?

The SPEAKER. It will go to the Committee on Appropriations, which has jurisdiction of the subject under the rules of the House.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. REED. Then the committee have the right to report the bill back for immediate consideration?

The SPEAKER. The same as other appropriation bills.

Mr. REED. They will have a right to do that?

The SPEAKER. They will.

Mr. REED. I wish to know that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has answered the gentleman's question.

Mr. REED. I want to fix the responsibility for the delay, if there is any.

Mr. RANDALL. There is no difficulty about that. Such a bill ought to have careful consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will suspend all proceedings until order is restored upon the floor. Gentlemen will resume their places. [After a pause.] The gentleman from Michigan will now state his point of order.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Speaker, under the rules this bill should go to the Committee on Military Affairs under subdivision 11 of Rule XI.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to hear the point of order of the gentleman from Michigan, and gentlemen will preserve order.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Under subdivision 11 of Rule XI it is provided that all matters relating—

To the military establishment, and the public defense, including the appropriations for its support and for that of the Military Academy: to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Under subdivision 3 of the same rule it is provided:

That all matters relating to appropriations of the revenue for the support of the Government as herein provided, namely, for legislative, executive, and judicial expenses; for sundry civil expenses; for fortifications; for the District of Columbia; for pensions, and for all deficiencies: to the Committee on Appropriations.

My point of order, therefore, is that this bill should first go to the Committee on Military Affairs, in order that that committee may determine the question of policy in regard to the fortifications, and whether it be advisable to make the appropriations or not; and when the report from that committee is submitted to the House it would naturally go to the Committee on Appropriations to appropriate the amount necessary to carry it out. But in the first instance the bill should go to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to examine the provisions of the bill. [After a pause.] The Chair does not think that this bill, under the rules of the House, should go to the Committee on Military Affairs. If it goes to any other committee than the Committee on Appropriations it would go to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. REED. Under the statement of the parliamentary law made by the Speaker, I hope the bill will go to the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will refer the bill to the Committee on Appropriations under the rule of the House, unless the House by a direct vote orders otherwise.

Mr. RANDALL. What as to the point about reporting at any time?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has had but little time to look at the provisions of the bill. If this is a bill relating to fortifications or providing for the support of any public department of the Government, of course it comes within the rule of the House allowing the committee having jurisdiction of the subject matter to report at any time. If it does not come within the rule the committee will have no such power.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, my object in making the suggestion I have made is very simple. It is to have that bill referred to a committee which can have the right to consider and report it at any time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman's point.

Mr. REED. So that there may be some responsibility resting somewhere for a failure in the interest of the people to report the bill. The Speaker has expressed the opinion that under the rules of the House the committee will have the right to report the bill at any time. I am content that it should go to that committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has expressed an opinion, after a hasty reading of the bill, which may not be warranted by a more careful examination, that it should go to the Committee on Appropriations, and also that it comes within the rules of the House allowing that committee to report at any time.

Mr. REED. The Chair decides that it goes to the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that it goes to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. REED. I am content that shall be the course taken with reference to it.

Mr. SPRINGER. I want to say to the gentleman from Maine that so far as the question of responsibility is concerned, this side of the House is ready now and at all times to assume it.

Mr. REED. The gentleman from Illinois is not the spokesman of that side of the House. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] is, on this subject.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will direct the reference of the bill to the Committee on Appropriations; but if convinced by argument that the reference is erroneous, the Chair will have no hesitancy in correcting the reference.

MANUFACTURE OF HEAVY ORDNANCE, ARMY WARFARE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 662) to encourage the manufacture of steel for modern army ordnance, armor, and other army purposes, and to provide heavy ordnance adapted to modern army warfare, and for other purposes.

Mr. MCADOO. Mr. Speaker, I make the same point of order with reference to this bill that the gentleman from Michigan made with regard to the preceding bill, that under clause 11 of the eleventh rule, which provides—

That all proposed legislation relating to the military establishment and the public defense, including the appropriations for its support and for that of the Military Academy, shall be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs—that this bill should be so referred.

Mr. REED. I ask that the bill be read for the information of the House.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. REED. I make the same parliamentary inquiry as to this bill that was made with reference to the other; that is to say, if it goes to the Committee on Appropriations, will that committee be at liberty to report at any time?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that so much of this bill as relates to the procurement of ordnance—guns—has usually, the Chair thinks, been included in the sundry civil appropriation bill when any appropriation was made for that purpose at all, and the remainder of the bill, providing armor for fortifications, is a subject over which the Committee on Appropriations has jurisdiction by the express terms of the rule of the House. The Chair thinks, therefore, this bill properly belongs to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. REED. And they can report at any time for consideration?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already stated its opinion upon a bill on a somewhat similar subject; but the Chair has also stated that if convinced hereafter, upon a re-examination, that the ruling was incorrect, the Chair will not hesitate to retract it and correct the reference.

Mr. REED. A parliamentary inquiry. Will the Chair inform the House to what committee it can be referred, so that it can be immediately acted upon in committee and presented for consideration to the House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it should be referred to the Committee on Appropriations under the rules of the House.

Mr. REED. That committee, as I understand the Chair, will have the right to report it immediately for consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has so stated.

Mr. REED. The Chair will pardon me for my persistence in this matter.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already stated that in his opinion the bill will go to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. REED. But the Chair must permit me to explain my point of order. This is a legitimate question for the House to decide, because it may govern the action of the House upon these important measures. If the House desires this bill to be referred to a committee which can report for immediate consideration, that is an important parliamentary fact for the House to be in possession of, and the only person to whom the House can apply for a statement of that fact is its organ the Speaker of the House. Therefore I have asked the Speaker's opinion upon that subject and have been persistent in my inquiry. The Chair will understand therefore why I am persistent, because if the Chair should make a mistake of course it will allow the House an opportunity to rectify its decision as soon as the House gets the chance.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has decided that this bill properly goes to the Committee on Appropriations under the rule of the House, and if this decision is correct it would follow that the committee can report at any time.

Mr. REED. And the House sending it to the Committee on Appropriations gives them that power.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sends it there under the rule of the House, unless the House itself makes some other order.

Mr. REED. Then the Chair's sending it there includes the other question.

Mr. MORRISON. I call for the regular order.

Mr. REED. That is enough.

ADALINE P. LOY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 2479) granting a pension to Mrs. Adaline P. Loy, returned by the Senate to the House at its request.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask unanimous consent to reconsider the vote by which this bill passed the House.

The SPEAKER. This is a bill which passed the House, was sent to the Senate, and returned to the House upon request.

Mr. MORRILL. The reason for making the request is that the person to whom the pension is granted by the bill has already received a pension from the Pension Office.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the vote ordering the bill to be read a third time and passed will be reconsidered and the bill will be rejected by the House.

There was no objection.

WASHINGTON CABLE RAILWAY COMPANY, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill H. R. 8976, returned by the Senate with the following message; which was read:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, February 8, 1887

Ordered, That the Secretary be directed to return to the House of Representatives, in compliance with its request, the bill (H. R. 8976) to incorporate the Washington Cable Railway Company of the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will also in connection with this message lay before the House the following resolution:

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That the Clerk supply the omission in the engrossment of section 5 by adding after the word "stockholder," in line 4, the following words: "until the stock held by him is fully paid up," and return the said bill to the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is advised there was an omission in the engrossment of the bill. If there be no objection, the order just read will be made.

There was no objection.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. BARBOUR, by unanimous consent, leave was given to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, papers in the case of Thomas W. Tansill.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. THROCKMORTON, after Saturday, until the end of the session, on account of ill health.

HYLAND C. KIRK AND OTHERS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a request by Mr. HOWARD, that the bill (S. 2560) for the relief of Hyland C. Kirk and others, assignees of Addison C. Fletcher, reported by him on the 26th instant and referred to the Private Calendar, take the place on the said Calendar of the bill (H. R. 7649) of the same title reported on the 9th of April last, which last-named bill was laid upon the table on the 20th instant.

Mr. SPRINGER. I think I must object to this. As I understand, the bill is on the Calendar now at the proper place. I should like to know what the effect of this order would be.

The SPEAKER. The order itself shows what the effect is.

Mr. SPRINGER. The bill was reported and is on the Calendar. I object because I do not see now what the effect of the order is to be.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

RAILWAY THROUGH INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. As I am shortly to leave the city on account of ill health, I ask unanimous consent to call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 6393) to authorize the Fort Worth and Denver City Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes. This bill was called up before and ordered to be printed in the RECORD. Objection to its consideration was made at that time by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN]. That gentleman, I understand, has withdrawn his objection. I shall offer an amendment under instructions from the Committee on Indian Affairs. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be taken up and acted on at this time.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I objected the other morning to the consideration of that bill, but I am informed the portion of the Indian Territory through which it is proposed this railway shall pass has been ceded back by the Indians to the United States. I ask the gentleman from Texas whether that is so.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. That is correct.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Then I withdraw my objection.

The proposed amendment was read, as follows:

Amend by striking out of lines 9, 10, and 11 the words "Red River between the mouth of Big Beaver Creek and the mouth of the north fork of Red River," and insert the words "south boundary of said Territory between the west line of Wichita County, Texas, and the one hundredth meridian."

Also insert after the word "Kansas," in line 13 of section 1, the words "west of the west line of Comanche County, Texas."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6393) to authorize the Fort Worth and Denver City Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian territory, and for other purposes.

Mr. RANDALL. I understand that the bill has been read.

The SPEAKER. The bill was read and printed in the RECORD. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN] objected to its consideration, but he now states that, with the amendment proposed, he will not object. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and, being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. THROCKMORTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOHN A. THOMPSON.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I ask unanimous consent to take up the bill (H. R. 9414) for the relief of John A. Thompson and consider the same.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CUTCHEON. This is a small matter, involving only about $140.

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the proper accounting officer of the Post-Office Department is hereby authorized and directed to place to the credit of John A. Thompson, of Manistee, Mich., in his account as postmaster at said city of Manistee, the sum of $142.30, being the amount of postal funds lost by him by the burglary of his office, vault, and safe, on the 8th day of May, 1886, without fault or neglect on the part of the said postmaster; and the said amount is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be placed to the credit of the Post-Office Department.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and, being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. CUTCHEON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

COMPILATION OF PRESIDENTIAL VETOES.

Mr. BARKSDALE, from the Committee on Printing, submitted the following report:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, February 3, 1887.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the compilation of the veto messages of the Presidents of the United States, made in obedience to a resolution passed by the Senate on the 24th of July, 1886, be printed, and that 3,000 additional copies be printed, of which 1,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the Senate concurrent resolution for printing the compilation of the veto messages of the Presidents of the United States, and also for printing 3,000 additional copies thereof for the use of the Senate and House of Representatives, have considered the same, and respectfully recommend the passage of the resolution.

The estimated cost of printing 1,900 copies of the veto messages is $1,346.75, and for 3,000 additional copies, $1,335. The Public Printer estimates the approximate cost of the amount of printing previously ordered by Congress within the present fiscal year at $136,331.75.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. BARKSDALE moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

THOMAS SMITH.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri, from the Committee on Claims, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (S. 2024) for the relief of Thomas Smith; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

AMERICAN TRUST COMPANY.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported, as a substitute for the bill H. R. 10200, a bill (H. R. 11114) to incorporate the American Trust Company of the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The original bill (H. R. 10200) was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER (at the conclusion of the call). This completes the call of committees for reports. The hour for consideration of bills begins at five minutes past 1 o'clock. The call rests with the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice.

Mr. HAMMOND. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 6977) relating to the compensation of judges of the United States, attorneys, marshals, and commissioners, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. MCMILLIN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill indicated by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND].

Mr. REED. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] that I purpose to insist upon the point of order which I raised yesterday.

Mr. HAMMOND. I do not know any better time than now to have that point of order disposed of. I moved on yesterday that the committee rise and report to the House a resolution fixing a day for the consideration of this bill. To that motion the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] submitted a point of order that it was not in order until after the bill had been read. I am ready to have that point ruled upon by the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion is in order, if there is no disposition to amend the bill.

Mr. REED. I propose to amend the bill, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Of course, while there is a purpose to amend the bill members of the committee have the right to do so. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HAMMOND. Before proceeding farther, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS] desires two minutes in which to make a statement.

Mr. ROGERS. I rise this morning, Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of making simply a suggestion upon this important subject. As I remarked on yesterday, I have had occasion to give this subject as careful consideration as I could possibly give it and attend to the current business which necessarily devolves upon every member of Congress, and I say now that it is utterly impossible for us to legislate upon this subject without doing three things. First, we have got to study the existing law until we are familiar with every provision of it; secondly, we must investigate the modes of auditing and keeping these accounts in the Department of Justice and in the Treasury Department; and, lastly, we must understand exactly the surroundings and necessities of every United States court in the country.

Now, my suggestion is this: that no bill of this kind can be matured by any committee composed of gentlemen who have to look after the current business that necessarily devolves upon members of this House during the session of Congress, and if we ever effect anything which will carry out the objects and purposes which the committee had in view in framing this bill it must be done by a committee which shall sit during the recess. Except in that way we shall never, in my judgment, obtain anything that will meet the exigencies of the case.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, in reply to the suggestions of the gentleman from Arkansas, I desire to say that it never was supposed by the committee which reported this bill that it would be found perfect in every detail. We supposed that as a matter of course there would be propositions for amendment; and we understood that almost every member of the House had his pet district attorney, his pet marshal, his pet commissioner, or some other court official for whose compensation he was intensely interested. Hence we expected that members would submit these different propositions to the House for consideration. In preparing this bill, we took the bill which had been passed upon by the last Congress; and we undertook, so far as possible, consistently with the sentiment of Congress, to increase the compensation of these officers. I want to say now, and to put it upon record, that these gentlemen who are opposing this bill have an opportunity to correct its imperfections; and if there has been any injustice done to their pet officers, they can remedy that injustice now. What we desire is to change a system which oppresses the people, and put an honest set of officers in charge of the business connected with the courts of this country.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I think the House will bear me out in the statement that in all discussions of public questions on this floor I have never engaged in personalities or in imputations on any one's motives. If I were disposed to retaliate, in response to the remark just made in regard to "pet officers," I would turn to this bill for that purpose. But that is aside from the question under consideration. I want to say to my friend that the inequalities of the salaries in this bill are the least objectionable of its features. I am not prepared to say that a fair and just bill based upon the principle sought to be applied here would not be a desirable measure.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I wish to ask the gentleman in this connection whether, if he could have had the salaries of his officers in Arkansas fixed to suit himself, there would have been any objection on his part to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. ROGERS. And I answer the question in the negative emphatically. I do not object to consideration now. I say to the gentleman that if he would put the salary of each of the officers referred to at $10,000 I would fight this bill from the first line to the last until it had been amended and put in some proper shape.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I will state to the gentleman that that has not been my understanding.

Mr. ROGERS. Well, Mr. Chairman, I am not responsible for the gentleman's "understanding." He asked me that question this morning, and I answered just as I have done now. I do not know where he gets his "understanding." I have no keeper of my conscience or my convictions; therefore I do not know to what authority the gentleman goes to get his "understanding" of my motives or purposes. I do complain, and I have reasons for the complaint; and since the gentleman puts the question I will give him the benefit of some of the reasons why I do complain of the inequalities of this bill. Let me invite attention to them that the House may understand exactly what sort of a measure the gentleman is championing on this floor. I ask the attention of the House to what I am about to say. Before referring to the data which I hold in my hand I wish to state that I have not personally verified all these statements; but they have been prepared by a clerk in the Department of Justice upon an examination of this bill and of the records of the Department, on which, as I understand, the bill has been framed, and I think are in the main correct.

Let us see what is exhibited by this table of the salaries and earnings of these officers of the courts in some of the States and Territories. In the District of Columbia the earnings of the district attorney are more than $20,000—$20,900—while the salary is $5,000. In the district of Western Ohio the earnings of the district attorney amount to $3,900, and the salary is $5,000, just the same amount as is received by the district attorney in this city, who earns more than $20,000. In the district of Northern Georgia the earnings of the district attorney are $6,700, and his salary $4,000. In Maryland the United States district attorney earns $3,400, and the salary is $4,000. In the southern district of Iowa the earnings of this office are $6,700, and the salary $3,000. In Wyoming Territory the district attorney earns $1,000, and his salary is $3,000. In other words, the district attorney in Iowa who earns $6,700 gets $3,000, while the district attorney in Wyoming who earns only $1,000 gets the same compensation, $3,000.

Mr. MILLIKEN. If the gentleman is referring to marshals, does he not know that the marshal in the Territory of Wyoming has to travel a great deal farther and do much more work to earn $1,000 than the corresponding officer in the State of Iowa has to do in making what he earns?

Mr. ROGERS. I would prefer to go on with my argument. I understand there is something in the suggestion just made, but not enough to justify this bill.

Mr. HERMANN. Will the gentleman kindly mention what the figures are in Oregon?

Mr. ROGERS. I will try to do so, if I can put my eye upon them. In Rhode Island the earnings are $1,700, and the salary $2,000; in Nevada the earnings are $1,400, and the salary $2,000.

I will insert the full list as I have it in the RECORD.

The earnings of the district attorneys and salaries proposed.

Now let me turn for a moment to the marshals, so that we may see what sort of equity is done in this bill as to them. In the southern district of New York the marshal earns $6,300 and gets a salary of $6,000. In the northern district of New York the earnings of the marshal are $8,000 and his salary $5,000—$1,000 less than the salary of the corresponding officer in the southern district. In the southern district of Ohio the earnings of the marshal are $4,800 and his salary is $5,000. In Kentucky the marshal earns $7,200 and receives as salary $4,000. In eastern Louisiana the earnings of the marshal are $1,800 and his salary is $4,000. But in the western district of Arkansas, where the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GIBSON] suggests I have a "pet," the marshal earns $8,400 and receives as salary $3,000.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Is that the darkey in the wood-pile? [Laughter.]

Mr. ROGERS. The wood-pile is full of darkeys. And, sir, one of the "niggers in the wood-pile," just here, is the district attorney of West Virginia—no, of Virginia. The gentleman might investigate that. [Laughter.]

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I do not know what you refer to.

Mr. ROGERS. I know what I refer to.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. We will see.

Mr. ROGERS. I mean what I say.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I know what he refers to.

Mr. ROGERS. What are the facts?

I will go a little further. In the northern district of Alabama the marshal earns $7,600 and gets $3,000; in Florida he earns $1,500 and gets a salary of $3,000; and so on all through the list from the beginning to the end in reference to these marshals and United States attorneys.

Mr. HERMANN. Will the gentleman refer to my State of Oregon, as he has it now before him?

Mr. ROGERS. Tell me what class it is in; what does he get?

Mr. HERMANN. Three thousand five hundred dollars, I think.

Mr. ROGERS. Who; the marshal or the district attorney?

Mr. HERMANN. The district attorney. He comes in, I think, in the second class.

Mr. ROGERS. There is no class that gets $3,500 salary in the list of district attorneys, and it must be in the $3,000 class.

Mr. HERMANN. Look at that.

Mr. ROGERS. I do not turn to it conveniently at this time, but I will print the list and you can get at it.

But, Mr. Chairman, my chief objection is not the salaries. I wish to turn to some provisions of the bill which do not have anything to do with salaries of the United States attorneys or marshals. I wish to discuss that. I invite the attention of any gentleman who takes an interest in the correct administration of the law to this point. Let us look at it for a moment:

All money collected by the marshals on process in behalf of the United States or under the laws of any Territory, and all costs for fees, shall be collected by the marshal and paid into court.

"All fees taxed!" Everybody understands seven cases out of ten in many districts where the party is convicted he has nothing from which you could collect costs. Therefore the Government must pay the costs if they are to be paid at all. Let us proceed a little further:

The cost for fees and expenses of marshals taxed against parties other than the United States shall be collected and paid into court; and at the end of each quarter the marshal shall render a return of the money so collected to the Attorney-General with receipts from the clerks of the courts for the sums paid as herein required, which returns shall be verified by the oath of the marshal.

I would like some gentleman to tell me by what authority of law the clerk is required to give a receipt unless ordered by the court. The clerk is not the court at all; he is simply an officer of the court. The judge of the court is the party to receive these funds, and unless he makes an order for the clerk to receive them the clerk has no power to receive and no business with the funds, and it is not right for him to give a receipt for them, for he has not received them.

Mr. HERBERT. If this passes into a law would not the clerk then have the power?

Mr. ROGERS. No, sir; I do not know that he would. I know of no authority in this bill for him to receive the funds.

Mr. HERBERT. You say the bill requires the payment to be made to the clerk.

Mr. ROGERS. No, sir; I did not state any such thing.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I hope the gentleman will not consume all the time allowed on this matter.

Mr. ROGERS. I will not consume any more time than is necessary. I said that this bill requires the fees to be paid into court, not to the clerk; but the clerk notwithstanding is required by the bill to receipt for them, although he does not receive the money. He is also required to furnish the marshal with receipts for the sums paid into the court, and over which he has no power or control unless so ordered by the court. And then this bill further provides:

And at the end of each quarter the marshal shall render a return of the moneys so collected to the Attorney-General, with receipts from the clerks of the courts for the sums paid as herein required, which returns shall be verified by the oath of the marshal; and if this statement is not received by the Attorney-General within thirty days from the close of the quarter, no further payments shall be made the marshal on account of salary until such statement is received.

Yes, the marshal's pay is to stop if he does not furnish receipts from the clerk, which money the clerk had no right to receive and no power or control over.

Here is a bill now on its face requiring the money to be paid to the judges of the court, and the law makes the judges the depository of such moneys. It is true that he has it in his power to make an order that the clerk shall receive, receipt for, and deposit the moneys so collected; but in the absence of such order he is himself the depositary. It requires the money to be deposited with the judge, and the marshal is to make return to the Attorney-General of the money so collected and accompany it with receipts from the clerk of the court who has no authority to receive such money; and if such return is not made within thirty days from the close of the quarter, the marshal's salary is withheld. Can gentlemen reconcile that provision of the bill with the purpose they claim to have in view?

But let us go another step:

Upon application to him for service, the marshal, before service is made, shall exact a deposit for the costs thereof in all cases not brought by the United States, except in suits brought under chapter 3 of the Revised Statues.

And, Mr. Chairman, chapter 3 of the Revised Statutes relates to the organization of the two Houses of Congress, and has nothing on the face of the earth to do with the subject embodied in this section of the bill. In other words, here is a bill prepared by a committee of the House, submitted to the House for its consideration and action, that commits the mistake of taking a wrong title or chapter in the Revised Statutes which refers to an entirely different subject from that to which the bill relates. It has no reference, I repeat, to the subject matter of this bill. Does the gentleman deny it?

Mr. SPRINGER. It is possibly a typographic error.

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir; worse than a typographic error.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is no objection to the bill, because such an error could be corrected.

Mr. ROGERS. Oh, yes; you can draught the bill in any form you please, and then bring it into the House and try to get it in a proper shape by amendments. But this is your bill as you reported it. If it were mine I would take pleasure in denying its paternity.

Mr. SPRINGER. I think the original bill was correct; and, besides, an error of that kind is not fatal.

Mr. ROGERS. I do not mean to say that the error is fatal; but I am showing that this bill had not the consideration it deserved. But to continue—

Upon application to him for service, the marshal, before service is made, shall exact a deposit for the cost thereof in all cases not brought by the United States, except in suits brought under chapter 3 of the Revised Statutes for wages of seamen—

That is all right so far as it goes, but let us follow it up with the text—

wherein the costs, if not collectable from the parties to the suits, shall be charged by the marshal, clerk, and district attorney in their accounts against the United States, and shall be adjusted and paid by the accounting officers in the same manner as costs in cases brought by the United States.

Paid to whom? To whom are you going to pay the costs? The bill says to the marshal, the clerk, and the district attorney. Do you propose to pay them fees? The bill provides for salaries. What, then, is the meaning of this provision of the bill? These are cases of suits brought for the wages of seamen, and you propose in those cases that the marshal, district attorney, and the clerk of the court shall be paid fees when they are paid a salary for discharging, as you contend here, all of the duties of the office to which they are elected. Will you say this alludes to deputy marshals? If so, what do you say about the clerks and district attorneys? You couple all together and make no exception, and the clerk and district attorneys and their assistants all get stated sums under this bill, and not fees.

There is no explanation of this thing—none whatever.

But let us proceed a step further.

It shall be the duty of the marshal to scrutinize the bills of the deputies, sheriffs, or constables, or whoever may be employed to serve a process.

What kind of a process—civil or criminal, or both?

And when he finds the same to be correct and in accordance with law he shall pay the same.

What class of cases does that mean? If a criminal case and the costs can not be collected, what is the result? Why, you make the marshal pay, when a previous provision of the bill requires him to pay all costs "taxed against other parties than the United States" into the treasury of the court.

In other words, the costs are taxed against the defendant, and whether collected or not the marshal is charged with them. Then you make him pay the deputies, constables, and sheriffs—presumably out of funds advanced to him by the Government. The result is, if he has collected the costs in criminal cases, he is all right; but if he fails to collect costs taxed in any case he must make it good to the Government or else his salary is stopped.

Such is your bill. Who would want to be a marshal then?

Now I proceed to another section. If the gentleman can explain that section and the objections I have urged against it within the hour, I think he will have his hands full, even if this consideration extended over the next three weeks. It is so framed that no mortal man can amend it, for it does not even show the theory upon which the section itself is framed.

Mr. MILLIKEN. What section do you refer to?

Mr. ROGERS. Section 3.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. If the gentleman will remember, this is only a proposition for a day to consider.

Mr. ROGERS. The gentleman is worse on the situation to-day than when he framed the bill. I do not understand that there is any such motion pending. The trouble with the gentleman is that he wants to occupy the floor. Now I want to occupy it myself until I satisfy him that the imputations he casts upon me are without foundation.

I turn now to section 4 of the bill, and look at that; and I want to remark here that if it is regarded as a crime for a man to stand up for his friends, I am an avowed criminal. I always stand up for them.

Mr. SPRINGER. Right or wrong?

Mr. ROGERS. No, sir; but I always stand up for my friends in all cases when it is a proper thing to do.

Mr. SPRINGER. But your first statement was too broad.

Mr. ROGERS. No, sir; I think not. If a man is my friend I stick to him until he does something to forfeit my friendship, and then I abandon him unless he corrects it; not before.

Now, I turn to section 4, which provides:

That there may be allowed each United States marshal one clerk and one chief deputy, whose salaries shall be paid as provided in section 2 for the payment of marshals.

I do not discuss the question of how much the salary is. I am discussing now the organization of the court and the necessity for the courts of the country to have assistance for carrying on their works. "One clerk and one chief deputy." I take as an illustration the organization of the court located in my own judicial district. Does my friend from Illinois complain of the expenditure of public money in that district? That is the character of argument I supposed would be adduced upon that subject. But if the money is spent there, and spent properly, where is the responsibility, if responsibility attaches at all, with the court or with Congress? Is the marshal, clerk, or district attorney to blame? If you say the court is too large, whose fault is that? Not theirs.

I state from my personal knowledge that the court is in session almost the entire year from the beginning to the end of it. I state that we are not afflicted with that condition of things of which the gentleman from Virginia and the gentleman from West Virginia and gentlemen from other States complain with regard to the internal-revenue service. That court has to exercise jurisdiction over the five civilized tribes whose territory is infested with criminals from every State of the Union and of the worst class—a Botany Bay as it were, a city of refuge as it were.

This brings me at this point to invite attention to another matter. I remember discussing in the last session of the Forty-eighth Congress the importance of making necessary appropriations for carrying on the Federal courts in that country. I prophesied then what would be the condition of things. I hold in my hand now a letter from the marshal of that district in response to one I had addressed to him, having observed in the newspapers that the court had closed down because there was no money to carry it on, in which he gives me the condition and state of business in that court at this time, and I will give you the benefit of it. He gives me in his letter the names of all defendants in jail, and the charge made against them. For convenience sake I will give you an epitome of what he states. Remember the court is to be adjourned with the business certified to the April term, for the court holds four terms. The grand jury will meet and indict all the parties it can, but there was no money to pay the expenses of the February term, and locked up in that jail are no fewer than eighteen men indicted for murder, one for an unnamable crime, five for assault with intent to kill, eighteen for larceny, ten for introducing and selling liquor, one for violating the internal-revenue law. These men, fifty-four in number, are incarcerated awaiting the action of that court when funds shall be placed at its disposal. Then, in addition, there are on bond and awaiting trial ninety-three; bound over to the grand jury, twenty-eight, making a grand total of one hundred and seventy-five.

That is the condition of things we are compelled to deal with, and it illustrates the importance, the absolute necessity, of considering the organization of every court in this country when you come to provide for the officers to transact the business of those courts.

I am stating this to show the importance of that court, and what is required to run it. I repeat, in my judgment, that is the best organized court in the country. I have stood there and witnessed, myself, while a jury went filing out to consider a case which had been tried, and before they had left the court-house the clerk was calling another case and organizing a jury. The business of that court could not be dispatched on any other principle. It sits from 8 in the morning till 6 in the evening, with a short recess at noon, and often, for three weeks at a time, holds night sessions. That is the nature of the court.

Let me give you another illustration. I witnessed no longer ago than during the past few months seven men indicted for murder in that court and put upon trial at one time. Yet under the provision which the gentleman from West Virginia puts in this bill the marshal is only allowed one clerk and one chief deputy. He is allowed no bailiff, no guard, no anything for the carrying on the business of the court. He has got one chief deputy and one clerk to carry on this entire business.

Why, Mr. Chairman, if time permitted I could go into circumstances which occurred in the prosecution of criminal cases there which would show the necessity of having every movement about that court in handling the criminals safely protected. And this bill makes another limitation.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the gentleman permit me to state to him that there is no limitation as to bailiffs and guards?

Mr. ROGERS. And there is no provision for them.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. The gentleman from Arkansas does not understand the bill.

Mr. ROGERS. And you, what do you understand? [Laughter.] I think I do understand the bill. I think I have given it more study than your whole committee combined, and I think I understood more than some of them did before I began. [Laughter.]

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. That is, as it relates to your particular district.

Mr. ROGERS. That is what I represent—my district.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I understand that.

Mr. ROGERS. That is what I am elected to represent, and that is what they have continued me to represent in another Congress. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. That may be very complimentary to you, but it may not be so to them. [Laughter.]

Mr. ROGERS. I reverse the compliment, and say that the action of your constituents may have been complimentary to them. [Renewed laughter.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, I go a step farther in order that my friend may comprehend exactly how this matter stands. I turn to the ninth section of this bill, in relation to United States commissioners, and as the court appoints commissioners it will not be suggested that any one is my "pet," or that I have any interest here except the correct and proper administration of the law.

Section 9 provides:

That the judges of the circuit and district courts of the United States, and the judges of the Territorial courts, shall divide each district into commissioners' districts, consisting of one or more counties or parishes, and they shall appoint one or more United States commissioners in each commissioner's district, as may be required for the efficient and economical execution of the law.

How are you going to apply a provision of that kind in the Indian Territory? Are you going all over that country to appoint commissioners in every Cherokee and Creek, Choctaw and Chickasaw "county?" If you do, who is to represent the United States in the prosecutions before such commissioners?

The section proceeds:

Such commissioners shall have jurisdiction only of such offenses as are committed in their respective districts, except in cases of change of venue, or where no qualified commissioner resides in the commissioner's district where the offense was committed, and except, also, in cases of offenses against the postal laws of the United States, in which the jurisdiction shall remain as now provided by law.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the application of the principle of this section of the bill in the Indian Territory would simply turn over that entire Territory to absolute pandemonium. It is near enough to that now, but it would be much worse under the operation of this section. You go away out into the Indian Territory, 100 miles from nowhere, and set up a commissioner to investigate offenses committed there, with sometimes half a dozen charged with murder, and under investigation at once, the accused often wealthy, influential, and surrounded by friends; and your commissioner is to sit there and conduct an investigation of those cases without the assistance of the necessary marshals or other Government officers.

What will they know as to whether the accused is guilty or not guilty, unless there is some person present there to bring out the facts and cite the law?

Then look for a moment at the sixth section of the bill, which provides that deputy marshals shall be appointed in the manner provided in the foregoing section for such localities in the district as the judge of the district or circuit courts may authorize and require for the efficient transaction of the business of the United States courts of such districts in each locality.

Mr. HERBERT. Before my friend passes away from the subject of the commissioners, will he permit a question?

Mr. ROGERS. Certainly.

Mr. HERBERT. Does the gentleman think that local jurisdiction ought to be taken away from the justices of the peace, who are distributed through all the counties of Arkansas, because there may be no lawyer before them to prosecute in criminal cases? I think this bill is defective in many particulars, but the purpose of the provision in regard to marshals is to give local jurisdiction to commissioners to be appointed in the neighborhoods where crimes are committed, just exactly as justices of the peace are appointed throughout the counties of a State. It is proposed to appoint commissioners in the different counties so as to avoid the necessity of carrying men off 100 or 200 or 500 or 600 miles, as is now done in some parts of the country.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] has not enlightened me in the slightest. I knew what the committee were after, and in the main this provision might be applied to large sections of the country; but we are legislating for the whole country and for every district in it, and when we frame general laws they should be as applicable as possible to the whole country; so that the gentleman's question about the justices of the peace in Arkansas has no application to this case.

Mr. HERBERT. Then I understand the gentleman to say that he thinks the purpose is correct.

Mr. ROGERS. I stated in the outset, Mr. Chairman, that I thought I should support the principle upon which the committee have undertaken to frame this bill.

But the defects are so numerous and the provisions of the bill are such that it can not possibly be made applicable to the diversified circumstances of the various localities and districts throughout the United States. That is the purport of the criticism I am making. The operation of the bill in many of the States may work desirable results; but in this instance I think its provisions would be entirely inapplicable. Nor, Mr. Chairman, is it possible to make it applicable in this respect to the Indian country. Why is it not possible?

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman is mistaken in supposing that the bill applies to the Indian Territory at all; there are no counties there, and no organized government to which it could apply. A special law which is not interfered with by the bill puts this whole matter in relation to the Indian Territory in the jurisdiction of certain courts of Arkansas and Texas. This bill does not interfere with the existing law on that subject.

Mr. ROGERS. I decline to yield for further interruption. My friend's arguments are as usual loose-jointed. I do not think he has ever studed this bill; and he could not point out, to save his life, any special statute governing the western district of Arkansas with reference to the point under discussion. In that district the court has appointed one commissioner, who was found in the Indian Territory and who has been operating there a long time. That arrangement happens to accommodate one of the principal towns in that Territory where a great many persons are collected together, and where there may be some protection in these cases. But that instance is exceptional.

This bill, however, provides for this system in every county; its operation is not confined to districts in the States alone, but will extend everywhere; and it will certainly apply to all States which have within their limits Indian reservations.

I return to the provisions of the bill:

That deputy marshals shall be appointed in the manner provided in the foregoing section for such localities in the district as the judge of the district or circuit court may authorize and require—

Not localities in the State, but in the district—for the efficient transaction of the business of the United States courts of such districts in each locality.

No person shall perform the duties of a deputy marshal unless appointed and qualified in the manner herein provided—

That is, he shall be selected to serve processes in that particular district set apart by the judge—but district or circuit courts may appoint, upon the recommendation of the marshal, any sheriff or constable, holding commissions as such under State authority, to serve the writs or execute the processes issuing out of the courts in such district, after having been duly commissioned a deputy by order of the court.

Would not that be a beautiful position for a district court of the United States to occupy, to select a sheriff of a county or a constable to be sent all over the Indian Territory to execute process there?

In all cases where practicable it shall be the duty of the marshal to send writs and processes of court by mail, directed to the deputy marshal residing in the locality where writs are to be served or processes to be executed, or to the sheriff or constable appointed to serve the same in such locality, whose duty it shall be, after service, to return such writ or process by mail to the marshal.

What is to be done with the prisoner? Is he to be returned by mail?

Mr. RANNEY. Perhaps they arrest him by mail.

Mr. ROGERS. That seems to be the intention. I infer they are going to arrest him by mail, and then transmit him to court by mail.

Mr. STEWART, of Vermont. Or by telephone.

Mr. ROGERS. Yes; that would be quicker by telegraph or telephone. If this provision is intended to be confined to civil matters, why does not the bill say so?

Mr. SPRINGER. It was presumed anybody would know we did not propose to have a prisoner sent by mail; and we did not think it necessary to set that forth in order to enable the gentleman from Arkansas to understand the bill.

Mr. ROGERS. I had not supposed anybody would undertake to frame a bill which would require so foolish a thing to be done.

Mr. SPRINGER. It does not require it.

Mr. ROGERS. It provides for the return of the writ by mail, and that writ is the officer's authority to hold the prisoner. The gentleman has his own idea, and he thinks it is in the bill because he has it in his mind.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. We did not think it necessary to provide against foolish constructions.

Mr. ROGERS. My young friend from West Virginia [Mr. GIBSON] is almost through with his term of service, but he has not yet learned that he has no right to interrupt me without my permission.

The fees now allowed by law for marshals for serving writs and processes shall hereafter be allowed to the officers serving the same, except for committing and discharging prisoners; and the clause in section 829 of the Revised Statutes prescribing 50 cents for the same is hereby repealed. No fee for serving process shall be paid to a chief deputy.

Let us look at that provision for a moment and see what is its effect. The marshal, who is to receive a salary for the discharge of the entire duties of his office, will, under this bill, be entitled to fees if he serves the writ; and there is no law prohibiting him from making such service; on the contrary, he is compelled to serve it, or have it served, if it is given to him.

At this point, Mr. Chairman, I wish to state another fact. If this bill should go into effect according to its terms as they now stand, these marshals are not restrained from drawing fees. They may draw both salary and fees, because there is no conflict at all between the provision allowing such officer a salary, and the fee bill which fixes the fees allowed under the law.

Gentlemen will say it is repealed by implication. Now the rule of law is that no statute is repealed by implication unless there is an irreconcilable conflict between the two acts. The fact is, by the terms of this bill a marshal can draw his salary, and by the terms of the statute which it does not repeal, he may draw fees in addition; there is nothing here in the pending bill which says that he shall accept what is here provided as in full payment of the duties required of him by law.

Mr. Chairman, there are various other provisions of this bill subject to criticism. I may say, indeed, there is scarcely a section of it, unless it may be two or three provisions toward the close, that is not subject to criticism. I might criticise one section of this bill to show the looseness with which it is drawn. Take, for instance, the eighteenth section. Let us look at it.

That any person who steals, takes away, falsifies, mutilates, or otherwise alters, destroys, or conceals any book, record, or paper by law required to be in the custody of any marshal, clerk, or other official of the United States, or who counsels, aids, or abets such stealing, taking away, altering, falsifying, mutilating, destroying, or concealing of any such book, record, or paper, shall be guilty of a felony, and, on conviction thereof, shall be fined not exceeding $1,000, or imprisoned at labor not exceeding three years, or both, in the discretion of the court.

Why, Mr. Chairman, the taking away of any paper for any purpose is made felony, and according to the strict construction of this language an attorney of the court taking papers out of the clerk's office for a perfectly proper purpose might be liable under this bill to be convicted of felony. It is not provided that the taking away shall be with intent to do anything improper, but the bare, naked taking away under the provisions of this bill of any paper renders an attorney of the court liable to the conviction of felony.

I do not say, of course, that the courts when they come to construe this language would hold a party to be guilty of committing an offense unless the taking away was with some improper or criminal purpose. But liberty and character are too valuable to be imperiled by such legislation as this.

Now, I was about to say there are various other provisions of the bill which might be severely criticised, but I think I have said enough already to convince this committee that this is not such a bill as can be matured here in full committee in the usual way of amendment.

It is a bill involving the efficient and correct administration of the law in every Federal court throughout the United States. It digs up what has been in vogue ever since the foundation of the Government down to the present hour, and institutes a new order of things which we ought not permit to be done unless it comes from some quarter which understands better than this committee seems to do the use of the English language and the force of existing public law. [Laughter.]

I now yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND].

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Speaker, I desire to let the House know the real situation of this bill. I stated yesterday that unless we could have it reported to the House and a day fixed for its consideration, the further consumption of time was utterly useless. I said to gentlemen on the other side this morning, if you sustained the point of order I would immediately withdraw the bill.

I stated to the gentleman from Arkansas and the chairman of the committee the hour ought not to be consumed if the point of order was sustained. It is not my fault the hour has been consumed, because I have been anxious to make that statement to the House and get rid of it. The bill contains twenty pages and twenty sections. Of course, it would be utterly out of the question to consider that bill in regular order unless a day was set for it. I regret the gentleman from Arkansas has occupied the whole hour, so there could be no vote on that question.

I do not care to enter into the quarrel between him and the chairman of the committee. Who is first and who is last in giving offence is a matter of no concern to me. Being one of that committee I feel it my duty to say there are on it some gentlemen who understand the English language quite as well as the gentleman from Arkansas, and who know something at least of the laws of their country. They must rely on their character as an answer to the argument which he has made when no other answer can be made to it.

I desire to yield the balance of my time to the chairman of my committee.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday, while I was sick and absent from this House, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS] saw fit in his discussion of this question to raise an issue that it is impossible to take up this bill and examine it without almost impeaching the motives of the committee that reported it, so unjust and involved are its provisions. And, to-day, again, he has seen fit, by inuendo at least, to refer to the fact that one of the officers provided for in this bill is a brother of mine and a district attorney in the State of Virginia. There can be no other construction placed upon such language than that it is a personal implication of the purposes and motives, the character and the honesty of the man who reported the bill. I, for one, Mr. Chairman, do not mean either here or elsewhere to submit tamely to such arrogant and such impudent statements as that.

I want to say to the gentleman from Arkansas that it would have been better befitting him, as a representative of his people, to have accorded to others the same degree of honesty of purpose that he claims for himself.

So far as this committee went in reporting this bill they had before them for their consideration and their action the example of the House of Representatives itself, and the almost unanimous action of this Congress in its last session upon the bill.

The bill is founded upon the Springer bill, which at the last session of the House, as I have said, was almost unanimously reported with propositions reducing salaries much below those embodied in the pending bill.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will the gentleman permit me just there to make a suggestion?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Yes, sir.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Is it not true also that the Springer bill was gone over several times by the Department of Justice?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Yes; I was just coming to that.

Mr. MILLIKEN. And that this bill has also been gone over by the present Department of Justice, and is recommended by them?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Yes, sir; I was just coming to that point. This bill was founded, as I have said, upon the Springer bill of the last session. We framed the bill and submitted it to the Department of Justice, and the Attorney-General returned it, recommending certain changes, which we followed, and we reported them in the bill to the House, having been indorsed, as I have said, twice before by the whole Congress at the previous session, as well as by the Department of Justice. Now the gentleman from Arkansas who claims to be here as the representative of these officers in his district, boasting of his adherence to their interests, is the only man who rises upon this floor to impugn the motives of the men who reported this bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let me interrupt the gentleman for a moment?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. For the Lord's sake do not interrupt me. Let me proceed, as I have but ten minutes. [Laughter.]

I want to know how the gentleman from Arkansas arrogates to himself not only all the honesty but all the intelligence of this House. He talks here about the "English language," and about people who "considered" the bill. Does he mean to say here that he is the only man who has considered the bill? Does he mean to say that he is the only man who understands grammar and spelling? [Laughter.] Perhaps he came from a community where his superior intelligence may be a little greater than his constituents, and the ignorance of his constituents may account for the uncalled-for reflections made upon me.

He has referred to the fact that I have not been re-elected. Perhaps if I had been a corrupt politician, used "ring" methods, had been a demagogue [laughter], played with my people, I might have been re-elected like the gentleman has been. Why should there be the use of such language as that in a discussion of these questions?

Mr. Chairman, we have simply asked for the correction of a method which we thought had been doing a wrong all over the country. We have only asked for that which the Congress of the United States at its last session approved, and have sought to perfect it as far as possible. We do not claim that the bill is perfect. We admit that it is not perfect. It was not possible for the committee dealing the with officers in every congressional district throughout the land to do full and exact justice to all. We said to all let us consider the matter, give us an opportunity to get the bill before the House, and then offer your amendments to perfect the bill. We only ask you to give a day to consider it. If there is anything wrong in the bill you gentlemen can suggest the remedy and have the power to correct it. The committee has no desire to interpose objections. We want the bill perfected. There is no desire to be arbitrary; but as chairman of this committee I wish to say that it has no idea in the world of submitting to offensive and impudent criticism.

Now, Mr. Chairman, what is this bill and what is it in the bill that is so very wrong and which has been so very harshly criticised? We have sought the advice of the Department of Justice. We followed the opinion of the Congress of the United States exhibited by its almost unanimous vote. We went even further than that, as far as we dared to go, to increase the salaries of all of these officers, and tried to do justice to them all.

I have but one word further now to say, and that is, I am confident that this Congress will not attribute any false or impure motives to the committee that reported this bill such as the gentleman intimates. But I want to say to him now that if he dares to say on this floor that as chairman of this committee one single feature of this bill was formed on account of my brother being a district attorney in the State of Virginia, he slanders me here foully and falsely in the Halls where he knows it can not be resented.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask the gentleman from West Virginia to yield to me the remainder of his time.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. ROGERS. I have no eulogies to offer on my constituency, but if I had time and opportunity I should eulogize the constituency of the gentleman from West Virginia. It will be time enough, Mr. Speaker, to make use of such language as falsehood and slander when I have made some statement warranting it. I said what I did about his brother, provoked to it by that gentleman. I measured my language on yesterday, and I submit that there is nothing in it in which any gentleman can find offense. What I said was this:

> It is impossible to take up this bill and examine it without almost impeaching the motives of the committee that reported it, so unjust and inequitable are its provisions.

That is all that I said. My language was "without almost impeaching" [laughter], and was intended to emphasize the injustice and inequalities in the bill, and not to reflect on the committee at all.

Now let me invite attention to another matter. The gentleman drags his brother in here.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virgina. You referred to it.

Mr. ROGERS. Let us see how well he has taken care of his brother. The gentleman talks about his brother. I did not impute any improper motive on that score, but I will state just what is the fact: The gentleman's brother gets $3,000 under the bill, and he earns $4,400. He cut him down some. But he talks about my pet, alluding to the district attorney of my district. That gentleman earns nearly $7,000 a year and the gentleman allows him $4,000. So that he does not take care of my "pet" quite as well as he takes care of his brother.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ROGERS. Let me say only one word more in conclusion. I am not going to discuss this bill, but it is perhaps due the committee to explain.

The CHAIRMAN. That can only be done by unanimous consent. There was no objection.

Mr. ROGERS. The statement I made in my last remarks about the committee was too broad. It was induced by this fact, that one gentleman of the committee had said in my presence he had not given this matter any consideration and had never read the bill. This led me to suppose it had not been considered properly, and into making the statement I did. I now withdraw the remark so far as the committee is concerned.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask unanimous consent to speak for half a minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The hour for the consideration of measures under the rule has expired.

Mr. RANNEY. As the gentleman from Illinois speaks so rarely we will give consent.

Mr. SPRINGER. Does the Chair not entertain my request for unanimous consent?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would be very glad to do so, but under the rules the time for the consideration of bills has expired.

Mr. SPRINGER. Very well, I will ask leave to print.

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MCMILLIN reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 6977) relating to the compensation and duties of United States attorneys, marshals, and commissioners, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire, from the Committee on Appropriations, to submit an additional report on the legislative appropriation bill. I ask that it be printed.

The SPEAKER. The report will be printed.

COMMITTEE APPOINTMENT.

The SPEAKER also announced the appointment of Mr. MERRIMAN on the Committee on Naval Affairs, in place of Mr. Hewitt, resigned.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BELMONT. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the gentleman from New York can have but an hour to-day for the consular bill, I propose to raise the question of consideration, in order that I may have an opportunity to bring up a report from the Committee on Labor.

The SPEAKER. The only way to prevent the consideration of the consular and diplomatic bill is for the House to refuse to agree to the motion of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. O'NEILL. Very well. My purpose is to call up the letter-carriers' bill.

The question was taken; and the motion of Mr. BELMONT was agreed to—ayes 96, noes 16.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. BLOUNT in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of further considering the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. CANNON. I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. LORE].

Mr. LORE. Mr. Chairman, if there be one principle that has governed the Appropriation Committee, and, indeed, all the committees that have had appropriations in charge during the Forty-eighth and Forty-ninth Congresses, it has been that there should be no unnecessary accumulation of new offices or increase of salaries. This has pervaded every appropriation bill that has been brought in, and has so prevailed, it occurs to me, in recognition of a fundamental principle which underlies our Government and the uniform policy of the Democratic party.

Mr. BELMONT. Will the gentleman permit me a question?

Mr. LORE. I beg the gentleman's pardon, but I cannot permit myself to be interrupted. I have only fifteen minutes. I should willingly yield for a question if my time were longer.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this bill, as I understand it, makes increases in salaries and in new consulates alone to the amount of $269,880. If there is any necessity for such increase that would be some excuse. I have looked to ascertain whether this increase was made because of any increase in our commerce, and because of the increased labors thereby imposed upon our consuls and diplomatic representatives. When I examine that subject, I find that since 1881 our exports have decreased from $883,549,127 in 1881 to $688,249,798 in 1885; that our imports have decreased from $670,209,448 in 1881 to $587,868,673 in 1885; that the aggregate of exports and imports has decreased from $1,503,758,575 in 1881 to $1,276,118,471 in 1885.

Thus, it appears that there has been a decrease in our exports and imports of $227,640,104. Look now at the other factor, immigration. Between 1881 and 1885, the number of immigrants coming to this country decreased from 669,431 in 1881 to 326,000 in 1885. Thus it will be seen that our commerce has decreased about one-seventh; the immigration to this country has decreased one-half. In support of these statements I give the following tabulated statement of exports, imports, and immigration from 1881 to 1885:

Merchandise, gold and silver.

Year.	Exports.	Imports.	Total.
1881	$833,549,127	$670,209,448	$1,503,758,575
1882	767,981,946	752,843,507	1,520,825,453
1883	795,209,316	687 066,216	1,482,275,532
1884	749,366,428	629,261,860	1,378,628,288
1885	688,249,798	587,868,673	1,276,118,471

Exports decreased in five years	$145,299,329
Imports decreased in five years	82,340,775
Aggregate decrease in five years, or about one-seventh	227,640,104

Immigration.

1881	669,431
1882	788,992
1883	603,322
1884	518,592
1885	326,150
Decrease in five years, over one-half	343,281

So that we are confronted with the fact that, with a commerce decreasing to the amount of one-seventh, and a decrease in the number of people who come to our shores of about one-half, we have an increase in these salaries of from 25 to 50 per cent. Therefore, I say, when I look for a reason for this increase it is not to be found in our commercial needs. I know that the committee have suggested that there are certain reasons——

Mr. BELMONT. If the gentleman would allow an interruption he would have the reasons given.

Mr. LORE. The committee have given their reasons in their report, and I have heard them upon this floor. If I understand them correctly, one reason given is that by this means the revenue may be increased. The committee say that $270,000 will be turned into the Treasury, ($120,000 consular fees, now retained by consuls, and $150,000 from increased collections by honest appraisements and valuation of duties). They imagine that $150,000 will come into the Treasury from fees. It is the common experience, and every lawyer on this floor will bear me out in saying, that whenever you put officers on a salary the fees cease to be collected in the same proportion as before, so that the turning in of fees into the Treasury diminishes immediately and can not be relied on, and the prospective or imaginary revenue that is to come to the Government by the correction of invoices is so purely imaginary that I can not for a moment conceive that this House will be much influenced by that argument.

Another reason given by the committee is that new consulates and increased salaries will enable us to substitute American for alien and honest for dishonest consuls. This is an appeal to our patriotism by a gross reflection upon the character of our consuls and consular service, which, I hope, has little foundation in fact. As an argument, it is simply meretricious; but I can not see how these salaries, which, they say, do not exceed the fees that are now received by the consuls, are to change the character of the gentlemen who represent us abroad. It is not the amount of compensation, whether by fees or salary, but it is the character of the man that determines the question; and if the man is dishonest, whether he is paid by fee or by salary, will matter little. I feel sure our consular service does not merit this gratuitous attack or reflection at the hands of the committee.

But it is said (and this is the last argument urged by the committee in favor of the bill) that Secretary Monroe advocated the salary system, and that it has been advocated by Secretaries from time to time down to this date. The Secretaries, as a matter of convenience to themselves, may have advocated it, but, as has been well said by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. McCREARY], the Congress of the United States, which is the appropriating power, after a careful and thorough examination of the whole field, has as uniformly and as persistently come to the conclusion that it is unwise and unsafe to adopt this policy; and there should be strong reasons to induce Congress to reverse her well-settled policy in this regard. Certainly it is no reason for the creating of seventy new consulates and unreasonable increase of salaries.

These are the arguments and reasons offered by the committee in support of this bill. I submit to the members of this House that they have little basis, in face of the facts which I have stated that our commerce and immigration have decreased so that there must be and is less labor now than heretofore. What is there to justify this increase in salaries and this addition to the consuls? Are their salaries to be increased in order that they may do less work? For decreasing commerce necessarily implies a decrease in the amount of work to be done.

What would any member of this House think of a man engaged in mercantile business who found, year after year, that his business was steadily diminishing, yet who, as his business diminished, increased the number and pay of his clerks, in order that they might sit around, idle beneficiaries of his bounty? We have a dimishing commerce and diminishing demands upon our consular force throughout the world, yet we are asked to place upon the list twelve fourth-class consuls at the rate of $2,500 a year each, sixteen fifth-class consuls at the rate of $2,000 a year each, and forty-two sixth-class consuls at the rate of $1,500 a year each, an aggregate of seventy gentlemen who are thus to be pensioned off upon the Government at a cost of $150,000 a year, besides largely increasing the salaries of many consuls now well paid.

Mr. BELMONT. If the gentleman refuses to be interrupted I do not see why he insists upon misrepresenting the bill.

Mr. LORE. My friend will have plenty of time to reply to anything that I say. I say to him that I am now giving facts and figures, and that I have made no misrepresentations about the bill. If the facts of our diminishing commerce and the diminishing demands upon our consular force are a misrepresentation of the bill that is the fault of the committee who have reported it. I simply give the statistics as they stand uncontroverted in the best authorities.

Mr. BELMONT. I will be content——

Mr. LORE. I beg my friend's pardon. He knows that I have only fifteen minutes.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it may be that the State Department, with a fertility of imagination not founded on fact, thinks that our commerce is to grow again, that the seas are again to be covered with American vessels, and that emigration is again to flood our shores. These "maybes" always have golden wings; they have gilded bodies, and they buzz incessantly in the ear of the sensitive imagination, peopling the fancy with golden fruition and prodigious results, but they never make honey. We want to look at the facts and to stand upon them and not be led astray by sentiment or fancy.

Mr. Chairman, I confess that when this bill came in I was somewhat inclined to believe that it was a huge joke which was about to be perpetrated upon the House, and that we were not to be asked in sober earnest to make this unwarranted increase in new offices and salaries. Perhaps it is a grim legislative joke; it looks so.

Mr. Chairman, who is responsible for this attempt to change our traditional policy and launch upon a sea of adventure? The question has been asked again and again on this floor and no one seems willing to father the child. Have we become so diplomatic that we can not face in a manly way our own work? Does it emanate from the State Department, or is it the work of the Committee on Foreign Affairs bent upon some startling reform of a degenerate service?

I am unwilling to believe that the State Department advocates so radical a change.

The latest utterance of the distinguished head of that Department, sent to the Speaker of this House this session, reads as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, January 6, 1887.

SIR: In compliance with the requirements of section 194 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, I have the honor to report herewith the names of the clerks and all other persons employed in the Department of State, or in any of its offices during the year 1886, with the time each was actually employed and the sum paid to each; and to state that they have been usefully employed, and that the services of none of them can be dispensed with without detriment to the public service.

In answer to the further inquiry of the statute, namely, "Whether the removal of any individuals and the appointment of others in their stead is required for the better dispatch of business," I may say that, as the clerks of this Department have become trained to a degree of usefulness beyond that which could reasonably be expected from new appointees, I am not at present prepared to recommend any change.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

T. F. BAYARD.

Hon. JOHN G. CARLISLE,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

The list accompanying that letter contains the names and pay of 90 employés of the State Department, nearly all of whom were in the Department under the last administration. So that Department is opposed even to moderate, to say nothing of radical, changes. The present employés have heretofore been there, are there now, and will remain there. No change. Hence, it is just to infer this sweeping change does not emanate from that quarter.

True, there have been more sweeping changes in the ministers to leading foreign countries, removals made; and successors have been selected with marvelous care and judgment out of the great number of distinguished Democrats who were powerful in revolutionizing the country and insuring a Democratic administration.

In this respect no administration has met such signal success. It is only necessary now to go over in memory the list of such appointments, to find that leading Democrats, whose names were household words in the party in all the land, and who were brilliant diplomats and representative men in all respects, to convince one of the extraordinary judgment displayed.

These changes were, however, necessary. It only requires a life of study and duplicity to become an accomplished diplomat, and it is apparent that they should be changed often, while employés in the Departments may not be changed without imperiling the existence of our form of government.

Changes in ministers, not in employés of Departments, therefore, convinces one that the State Department is not in favor of change.

Mr. MILLIKEN rose.

Mr. LORE. Pardon me, I have not time to yield.

True it is that if the people in 1884 had adopted the sentiments of the distinguished head of the State Department, announced in the letter quoted, and by their votes then said in effect that the public servants then in power had become "trained to a degree of usefulness beyond that which could reasonably be expected from new appointees," and that they were not "at present prepared to recommend any change," the country would have been deprived of the benefits of the exalted abilities and services of the distinguished gentleman himself in his brilliant administration of the State Department, a calamity which we can only imagine, as fortunately the change has been effected Deo gratia to this extent.

You remember in the last campaign it was popular to advocate a change all along the line. On the stump, from Maine to Florida, the popular sentiment took form in the expression "turn the rascals out." Few men were more vigorous in denouncing fraud and the necessity for change than the distinguished author of the letter quoted. But the change was effected when the big ones went out and men of like caliber took their places, for further change is not recommended. Indeed, we are told that all now in are efficient and useful. Whether these old employés have experienced a change of heart or have been purified by contact with exalted purity and manliness we are not informed. But they have become transformed. I admit generally those now in office have become by their retention purified and are no longer rascals. [Laughter.]

Mr. REED. The admission is very pleasant.

Mr. LORE. There has been a conversion going on in the State Department. A great work has taken place, and they will no longer be considered as rascals. They are now men who can be relied upon in every respect. Their experience demands there should be no change. [Laughter.]

The State Department, therefore, is decidedly against change.

Again, this bill provides for two inspectors, detectives, or spies at an annual salary each of $9,000, including expenses, whose duty it shall be to travel all over the eastern and western continents and all the islands of the sea, wherever a consul, consular agent, or representative of the Government shall be, to watch their movements and report their shortcomings. This surely does not come from the State Department. It is a gross insult to the distinguished head of that Department that the select and honest men by him chosen out of the great number of patriots who are willing to serve their country should be subject to such espionage and indignity. The State Department was not organized to set rogues to catch rogues, but to appoint to represent our country in foreign lands high-toned and honorable men, representative Americans, whose fame, services, and characters are a full guarantee for faithful service. Are we not therefore warranted in saying this bill bears no ear-marks of birth in the State Department? It is too improbable. It must be a joke.

Perhaps the distinguished chairman of Foreign Affairs out of his abundant ability has been giving free reins to an exuberant fancy. It can hardly be the sober product of the matured statesmanship.

If it were meant for earnest I would pronounce it a bill to degrade our national character and ape European manners, in the prosecution of which snobbery would be the rule and flunkeyism the type of American manhood in our intercourse with foreign nations. It must have arisen from misconception in reference to the wishes of the State Department or in some strange misunderstanding.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. LORE. I ask permission to extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, it was my intention to yield for twenty minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. ALLEN], but he is not present.

Now, as to many of the increases of this bill I am quite sure I have not the knowledge to say whether they are wise or unwise. I do not know whether the Committee on Foreign Affairs has such knowledge. If these are wise now then most of them would have been wise ten years ago. I hold in my hand a report made by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SINGLETON], from the Committee on Appropriations, reporting the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill for the year 1877, from which report and the bill accompanying it, it appears that for the year 1876 making appropriations for the year 1877, there was proposed a decrease that year in the consular and diplomatic service from the prior year of $435,837.50. The act for the year before carried $1,374,985. The proposed decrease left the service to be provided for at a cost of $939,147.50. It went to the Senate and was amended there, so that the real decrease was $186,187.50.

Now, this bill, as reported from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, provides for a similar service for the next fiscal year at a cost of $492,647.50 over the acts for the year 1877, and at a cost of $742,297.50 over the cost recommended by the Committee on Appropriations and passed in this House for the year 1877.

The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SINGLETON], making the report for 1877, used this language: "Many consuls have been thrown into a lower grade, and other reductions have been made. The total change has resulted in reductions in the bill of $435,837.50 from the service for 1876."

I well recollect the debate upon that bill at that time. The gentleman from Illinois, my colleague [Mr. SPRINGER], whose harp now hangs upon the willow, made his reputation in the first instance in the House on that debate, favoring economy and ridiculing the consular and diplomatic service. I well recollect that our representative and minister at Greece was wiped out in that bill. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SINGLETON], who I see not before me, but who is yet a member of the House, and a member of the committee reporting the bill for economy in decreasing the cost of the consular and diplomatic service, made a great reputation. The gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] made a great reputation in the same line, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] came with his sledge-hammer licks, pounding down this service at the rate of nearly one-half million of dollars for the year 1877.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it would be interesting to turn back and read those debates, and then read this bill reported by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BELMONT], increasing the service over $742,000 per annum, what my colleague from Illinois and the Committee on Appropriations proposed it should be for the year 1877. All I have got to say is that the gentleman from New York may be wise in the views and opinions he recommends increasing these salaries so largely; but if he is wise, then all those illustrious gentlemen were foolish in 1877.

Mr. BELMONT. Will the gentleman permit me a moment?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. BELMONT. The gentleman said that my colleague, Mr. COX, is on the record, and, he thinks, as being opposed to the increase. I may say that Mr. COX himself made an urgent appeal to the committee to increase an item which we had already reported to the House, and we did increase it in compliance with his request. I have only to say, therefore, in response to the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois, that the times seem to have changed, and we have endeavored to meet the difference of opinion, and believe we have done so successfully.

Mr. CANNON. Yes, times have changed, the administration has changed, and, strangely enough, the gentleman's colleague from New York appears to have changed also.

In 1877 a Democratic House of Representatives was decreasing, or trying to decrease, this service $435,000 in a single year, under a Republican President. Now a Democratic House of Representatives, under a Democratic President, is trying at one leap to increase this same service more than $742,000 per annum over what your party said was sufficient under a Republican President.

I say again, your party recklessly crippled this service for 1877 for political effect merely, or your President in his message in insisting upon this increase, and you in giving it by the terms of this bill, are guilty of unexampled and vicious extravagance.

Mr. Speaker, I come to criticise for a few minutes a provision of the bill that I believe to be vicious, and at the proper time I shall make the point of order against it, and if that is not sustained shall seek to defeat it in committee and in the House. There is on page 21 of the bill a provision in the following language:

That section 3, chapter 287, of the Supplement to the Revised Statutes be amended as follows:

"After the words 'lower grade,' in the fifth line, insert:

"'Or consolidate any two clerkships of the lower grade.'"

Now, mark you, that looks very harmless; but what does it do? I turn to read the section referred to, as follows:

That whenever in the judgment of the head of any Department the duties assigned to a clerk of one class can be as well performed by a clerk of a lower class, or by a female clerk, it shall be lawful for him to diminish the number of clerks of the higher grade and increase the number of clerks of the lower grade within the limit of the total appropriation for such clerical service.

Now they propose to add, after those words "lower grade," the words I have read in the bill; so that it will provide that—

He may increase the number of the clerks of the lower grade or consolidate any two clerkships of the lower grade.

That amendment, Mr. Chairman, therefore, has a double action. In other words, if this section is in force and this amendment is adopted, all the detailed appropriations for the clerical service in all the departments, detailed at great length and after an examination by committees of the House and Senate, can be thrown into hotch-potch as though they had not been detailed, and you can employ more people at less salary or half the number of people appropriated for double the salary specified.

Mr. SPRINGER. How can you double the salary provided the appropriation for that class of service is limited?

Mr. CANNON. You can double the salary by reducing the number of employés one-half and using the total amount of the appropriation for their payment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to state to the gentleman from Illinois that the ten minutes which he yielded to himself have expired.

Mr. CANNON. I think I will yield five minutes more.

Now, I want to give a little history of this section of the supplement to the Revised Statutes which is proposed to be amended here, stating the reason for the enactment of this law, and then the reason of its subsequent repeal, because it is repealed. This bill proposes to amend a law that has no existence in fact. What, then, is the effect of this provision of the bill if it is enacted into law?

When our Democratic friends came into power in the Forty-fourth Congress that was called an economical Congress. They cut down the employés in all the Departments by the hundred. But as the work had to be done, the economical gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] conceived this section of the statute, namely, that he would permit the Secretaries of the different Departments to aggregate the salaries of all the employés appropriated for and employ people at a less salary. And for about eight years that system was followed. So that the service in the Departments was not in conformity with the appropriations. In effect we appropriated a sum in gross for the departmental clerical service, the expenditure of which was left to the discretion of the Secretaries.

To illustrate, you would appropriate for two fourth-class clerks at $1,800 apiece. The aggregate was $3,600, and five people at $700 each and a fraction over, could be employed and paid therefrom. I again say the appropriations as specified were no indication of the service as it in fact was.

In the Forty-seventh Congress the Republicans had a bare majority. Upon investigation we concluded to cut this system up by the roots and to do away with this abuse, for it had grown into a great abuse. And in the first session of the Forty-seventh Congress this provision was enacted, which you will find if you will turn to volume 22, page 255, of the Session Laws:

SEC. 4. That no civil officer, clerk, draughtsman, copyist, messenger, assistant messenger, mechanic, watchman, laborer, or other employé shall, after the 1st day of October next, be employed in any of the Executive Departments, or subordinate bureaus or offices thereof, at the seat of government, except only at such rates and in such numbers, respectively, as may be specifically appropriated for by Congress for such clerical and other personal services for each fiscal year; and no civil officer, clerk, draughtsman, copyist, messenger, assistant messenger, mechanic, watchman, laborer, or other employé shall hereafter be employed at the seat of government in any Executive Department or subordinate bureau or office thereof or be paid from any appropriation made for contingent expenses, or for any specific or general purpose, unless such employment is authorized and payment therefor specifically provided in the law granting the appropriation, and then only for services actually rendered in connection with and for the purposes of the appropriation from which payment is made, and at the rate of compensation usual and proper for such services, and after the 1st day of October next section 172 of the Revised Statutes, and all other laws and parts of laws inconsistent with the provisions of this act, and all laws and parts of laws authorizing the employment of officers, clerks, draughtsmen, copyists, messengers, assistant messengers, mechanics, watchmen, laborers, or other employés at a different rate of pay or in excess of the numbers authorized by appropriations made by Congress, be, and they are hereby, repealed; and thereafter all details of civil officers, clerks, or other subordinate employés from places outside of the District of Columbia for duty within the District of Columbia, except temporary details for duty connected with their respective offices, be, and are hereby, prohibited; and thereafter all moneys accruing from lapsed salaries, or from unused appropriations for salaries, shall be covered into the Treasury.

It was thus provided that no person shall be employed in any Department in the city of Washington unless he is specifically appropriated for, and at the rate appropriated for. And the pernicious section enacted under the lead of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] was repealed with all the laws opposed to this legislation of 1882. And that is the status to-day.

And now the Committee on Foreign Affairs reports a bill—to do what? Why, to enable you to take two $1,600 clerks, throw the salaries together, making $3,200, and employ one man at $3,200, when Congress supposed it was appropriating for two at $1,600 each.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CANNON. I will take five minutes longer now, because the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. ALLEN] can not conclude to-day in the time I would have yielded him.

Mr. BELMONT. Will the gentleman permit me a remark?

Mr. CANNON. Yes, sir.

Mr. BELMONT. The criticism which the gentleman from Illinois makes is applicable only to a portion of the bill. It is not applicable to that portion which concerns the consular system.

Mr. CANNON. I am not speaking now of the consular system.

Mr. BELMONT. I thought perhaps the House might have misunderstood the gentleman.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, no. I am speaking of that portion of the bill which the Committee on Foreign Relations have reported without ever having the matter committed to them to investigate and report upon.

Mr. BELMONT. Will the gentleman permit me? I will state to the House the committee did report this provision with a great deal of doubt. It was only upon the request of the Assistant Secretary of State, Mr. Porter, who visited the committee and made an earnest appeal. I think that this particular item is certainly amenable to a point of order, and it was not at any time supposed it would go through without the point being made. But I would remind the House again that the provision does not refer in any particular to the consular service or the diplomatic service. It refers only to the clerks in the State Department.

Mr. BUCHANAN. And let me ask whether the bill does not propose to that extent to amend a section which has been repealed and is not now the law?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly. I am stating that. And since the gentleman from New York has stated, for the purpose of absolving his committee from the responsibility of seeking to revive a law in this left-handed manner, that it was done at the request of the Department of State, let me say, when a Department, if that be true, seeks legislation of this kind, it has a tendency to weaken my confidence in its judgment as to some other portions of the bill.

Mr. BELMONT. Will the gentleman permit me again?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. BELMONT. The purpose of this provision is very clear whether it is amenable to a point of order or not. It is simply that the Department might employ a clerk of greater ability and better qualified without asking Congress for any increased appropriation. That is, it gives one clerk the salary now given to two. It is a question whether the House is willing to follow this recommendation, but the committee thought it only right to present it for the consideration of the House.

Mr. CANNON. Now, let us see whether or not it was right to present this provision or right for anybody to ask it. The Department of State has 78 employés, including the Secretary and assistants. There are 9,500 employés in all the Departments in the city of Washington. Now, for the purpose of getting the Foreign Affairs Committee to give one clerk or two clerks not authorized under the law this provision is sought to be enacted, and this law so revived and amended that the Secretaries of the different Departments can consolidate 9,000 places in these Departments and make 4,500 places at double the salaries, or they can make 18,000 places at one-half the salary where Congress in its appropriation only sought to make 9,000 places.

Now that looks to me like pretty serious kind of work. I do not believe the House will do it, or ought to do it.

But this is not all. On page 5 of the bill I find, under the head of "contingent expenses for foreign missions," provision made for "stationery, blanks, record and other books, seals, presses, flags, and signs for the several legations; also for rent, postage, telegrams, furniture, messenger service, clerk-hire, compensation of cavasses, guards, dragomans, and porters, including compensation of interpreter, guards, and Arabic clerk at the consulate of Tangier, and the compensation of dispatch agents at London, New York, and San Francisco, and for traveling and miscellaneous expenses of legation;" and what else? Why, in the same connection, immediately following these "contingent expenses of foreign missions," I find this: "And for printing in the Department of State, $105,000."

The Committee on Foreign Affairs had no jurisdiction to report that clause for printing in the Department of State.

Mr. BELMONT. I think that this time my friend is mistaken in his criticism.

Mr. CANNON. I may be.

Mr. BELMONT. I think it is a very important point that the State Department should be furnished with this facility as well as the other Departments. Only within a few days the committee has received some important correspondence which was printed in the Department. While my friend's criticism upon the other section of the bill may be well founded, the committee will defend every other portion of the bill, and I think successfully.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Chairman, having said that, I will go on to say that the matter of printing in the Department of State was not in the estimates referred to this committee. It is true that it was in the diplomatic bill of last year, but it was not committed to that committee. It was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, the same as the estimates for clerks and contingent expenses of the department here, and was investigated by the Committee on Appropriations. It may be that this is a very proper expenditure to make, but I recollect that the Committee on Appropriations thought it was not, because we already have a great Government printing office here in Washington, and for some years past that committee has not recommended the establishment of branch Government printing offices in the different Departments.

Mr. SPRINGER. Does it not happen sometimes that our consuls and ministers abroad require to have printing done at their posts in connection with the public service, and is not that a part of the contingent expenses of foreign missions?

Mr. CANNON. But this is for printing here in the Department of State.

Mr. SPRINGER. Well, it is all called the Department of State.

Mr. CANNON. And under that clause there has been established a public printing office in the Department of State.

Mr. BELMONT. It has been the practice of the State Department hitherto to have its documents printed in the other Departments, and that is a very detrimental practice, because there are many communications that should be kept secret for a time. For instance, the one to which I referred——

Mr. CANNON. I cannot yield for a speech.

Mr. BELMONT. I am merely giving the reasons for this item; it is intended to secure the secrecy of documents which ought not to be made public, and which, if they are printed and kept secret, can be printed only in the Department.

Mr. SPRINGER. Secrecy can be obtained at the Government Printing Office; I am quite satisfied of that from experience.

Mr. BELMONT. Not successfully.

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes; most successfully.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, if I had plenty of time I would not mind being interrupted; but I wish to say now that an investigation by the Committee on Appropriations showed that printing had been done at the Government Printing Office with greater dispatch and secrecy than anywhere else in Washington. It may be, however, that this item was necessary. My point is that the Committee on Foreign Affairs, not content with exercising its own legitimate jurisdiction, proposes in this instance to take the jurisdiction of other committees. I do not know what it will do next year, having made this good start.

Mr. BELMONT. Perhaps the Committee on Appropriations will relieve us altogether.

Mr. CANNON. I do not know but what it could do so with profit.

Mr. BELMONT. May be so.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I will yield to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. ALLEN].

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I believe there is a special order set for 3 o'clock, and it is now within five minutes of that time. When I once get warmed up it will be difficult for me to stop at the end of five minutes, and I know that the House would dislike very much to have me stop. [Laughter.] For that reason, sir, I ask unanimous consent that when this bill comes up again for consideration I be allowed to occupy the time now yielded to me by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. I will say to the gentleman that I have about fifteen minutes remaining.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. Twenty minutes, I think.

The CHAIRMAN. That will be under the control of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] when the committee resumes the consideration of this bill.

Mr. BELMONT. Mr. Chairman, in view of the special order, I move that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BLOUNT reported that the Committee of the Whole House had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 10396) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

KANAWHA AND OHIO RAILROAD COMPANY.

The SPEAKER appointed as managers on the part of the House in the conference upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the bill (H. R. 2646) granting to the Kanawha and Ohio Railroad Company the right to lay its tracks through the United States lock-dam property in the great Kanawha valley, West Virginia, Mr. TARSNEY, Mr. CRISP, and Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania.

THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE PRICE, OF WISCONSIN.

The SPEAKER. The hour of 3 o'clock having arrived, the Clerk will read the order heretofore made.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Wednesday, February 9, 1887, at 3 o'clock p. m., be assigned for the consideration of resolutions relative to the late William T. Price, late a Representative from the State of Wisconsin.

Mr. CASWELL. Mr. Speaker, I offer the resolutions which I send to the desk.

The resolutions were read, as follows:

Resolved, That the business of this House be suspended, that appropriate honors may be paid to the memory of Hon. William T. Price, late a Representative in Congress from the State of Wisconsin.

Resolved, That in the death of Mr. Price the country has sustained the loss of a patriotic citizen and a most faithful public servant.

Resolved, That, as a mark of respect to his memory, the House, at the conclusion of these ceremonies, shall adjourn.

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Mr. CASWELL. Mr. Speaker, while it is a sad occasion that now occupies the attention of the House, it is always a pleasure to speak of the life and character of a just man.

William T. Price, late a member of the House from the eighth Congressional district of the State of Wisconsin, departed this life on Monday, the 6th day of December, 1886, at his home in the State he had so faithfully represented upon this floor. While this sad event had been foreseen for some weeks by his family and friends, no one expected it at so early a day. But we shall not doubt that when the summons came he was prepared for the great journey before him. It was characteristic of him to be ready for whatever emergency awaited him. He had been for many years in public life a servant of the people, passing much time in the discharge of duties away from home and his own business affairs, yet it was his good fortune when the end came to be under his own roof, surrounded by family and friends, so near and dear to him.

The faithful wife, son, and daughter, for whom he had lived an honorable and industrious life, were with him to administer to every want and extend to him that sympathy which one's own alone can give.

The deceased was born in Pennsylvania on the 17th day of June, 1824, and was consequently at the time of his death 63 years of age.

In 1845 he emigrated from his native State to Wisconsin, taking up his residence at Black River Falls, where he continuously resided till his death.

During his whole life he was an active business man, being principally engaged in lumbering and farming.

But his usefulness was not confined to these pursuits. Many other branches of business gained his attention. He did not profess to be learned in the law, but he had a clear comprehension of constitutional government, and this enabled him to serve his people and fill with honor and distinction whatever position they saw fit to assign him.

He was elected four times to the senate of his State, and on one occasion he was chosen president of that body. He was also twice elected to the lower branch of the Legislature.

He was also for a while judge of the probate court, a court which administered most important and sacred trusts.

He was also collector of internal revenue, filling with great credit that most responsible position under the Federal Government. Finally, he was chosen a member of the Forty-eighth, Forty-ninth, and Fiftieth Congresses, increasing his majority at each election; the last exceeding that ever enjoyed by any member from the State of Wisconsin.

During his entire public life, extending through every position, State or Federal, which he held, I venture to say not a blot or stain can be found upon his record which would tarnish his efficient and most honorable service. Every page of that record, every act of his official hand, will bear the closest scrutiny.

As a business man he had few equals. He was an organizer and a projector. He planned and executed in a way that redounded not only to his own profit but to the advantage of his associates as well.

The laboring classes about him found at his hands a share in whatever he enjoyed.

He also enjoyed the confidence of the business men, and for many years was president of the principal bank in his town.

He had a positive nature, as all who have met him will testify. Whatever he believed he believed with all his might, and he had the courage to avow his convictions, as well as the ability to assert them; and yet he was a just man, taking censure himself when deserved as freely as he gave it when occasion required. Those who knew him in public or private life understood him to conceal nothing or take shelter. He struck boldly at the object of his attack. To accomplish his purpose he was wanting neither in zeal nor industry. His true character is well revealed in a paragraph which I take from a speech made by him while a member of the State senate in 1879, just before taking a seat in this House. On that occasion he said:

I did what I could to lift the fallen, the erring, and the weak, and place him on the platform of an independent manhood; that I never stood back for fear of party or shrouded my own convictions in doubt and uncertainty and gloom for fear of hurting a political party. I have an ambition to do my duty as a senator, to do all I can to help every poor, weak, erring brother that needs my help, and to fight every graceless, Godless, soulless scoundrel who would leap to personal aggrandizement upon the fallen fortunes and the wrecked lives of his fellows.

He was a great believer in the cause of temperance, and it may justly be said he was its leader in his State.

He possessed that faculty and good sense which enabled him to eliminate it from politics in his district, so far, at least, as he was concerned. In that way he brought to the cause no enemies or opposition, and it grew in strength till his district contained a greater number of temperance people than any other district in the State.

As a member of the House little need be said. The daily record speaks for him, and speaks better than any words of mine can express. Few measures of public interest failed to receive his attention.

He was a ready debater, and lost no opportunity to express his approval of or dissent from those measures when under consideration. His satire was often felt, if not enjoyed, by those in conflict with him, while his plain expression and great sincerity of purpose always won for him admiration if not approval.

He was an economist, guarding closely the interests of the people, and he did not hesitate, at all times, to condemn any unnecessary use of the public moneys.

In his death the soldier has lost a faithful friend—one who labored constantly to reward them for their patriotic services.

We shall miss him upon this floor; he will be missed by the people of his State; but he has left us here a legacy of good examples, his people at home the record of a pure and upright life, and a service while their representative that does them honor.

His many deeds of charity and kindness among his neighbors and friends will be remembered and cherished by all who knew him, and we trust that he is now serving in a sphere far better than the one he has left behind him.

Mr. THOMAS, of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, again we are called upon to halt in our legislative duties to chronicle death's resistless power and remorseless will.

William Thompson Price, a member of this House from the eighth district of the State of Wisconsin, died at his home in Black River Falls on the 6th day of last December. This sad event was a great shock and surprise to the people of Wisconsin and to the members of this House.

It is indeed difficult to understand that this strong man, of iron will, who has been a familiar figure and a great power in his own State for forty years, and who during his terms of service in this House showed such vitality and mental vigor, is no more.

It is among the good impulses of our human nature, cognizant of its own weaknesses and tenderly forgetful of the faults of those who have passed away, to unduly laud the memory of the dead; but, sir, I have the profound satisfaction of knowing that in recalling the incidents of the life of my deceased friend and colleague there is nothing in his career that needs the embellishment of flattery.

Those who knew him best will bear me out in the statement that in simple fidelity to fact and as honest an interpretation of the character and motives of the man as he himself could have made lies his best representation; no one more abhorred praises unfit—no one less needs them—and few could with more safety trust the memory of a long and public life to the scrutiny of mankind.

It is true, sir, that he was a man ambitious in the extreme of place and distinction. Such ambition, however, was not inspired by mere desire of personal elevation. He sought place for the work he could do in it. It might be said that his ambition was animated by an intense conviction that places of high trust afforded him opportunity of working out his own ideas of right and justice.

To such work he bent all the energies of a brilliant mind, an indomitable will, and a tireless purpose.

Often at variance with his friends and his party on important measures, so entirely honest was he in his convictions that more than an ordinary consideration was meted out to him; and still, so uncompromising was he in assertion of those convictions that I think it may be said of him that he made thereby the only enemies he ever had, for in his fearless advocacy of them he was oftentimes regardless whether his methods were gentle or rude, what antagonisms he created along the way, what foes he made, what friends he won or lost, anxious and intent alone upon the success of the principle for which he contended, the work he desired to accomplish, working faithfully even under disadvantages and great discouragements.

As one who knows where there is a task to do,
Man's honest will must Heaven's good grace command.

If obliged to sum up his chief traits in a few words, I should say that he was distinguished as self-reliant, self-asserting, and aggressive; qualities softened, however, by great good sense, and tempered by a desire to be just; that he was independent of thought and prompt of action; that he had great decision of character and an utter disregard of all those arts employed by the demagogue; that he was honest in his convictions and fearless in their assertion. He was a man of versatility, in that he could readily adapt himself to whatever circumstances surrounded him. As an illustration, he was entirely at home in the logger's camp in the pine woods of Northern Wisconsin, and was equally so in the drawing-rooms of the wealthy, and amidst the elegancies of polite society. He could turn from the perplexities of a large business to the social amenities of friendship and affection without effort. He could be "hail fellow well met," hearty, and unassuming, or stand upon the rostrum an eloquent and persuasive orator. It is not wonderful that such a man should be found popular in public and political life. He was a natural leader of men, and was early pushed forward to the head of the column.

In 1851 he was elected as a Democrat to the assembly of the State of Wisconsin, but upon the formation of the Republican party in 1854 he united with that organization, with which he remained as an ardent worker during the rest of his life.

He was a member of the Wisconsin State senate in 1857, 1870, '71, '78, '80, and '81. In 1882 he was again a member of the assembly. He also held many local offices in his own county, including that of county judge. He was Presidential elector in 1868; he was elected to the Forty-eighth and also to the Forty-ninth Congress, and was re-elected to the Fiftieth Congress by a greatly increased majority, amounting to about 12,500. A splendid triumph; and one the more a compliment from the sad fact that it was won without his leadership, or through any personal effort of his; won by the devotion and work of his people, while he himself lay upon his bed fighting for only a few days more of life—Death his closest comrade.

This grand triumph was, sir, not only due to the great personal regard and appreciation in which he was held as a man by his neighbors, but was in a great measure due to the acceptable manner in which he had performed his duties here.

During his entire service in this House he sought by his watchful care to guard not only the interests of those he immediately represented, but the interests as well of the whole country.

No gentleman on this floor was more careful of, or attentive to, or more conscientious in the performance of his duties than he. He was ready at all times to give his views upon public questions, which he did with that force, terseness, and logic charming to listen to, and which brought the subject under discussion and his views thereon clearly before the House.

In debate his utterance was remarkably rapid. He was probably the most rapid speaker in the House. His voice was most often heard here in behalf of the soldier, for he was pre-eminently the friend and the advocate of the rights of the soldier.

There are no people on the face of the earth so devoted and self-sacrificing as the people of America. No government has been so liberal toward its defenders, or has exhibited so much gratitude for devotion and sacrifice as ours. This sentiment was illustrated in all its highest bearings in the conduct and action of Mr. Price upon this floor. His patriotism, his gratitude, his noble pity prompted him to incessant and earnest work in behalf of the soldier; his voice was heard on all possible occasions in favor of liberal appropriations for the benefit of those brave men who stood in the ranks in defense of their country, and his vote was always given, accompanied by most earnest and eloquent appeals, in behalf of liberal pensions for the widows and orphans of those who had laid down their lives that the country might live.

The rights of the private soldier and those who by the death of the private soldier had been left to the care of the nation, he was the friend, the champion, the protector. Many a soldier suffering from wounds received or disease contracted in the service of his country, and many a poor widow and helpless orphan whose husband and father fell upon the battle-field, have reason to bless his memory for the efforts he made in their behalf; and when he died, none were more sincere mourners than they. It would scarcely be just to his record, or the memory held of him among the people of his own district, and indeed the entire State, not to mention the fact that he was a firm and unyielding advocate of temperance.

A contest into which he entered when the question was new as a governmental problem in his State, and in which he was a pioneer, and to which he brought the whole force of his character—advocating the doctrine of total abstinence and legislative prohibition, uncompromisingly and in the face of stern opposition, in utterance oftentimes bitter as it was fearless—never appearing to realize or care whether his extreme course might not prove disastrous to political ambition. To an ordinary man, under conditions then existing, it might have proved fatal, but so fully did the people know the honesty of his convictions that they were willing to follow in his lead, and twice was he honored by the nomination to Congress of the Prohibition as well as the Republican party.

Mr. Speaker, I have endeavored in this brief delineation of some of the most prominent characteristics of my departed friend and colleague, to show that in them was the active motive power of his life and acts, and that his character in mature life, as in early days, the direction of his purpose, and the secret of his large influence in his State, were the result of the development of these marked, and in some respects peculiar, traits. He was neither marred nor made by circumstances; if he did not create circumstances, he bent them to his will and use, and was always greater than they.

This, to the older residents of Wisconsin, stands proven fact; it was true of him in his early pioneer life; true of him in his successful business position; true of him in his political progress, and true of him in days of declining health, and when the severance of all human ties was made. Everywhere and always he was the self-contained, strong-willed, brave man; not an imitator, but simply himself.

The State of Wisconsin knew him well, believed in him, and delighted to honor him with its highest trusts.

The affection with which she will forever remember him is evidence of his loyal guardianship of those trusts, and his associates of this House will not go from the tribute and ceremony of this hour to soon forget the honor and worth of William Thompson Price.

We pass softly and with reverent tread from contemplation of the character and life of the man of busy habits and public activity to that of the husband and father, within the sacred circle of home life and love. We stand with bowed head and face averted in the presence of grief and anguish, too profound and comfortless for even the tenderest human sympathy to relieve, the broadest philosophy to support; but upon which the sweet and gentle suggestions of Christian faith fall with healing grace.

Coming years may bring to the lonely hearts there some surcease of sorrow, but no compensation for an irreparable loss. They may come laden with this world's comforts and brightened by the hope of future reunion, but between the dark and dawn there lies a wearisome stretch of time, and hearts bereft know best how grievous is the watch.

Out of that home and the light that dwelt there our friend has passed on to know another life and learn the lesson of immortal being. Let us leave him, then, in the presence of that great Mystery, before which we too shall stand some not far distant day, remembering—

* * there is a hope that all men have,
Some mercy for their faults, a grassy place
To rest in, and a flower-strewn gentle grave;
Another hope which purifies our race,
That when that fearful bourne forever past
They may find rest—and rest so long to last.

Mr. PETTIBONE. Mr. Speaker, once more the House of Representatives pauses for a brief space to mark its respect for the character of one, so recently among us in the full vigor of his powers, now, alas, too soon consigned to the long sleep and to the narrow house! That all men must sooner or later pay the debt of nature, that Death, with equal certainty, knocks his imperative summons at the gate of prince as well as peasant, is a part of the common knowledge of us all. And yet the unexpected departure of some men shocks us! And especially is this so when a strong, virile, manly man, one full to overflowing with decision of character, with intense individuality, and the courage of his convictions, like a warrior laying aside his armor forever, passes into the unbroken silence of the unknown!

It is not mere eulogy to say that William T. Price was such a man, nor that to us who so frequently shared his councils and knew his buoyant, hopeful spirit his death comes with a peculiar shock.

I would not, if I could, indulge in overpraise, or say aught of the dead which is unbecoming, because untrue. What I knew of our friend I learned from seeing him on this floor, and from hearing him in this forum. To those who knew him at his home, who are familiar with his life work in Wisconsin, who were long his associates and shared his labors before he came, the representative of his district, to Washington, I leave the duty of portraying the aspirations, the struggles, and the triumphs of his earlier years.

When he came here a member of the Forty-eighth Congress we soon learned that a strong personality had come among us. It was from the first seen that he was no novice in legislative work. He was a man, it was evident, who had opinions of his own, because he had seen, and read, and wrought, and thought. It did not take long to prove that he had a will of his own, and that he respected the convictions of others because he intensely believed in those which to him appeared to be true. His salient traits of character as they revealed themselves to me, from daily contact, as the months wore on, were energy and force of character, as evidenced by his tireless industry, and his close and discriminating attention to all that was done and to most of what was said upon this floor. He was an attentive listener to the debates, and when he addressed the House we knew he always had something to say; and he always said it with the directness and with something of the force of a cannon-ball.

His honesty of purpose was transparent and evident to us all. He was all through an ardent American. He had faith in hard work, in education, and in total abstinence. That he despised shams of every kind he demonstrated alike in public debate and in private conversation. He was urbane and gentle, yet he was firm and positive. His conscientious and high sense of duty shone out as clearly as the light of day. His wit sparkled alike in repartee and anecdote.

He was a believer in the rights of man as man, but he was no leveler or communist. He had acquired a competency for himself and an honorable place among his fellow-men by persistent hard work and perfect sobriety, running through many years. He served his constituents and served his country well and faithfully.

To me he was a noble specimen of the men of brain and brawn who, forty years ago, found the great Northwest an almost unbroken wilderness, and have since transformed it into an empire; and who have planted and built up those American, Christian Commonwealths, Wisconsin, Iowa, Minnesota, Kansas Nebraska! Surely, a great work in the world! A work which will stand, for it was wrought out in justice and in wisdom, and it has secured forever, let us trust, the liberty, the security, the prosperity, and the happiness of millions now living and of the millions yet to be!

In this great work William T. Price had no common place and no common share. As a farmer who transformed wild acres into fruitful fields, as a lumberman who led his axmen into the wilderness and gave employment to hundreds while he hewed out a competency for himself and family, as a judge of his county where he guarded the rights of the widow and the orphan, as a banker whose integrity was never questioned, as a member of both branches of the Wisconsin Legislature in various intervals of service running through thirty years, as a Presidential elector, as a three times elected representative of his district in Congress we see his life was a most active and honorable one. It was full of stirring incident, of manifold labors, and he has left his work and impress upon his time.

Our friend, we know, "was rich in saving common sense."

What were his private opinions touching man's relations to his Maker I can not undertake to declare, for here, at least, he was reticent on topics of the kind. I judge only from his daily walk and conversation. We saw that all his ends were true. A kinder heart, it seemed to me, never beat. He was clean, he was honest, he was just, he was morally pure.

No further seek his merits to disclose,
Nor draw his frailties from their dread abode,
There they alike in conscious trust repose,
The bosom of his Father and his God.

Honored shade of our late companion, hail! and farewell!

Mr. HUDD. Mr. Speaker, the second session of the Forty-ninth Congress convened under the law of our land December 6, 1886. Under a higher law, a supreme decree that intervened, that has so often intervened in the affairs of life and death in this Congress, our fellow-member for that Congressional session, my colleague in this Hall from the eighth Congressional district in the State of Wisconsin, the able, the fearless, the honest, the genial man, William T. Price, on that same day so set apart for our reassembling, in the early morning hour thereof, was summoned hence.

The previous question of fate had been successful in his case; there was no division of that motion, no tellers allowed, no objection to prevail, for the regular order of our common mortality had been reached for Representative Price; his bill of life passed and gone to that great majority that have crossed over the river of being and doing herein—earth—messaged to the Congress of a hereafter in the republic of the blest.

Our colleague was of that material that he may be said to have had all the human valor and Christian audacity that would rank him with the worthy militant, of whom it was said:

The Knight's bones are dust,
And his good sword rust;
His soul is with the saints, I trust.

William T. Price was born in Huntingdon County, State of Pennsylvania, June, 1824, and had nearly reached the age of sixty-four years at the time of his death; that death occurred at his home in Black River Falls, Jackson County, State of Wisconsin, on Monday morning, December 6, 1886.

Mr. Price came to Wisconsin in the year 1845. For more than forty years he had been a respected, worthy, and honored citizen of Wisconsin while it was both Territory and State. Wisconsin became one of the United States soon after he came within its borders, having passed from a Territorial state in the year 1848. In 1851 William T. Price made his first appearance in a legislative body, and at the age of twenty-seven he occupied a seat in the Wisconsin State Legislature as a member of the assembly thereof; and although one of the youngest and presumably least experienced members thereof, at once took rank in that body with men far his senior in years, and whose experience in other legislative halls would seem to have entitled them to high places and distinguished records.

Once again, in after years, Mr. Price filled a seat in Wisconsin's Legislative Assembly, namely, in 1882—then in the full maturity of his powers intellectually, and when he was then, as often before, a pillar of strength for his party and a legislator for the people who sent him there, and also for the general masses, not being bound merely by his district's lines, always in that State Legislature without peers that could overshadow him. A member of the State senate of Wisconsin during the years 1857, 1870–'71, 1878–'79, 1880, and 1881. The pleasant recollections of some portion of that senatorial career still lingers, must remain while memory holds a seat in the brain of him who now attempts this poor eulogy of his colleague, then and there in the capital city of Wisconsin my more than friend and associate always, and never more so than when that friendship and official association was transferred for both to meet here as colleagues in this capital city of the United States.

The deceased Representative filled the office of county judge of Jackson County, State of Wisconsin, in a court having probate jurisdiction in 1853–'54. He was undersheriff of his county in 1855, and an honest collector of internal revenues in 1863–'65. Chosen a member of the Forty-eighth Congress, he first came to the House of Representatives in December, 1883, and at once was recognized and made himself known and felt as a man of affairs and capacity. Re-elected to the Forty-ninth Congress, Representative Price was, during all the first part of the session thereof, distinguished on the floor as an active and persevering member, with his eye single and voice alert for what he thought the just and the best in legislation. On a return to his constituents and in answer to a third candidacy for Congress, he was at the November election of 1886 again chosen for Representative in and to the Fiftieth Congress from the eighth Congressional district of the State of Wisconsin by a majority of more than twelve thousand of his admiring fellow-citizens voting on that question.

In the exercise of a reasonable economy, strict honesty, and faithful pursuit of his business, that of a lumberman in the State of Wisconsin, the handling and dealing in pine lands and pine logs, the manufacture and sale of same when rendered into the lumber of commerce, made William T. Price a wealthy man; so that, unlike too many of our public men and elected servants of the people who die in office poor, save in honor and reverential memory, he was able to leave a fair fortune for his devoted wife and the mother of his also well-provided-for son and daughter—that son, who is treading so close in his father's foot-steps that we are pleased to have it to say now and here to the promising son who succeeds so illustrious a sire in the self-same legislative body that mourns its dead, we welcome thee for thine own as well as for thy noble father's sake.

William T. Price was not a scholarly man nor even of letters, if to be entitled and so to rank he must have passed the curriculum of the academy or been able to boast of his degree in arts and science from the universities of the land. His early education was that of the common school, and scant-taught hours at that; still, in the years of a busy, bustling, business life, in the woods, along the rushing rivers where he helped run the pine-tree trunks to the marts or mills, on the frontier almost, and for some while after he came West, of an approaching and soon to become enduring civilization that developed those wilds of a Territory into the fair rose, expectancy, beauty, and strength of a great State in our Union, he managed to acquire, the how and when is a mystery now to us all, the intelligence, the learning, the breadth and depth of all subjects that enter into the life of men who assume to control and seek to direct affairs for their fellow-men.

Thus did he become, and he was, the intellectual equal of any man who appeared on the stage when they were called for action, and into which arena he leaped full-capped, as it were, and most completely draped in stature and in mind, already the more than peer of any he in all the land that met him. The wit and power of repartee possessed by William T. Price will long be remembered here by those of us who so often enjoyed its exercise. His had the true Attic flavor about it, while it went straight to the mark, was pungent and exhaustive. It seldom left a sting behind, gross or sensitive as may have been the called-for retort or point inflicted. As an orator and public speaker Mr. Price was sui generis; his the very Niagara of vowels and consonants that fell from his lips ofttimes in the wild rush and torrent of invective, argument, pathos and humor, so that, as we have seen here in this Hall, as I have had occasion ofttimes to notice elsewhere, the not usually bewildered shorthand reporters threw their phonography to the winds, and thus say in effect, if not in these words, "Let it run; we can't catch Price's words on the fly." Yet those words, the logic and his conclusions, were nearly always apt and worthy of being received as

In Barnedino's leaves of gold.

It may be asked what, then, was the power in and with this man; so nurtured, so dowered with some if not many imperfections so common to our humanity; what was and is the secret of his success in life? For he was essentially a successful man, if wealth, honor, troops of friends, and all of that can be said to make a man a successful one. It was this; let it be now the open secret of Representative Price's whole life and successful career; let it be known and accepted by all, especially by the young and rising generation of men who would feign press on in his footsteps, to find a like success or further yet, than fate and time allowed the deceased to rise. Know all men, then, that it was the willingness and the ability to always avow and follow his own convictions on any subject or duty. In the better rendition of this truth he came to understand, believe, and declare—

To thine own self be true;
And it must follow, as the night the day,
Thou canst not then be false to any man.

Our late colleague was most true to his own convictions of duty, justice, and the eternal right. Not that he was always right, always logical even, or consistent with the fitness of times and things. Not so, far from it, some of us must say, to be loyal to our own convictions or logical with history and our conceptions of a better political economy we think he went astray upon. Still, it does not lower or change the argument that he so believed, so held was the truth—hence expedient, and so advocated and stood by it, though all the world arose in arms to combat him. He was the hero of his own; and in his own royal claim of right. These sterling traits in our late colleague were well illustrated in more than one direction and in varied fields of life, legislature, as well as in all his many and successful business pursuits, so that it became a common saying among the rough lumber boys in the Northwest lumber region, where he met and mingled with them in business affairs, "Bill Price and a square deal;" as significant as the maxim that his whole business life well illustrated, "Honesty is the best policy."

I must crave indulgence in this in memoriam to relate, or allude to, one or more incidents, showing that great quality of the dead. In the State that sent him here, as also in many other sections of the Union, has grown a new party, whose fundamental idea is prohibition as to the manufacture and sale of ardent spirits, wine, and beer. Mr. Price became a convert to this idea of prohibition, and that by legal enactment and through constitutional provision thereon. As he often related in my hearing, and as is well known to Wisconsiners as a matter of fact, there was a period when the life of the deceased was clouded and almost overshadowed by the immoderate use of intoxicants; but rising in his might and manhood, he choked a bad habit into a stingless memory, but still carried the recollection of his own near approach to the drunkard's fate in a bitter, unrelenting hate of all alcoholic beverages, forgetting that, in his one personal lapse, he might not be like others who could taste and not perish. This, however, was only one phase of that same trait of which we are now speaking, his conviction and belief carried into practice; it was not, politically, a wise or expedient move for him to make, for his party and his friends were not at that hour in favor of enacting prohibition; still, in the face of that almost apparent speedy end of his own ambition to still continue an elected leader of men, he spoke and acted prohibition on every stump in his district and in every legislative hall that admitted him. I call to my mind a most notable retort of my late friend in this relation:

In discussing this prohibition question in the Legislature of our State it was my lot to be nearly always opposed to the gentleman from Jackson, as Mr. Price was most always hailed, that being the county in the State of Wisconsin in which he resided, though it was in opposition to my own attempt at argument, and the wit of it directed against my own party it is, nevertheless, too good to let pass away without its record. As the orator was in the height of his output, the rapid flow of his three or more words to the second—all will now mentally recall that wonderful flow of sounds—a German member of the same legislative body that Mr. Price was then addressing arose to ask, if not to confuse, the temperance orator, far from being temperate in his choice of words and invective of the beer-makers and the beer-drinkers: "Will my friend from Jackson answer me one question, as he talks so much about the habits of the Germans and what they shall eat and drink? Does my honorable friend know the difference between saur-kraut and whisky on their system?" "Yes," quicker than lightning thundered the speaker, "yes, sir. One is for Dutch Democrats to eat if they like it, and the other to kill them whether or no."

So, too, in the year 1879 the Republican party were, as I remember it—and Mr. Price was nothing if not a partisan on most questions advocated by his party—committed to the immediate resumption of specie payments. Mr. Price did not so hold or believe at that period of time, and in the face of caucus party spur and hope of reward or fear of defeat he voted against specie resumption on the resolution relating thereto in the State senate of Wisconsin.

So again in this body that he entered December, 1883, and was a Representative here until his death, as before narrated. Our deceased brother on more than one occasion fully put himself in antagonism with his party rather than surrender what he honestly conceived was the right of the matter.

Solitary and alone, if I may use the now famous expression of Missouri's great Benton, did William T. Price in this Hall record his vote against pensioning the widow of General Grant, admiring Grant as I know he did from numerous expressions that fell from his lips, as the great soldier of our late war. Yet his convictions of duty said to him, "stay your hand here;" and the "no" that he dared to make audible on that occasion may be regretted by his friends, not sanctioned by the nation that can afford to be just to its heroes and liberally magnanimous to their descendants and dependents; still we may not stain his memory for the act that may not seem patriotic to some, it was no doubt to him as filial and dutiful as though it was his own mother's cause he declared his convictions of the duty of a public servant dealing with the trust funds of the nation.

He has gone beyond your censure, if censure you may have to give; gone beyond our praise, and all will find it now a pleasure to remember him only as the kind, the genial, the sharp, clear-voiced, but full-hearted man, who was our colleague in the Forty-ninth Congress from the State of Wisconsin. Requiescat in pace, William T. Price.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, the fact that William T. Price, after leaving his native State, first made his home in the State of Iowa; the fact that his brother, Hon. Hiram Price, long an honored member of this body, is a citizen of my State; the fact that the name of "Bill Price" is almost like a household word throughout the West, and especially in the States of Wisconsin, Minnesota, and Iowa; the fact that I knew him personally and intimately, and loved him well, according to my knowledge of him, all make me swift to embrace the opportunity to offer a few words to his memory on this sad occasion.

To judge accurately and justly of the deceased we must look at his start in life, and at his surroundings. There are many men in public life who are aided by kind and powerful hands. Many men get seats in this Chamber who have been helped to their places by potent friends. Many men have enjoyed the advantages of colleges, and of tuitors, and of wealth from the time they entered upon the investigations of life. None of these facts were true of the deceased.

BORN ON A FARM.

William T. Price was of good solid Pennsylvania stock. He was born to very little of the good things of life, for in those early days farmers did not have a great deal in the way of luxury, but had to fight bravely even for the necessities of life.

All the education, scholastic, that he had, he gained by a few short terms in the common schools. Yet he was an educated man when we saw him here.

I must differ from his generous, eloquent, and kind colleague [Mr. HUDD] when he says "there is a mystery as to how he got his education." I can tell you how it came to him. It came like the sunlight from Heaven. He was a man with a mind ever thirsting for knowledge, and with a heart always swift to respond to the sufferings of humanity. In the great college which gives the clashing conflict of ideas he found a teacher. His teacher was the brawny hand and the bronze face. His teacher was the mountain and the stream. His teacher was the face of poverty, and also the well-fed, the well-clothed, and the prosperous citizen. It was the widow's sigh and the orphan's tear. And he listened to his teachers, one and all. He had the grasp of mind to comprehend what they said and what they meant.

Mark you, at eighteen he was one of the best debaters in Huntington County, and sent for all round the adjoining country to talk on the temperance question. His lectures were by precept and by example and wholly without cant and sham. Hence his great influence.

And the debating club was the place he loved to be in long before he reached eighteen. I have talked with him about it and we agreed. He admitted so much neglected in these latter times, made more public men, more great lawyers, than ever were made in colleges. It was a little debating school in which was forged the sharp blade of the Edinburgh Review. It was there that Jeffreys and his confrères drew their inspiration and there they first laid the foundation of their gigantic power and mighty influence.

THAT THE DEBATING CLUB,

So the nation can thank the debating club for the inspiring power of speech and the acumen of William T. Price. He is my authority for saying so.

He landed first in the West from a steamboat at the little town of FORT MADISON, IOWA.

Marching up the levee he met, by pure accident, a friend of mine, now living in my city, Mr. Henry S. Hetherington, who had known him well in Pennsylvania. According to Mr. Price's statement, he did not have a dollar in his pocket when he touched Iowa. Yet he came up smiling, rich in the confidence of youth, in the confidence of integrity and of manhood. He knew he was entitled to fair, equal destiny in life, and he was prepared to fight his way to it like a man. He landed in Fort Madison, Iowa, and stayed ten days with Mr. Hetherington. He proposed opening a law office. He found there more lawyers in that little town than he had left in a much larger place. He said, "Henry, I am going to shake the dirt of this town off my feet and push for some point where there's more law business and fewer lawyers."

At once he started for

MOUNT PLEASANT, IOWA,

many miles west of Fort Madison. He had 25 cents in his pocket. He did not go on horseback. Nobody offered him a ride. He scorned the stage-coach; he went and opened a law office at Mount Pleasant, Iowa. As he told me "it did not pan out well," and in a few weeks or months he came back and took a steamboat up the Mississippi River.

Mr. Hetherington said, "Where are you going, Bill?" His reply was,

"I DON'T KNOW WHERE I AM GOING; up the river somewhere; I will stop at some place and try it on." When he reached Black River Falls, Wis., all he had with which to commence the battle of life in the wilds of that State was an ax upon his shoulder. No; not all. He had for a stock in trade, with which Heaven had richly endowed him, the will to work and the ability to execute.

Right here let me call the attention of his old colleagues, Mr. Speaker—though many of these points have been noted—to some of the followed. As I said, he was born upon a farm and followed farming for years when a boy, and he did so after becoming rich; he worked on a canal; he was a clerk in a store; he practiced law; he cut logs; he was a teamster; he cooked one winter for a logging camp; he ran a stage line; he was a preacher once; operated saw-mills, and was a merchant.

A MEMBER. I did not know that he had been a preacher.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. You did not know he was a preacher. He was once. I had it from himself and corroborated by others. I will tell you of that once, for it points the character of the man and the greatness of his soul. Once a stranger came into the pinery in which his business was being carried on, and was there trying to make a living. He suddenly disappeared, and as he had not been observing the injunctions of Mr. Price very strictly for a few days—I mean with reference to the temperance question—he, the deceased, became alarmed, lest he had been drinking too much and was drowned. No one was disposed to look for him. The boys said, "Oh, well, let 'im go; he'll turn up, and if he's drowned why he's drowned, and there's an end of it." Mr. Price said, "No, lads; we'll look him up, for he is a stranger and a poor man." He sent out skirmishers all around the vicinity, and went himself. They hunted for a long time, but could not find his body. At last toward evening some one reported that the body was found away down the river. Some of the boys suggested that they would draw cuts to see which should go and bury him. Mr. Price was there, and said: "No; not much. We will all go down. This fellow is entitled to a square deal." These were his exact words. He adapted himself to his audience, and he never failed to carry his audience and carry his point, for he was a born leader of men. They went and found the body, and the boys got a box, put him in, dug a hole in the ground by the banks of the river, lowered the box, and one fellow grabbed his spade and was about to throw in the dirt. "Hold on," said Mr. Price; "not yet. This man is a stranger; he has not a relative or friend near, perhaps not one on earth. I propose to speak a few words at this grave before we cover him up." He took off his hat, and the rough men working with him in the pineries uncovered their heads, and he then and there preached a sermon beside the running waters, under the lofty pines, that a Whitefield or any of the most eloquent divines might well have envied, in language suited to his audience, inspired by the surroundings; and he dedicated to God the place and the clay that was without a friend lying in their midst. When he finished every eye was paying tribute to the eloquent, feeling words of this preacher from the heart.

My friend from Tennessee [Mr. PETTIBONE] did not know about his religion. He said that Mr. Price "was reticent on this point." Away with your doubts about Mr. Price's religion. That man, whose life was godlike, that man who was near his God in season and out of season, by being near sorrow, suffering, and distress, be it in rude speech or rude ways, trust him with his God when he is called. His religion was all right. It was the religion that the Christ exampled and that Price followed wherever the moans of the sufferer appealed for help.

OFFICES OF TRUST.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as to the offices of trust that he held. I am measuring the man according to his opportunities—don't forget this. Nothing can be said here that can soften the sorrows of his relatives and friends; nothing that can be said here will add to the renown of the State that gave him birth or sent him to this Hall. I seek the humble lot of the historian, and aim only to do justice to him. Note how he was trusted. He was a long time at the head of his town council; chairman of the county board of supervisors for a long time. He was president of the Black River Improvement Company; president of his county agricultural society; he was deputy sheriff, county judge, county treasurer, collector of internal revenue, president of a bank, president of a railroad company, two terms a member of the General Assembly of the State, State senator, president of his State senate, Presidential elector in 1868 on the Republican ticket, and three times elected to Congress. How many men in this nation, starting in life in a little cabin in Pennsylvania years ago, can build such a pyramid as William T. Price has built? What a beautiful life! How strong he was! The great, honest, earnest, happy, pushing man of the people is an example for us all. He is a text for youth. Splendid type of a western pioneer!

What, Mr. Speaker, was his general character? Broad, deep, natural, and truthful, and rising, like the lofty trees among which he spent his life, toward the heavens. Some say he was a wit. I knew much of him, and loved to be with him. I never thought he was a wit. I can say that he was a humorist; and I may say, too, that no one who lived since Abraham Lincoln died so strongly resembled him. He was full of stories—stories that set his listeners in a roar of laughter. He loved stories for the fun that was in them, for nothing else, for a pure, clean heart was in his breast.

Wit he did use, but only in self-defense. Humor broke from him as the waters bubble from our Western springs, always refreshing and delighting those who came in contact with him.

HE WAS AN ORATOR.

Yes, that has been claimed. Not an orator according to any of the laws of rhetoric, but he had the oratory of mailed truth, of honesty, of conviction. He said what he believed and he said it like a man and in any presence. He was a good deal as Roderick Dhu was as described by Sir Walter Scott, and who, when accused of having murdered a person in the presence of the king, said:

And heard'st thou why he drew his blade?

And then, after depicting the insult he had received, said:

He rights such wrong where it is given,
If it were in the court of Heaven.

So with William T. Price. He met insult or injury as they deserved to be met and upon the instant of their delivery. I loved the man for the perpendicular character which he possessed, a character which made him, it might be a lion now and an infant a moment later. It was a beautiful character. Kind!

HE WAS A GENEROUS MAN.

My heart warmed last night to the just and generous tributes paid to the memory of Mr. John Arnot, of New York. Here was another Arnot. Generosity was the controlling law of his nature. Not for show. Not for comment. Not for man's eye. When the war broke out he was heavily in debt, having met failure as a merchant in partnership with another. His creditors were suffering, and it was so that he could not himself go into the Army without leaving debts and dishonor behind him. For ten years he toiled and paid off every dollar of the debt, his own and his partner's, with 10 per cent. interest.

During that time his wagon carried flour, pork, vegetables, delicacies for miles around wherever there was a Wisconsin home that had sent out a soldier to protect the country's flag leaving a woman and little children behind. He owned stage lines during the war. He discharged a man once for allowing a soldier to pay for his meals while going over his stage line. The boys home on furloughs with their arms in slings or on sick furlough always had their meals paid for and rode free on his stage lines. He never paid for one that had gold stripes on his pantaloons or wore shoulder straps. He seemed early in the war to conceive a sort of dislike for the shoulder-strap fellows, and that feeling followed him into this body. I understood that and made allowance for it on some occasions when I thought he erred and when I differed from him. But the common soldier could not get a dollar of his money into William T. Price's pocket for riding on his stage lines, and he paid no money for his meals as he went over miles and miles in his coaches.

I have not touched half of the points that I had outlined in my mind, but I have consumed double the time I should on such an occasion. I must close my remarks. But let me say this one word in closing: Not one member of the Congresses of which William T. Price was a member has photographed himself on so many hearts as did William T. Price. His monument is written in the hearts of the poor, and on the statutes of the land are monuments that should quicken the ambition of every American citizen. The great secret of his power as a public man lay in his friendship for labor, for the poor, and in keeping close to the great, warm, pulsating heart of the masses of the people.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, in this fitting ceremonial of personal and official respect to the memory of a dead colleague, this pause in the transaction in the public business, we bring into prominence the truth that beneath our partisanship and broader than our differences is our recognition of the worth of true manhood and the kinship we hold to our fellow-citizen. In our hearts we feel that striving for a common end—the public good—and working for the same result—the glory of a beloved country—are those who bear the commission of the people, though the differences of view may be great and the collision of opposing beliefs bitter.

It is not at the grave only that we give utterance to this; in the social intercourse which makes many hours pleasant, and in the mutual confidence founded on esteem we attest this pleasant truth. But in scenes like this we make formal and public avowal in the presence of the nation that Democrat and Republican, from whatever section coming, are citizens of a common country, freemen loving liberty, men struggling for lofty ends, and this we avow by the side of an open grave and in the august presence of the dead. To such ends was this colleague devoted; in his own peculiar way, according to the light given to him, in harmony with his training, his past life and his environments, with the power of his will and the force of his nature—these were his objects here; and whether we agree or disagree with the views he uttered or the mode he adopted we reverently lay on his grave the wreath of our respect and appreciation, recalling with a grave and chastened pleasure all that was admirable in his life and agreeable in his association.

Mr. Price was a typical product of our country and times. Active, restless, keen-witted, earnest, self-contained, he had early found a new home in a Western State, and assisted in building that State. While he was a man of marked individuality and decided traits, free from the slightest flavor of imitation, he was yet a typical East-Western man, a man born in an Eastern State, but early transplanted to the West, and giving evidence of his Western life and work.

We are, Mr. Speaker, a nation of emigrants, springing from an ancestry of exiles. We are colonists—not adventurers. We build homes and found States. For years this House has had in its membership men whose fate it had been to lay the foundation of States, and be fortunate enough to see their work prosper in their hands. This is the peculiarity of our English-speaking race, and this the work we Americans are specially called to do.

Our ancestors began this work on the coast of the Atlantic. Their sons pushed into the interior, their grandsons climbed the Appalachian range and turned their faces to the setting sun, and so the advancing emigration crossed the Mississippi, conquered the continent to the shores of the Pacific, and found no cessation in the work of State building. Farmers as well as lawyers, mechanics and preachers, the sons of toil and the alumni of universities, on terms of absolute equality, accomplished the marvelous labors which have made us a nation of thirty-eight States. In such labors men broaden, grow, develope. He who has to conquer the forest to open his own land, who has to construct his own government to secure protection for life and liberty—he who creates a new home with free institutions with all that is implied in such a phrase unconsciously educates himself to high pursuits and lofty aims. In our generation has been added the indescribable training of a great war.

And so from the new States in that great, imperial Western land, whose hand is outstretched for the scepter of power, and whose fast increasing communities will demand a large share of dominion, representatives have come, educated amidst such labors and developed in such scenes. Not always trained in the learning of the schools, nor familiar with the traditions of the past, but trained in a successful battle with life, conscious of their power to think and act for themselves, and clear in the object they desire to accomplish and as to the means necessary to secure the desired result, they have greatly influenced the legislation of the past twenty years; ever potent in the settlement of the questions the country has had to consider, and their power will constantly increase.

As the questions growing out of the war pass away and new issues arise this fast-growing West will become more potential, will modify our national policy with its views, if it does not, indeed, mold it to its purposes. This is not the time nor fit occasion to forecast what will be the extent of this influence, nor the modifying power of the great and growing South who sees before it a brighter and ampler day. It is only my purpose to emphasize what were the elements and characteristics of our dead colleague that impressed me in our short service together. He represented that West; he shared in its hopes as he had participated in its triumphs.

Entering Congress a stranger to him, rarely agreeing with the views he uttered, widely differing with him on all the great questions of the day, as well as in our past opinions, our personal intercourse never became more than the pleasant interchange of salutations and friendly colloquies. But I soon recognized his power and thought I saw the causes of it, and fell into the habit of listening to him when he spoke and meditating on the reasons which induced his course. He was a valuable representative; watchful, alert, resourceful, somewhat iconoclastic, not overly reverent, always incisive and ever hitting hard, he caused investigation, provoked attention, excited debate, sometimes exposed shams and tore off coverings, and thus prevented careless, if not improper, legislation. In such a body as this such a legislator is often a most useful and always an interesting member; and I doubt not I voice the sentiment of the whole House that he has been missed this session—his absence appreciably felt.

As to the private and personal qualities and ties of Mr. Price, I have nought to add to what has been said by those who knew him better than I, and who speak from a knowledge and affection to which I am a stranger.

It is the common lot of man to be born, to live, to die, to be forgotten. Here and there, scattered very thinly along the pathway of the progress of our race, are a few immortal names, and of these few are only names; rare indeed are they who survive to posterity in the full statue of their real manhood. If this were all, life and toil and sacrifice would indeed be not worth the living and the pain; but this is the very least—the worker may be forgot, the work remains.

The work of our hands lives after us. In the sum of human happiness—in the aggregate of human achievement—in the total of human glory, our labor is counted, our toil forms part, our very tears glisten! This is the sublime truth which gives courage and feeds our love! Obscure though the labor be, the race we love is aided thereby; bitter the sacrifice it is necessary to the glorious consummation.

In the Pacific, the coral laid the foundation, and through the ages, by scarcely perceptible accretions, slowly built the base of islands, working into the imperishable column its own life and tomb, until countless lives and mausoleums pushed the ceaseless work above the restless bosom of the ocean. Then the birds of the air brought from distant lands various seed; the kindly sun gave them life through death, and, invincible to the storms of the sea, the island became beautiful to the eye, the air ladened with the fragrance of sweet flowers and melodious with the carols of birds.

Compared with the innumerable hosts of the sheeted dead of the past and the advancing armies of the future, we are scarcely more than corals, and we build our lives and our tombs into the mighty edifice in process of erection by our race; assured that it will stand unmoved by all storms, crowned with the lustrous radiance of eternal sunshine and filled with choral songs of surpassing melody. But unlike the coral, it is not all of our lives that we thus build into these walls.

Looking beyond the grave I avow the profound conviction of the reality of that other and nobler life to which death is but the opening door. I summon the long and glorious procession of our predecessors in this House to bear testimony to this truth—soldiers, sages, statesmen, patriots, who gave your lives to your country and your race, whose spirits are this day so great a cloud of witnesses, attest the verity of the fortune which awaits us!

He who is the Father of all takes from us our two mites, and in the divine alchemy of His almighty love they become rich unto some good work. Standing by this grave I reverently bow my head in thankfulness that in the divine economy it is to the purity of will, the love of truth, the earnestness of faith—faith in our race, faith in our future, faith in all good, faith in Him who is "the all good" that the true reward is given, not of applause and crowns and fame, but of an approving conscience and a fruitful life.

Mr. WINANS. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH], the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, of which committee Mr. Price was an active and valuable member, intended to submit some remarks upon this occasion, and, as he is unavoidably absent, I ask unanimous consent that he be permitted to print them in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

Mr. CASWELL. Mr. Speaker, there are several other gentlemen who desire to bear testimony to the character and worth of our deceased colleague, and I ask unanimous consent that they also be allowed to submit their remarks through the RECORD.

There was no objection.

The resolutions were then adopted; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to a resolution of August 4, 1886, an estimate of the Second Auditor of the amount due the Soldiers' Home on the books of that Department; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Supervising Architect of that Department, recommending an appropriation of $9,500 for the completion of the approaches, &c., of the public building at Toledo, Ohio; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Supervising Architect of that Department, recommending that the limit of cost for the construction of the court-house, &c., at Jacksonville, Fla., be increased to $250,000; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in response to a resolution of February 3, 1887, a report, with map, in regard to the excavation of a straight channel in the harbor of Sandusky, Ohio, on Lake Erie; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

SENATOR FROM INDIANA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented resolutions adopted by a joint convention of the two houses of the General Assembly of the State of Indiana; which were read, as follows:

Resolutions of the joint convention of the houses of the General Assembly of the State of Indiana, contesting the validity of the election of Hon. David Turpie as United States Senator, as declared by Alonzo G. Smith.

Whereas, at the joint convention of the senate and house of representatives of the General Assembly of this State, held in this hall yesterday, February 2, 1887, it was declared by the Hon. Alonzo G. Smith, a member of the senate of said Assembly, that Hon. David Turpie had received the majority of all the votes cast in said convention for a Senator in the Congress of the United States; and

Whereas it was declared by the speaker of the house of representatives, presiding at said joint convention, that there had been no legal election of a United States Senator; and

Whereas it is believed that there were enough illegal votes cast for said Hon. David Turpie at said election in said joint convention to overcome the apparent majority of votes cast for him, and therefore said election was illegal: Therefore,

Resolved, That a committee of five be appointed by the chairman to prepare the proper and necessary proceedings to present to the Senate of the United States the facts showing such illegal votes, to the end that an investigation into the declared election of said Hon. David Turpie to that honorable body may be had; and

Resolved, That this convention recommend to the house of representatives of this General Assembly that an investigation of alleged illegal voting at said joint convention, held on the 2d instant, be instituted, promptly and thoroughly prosecuted with a view to ascertaining whether such illegal votes were or were not cast.

STATE OF INDIANA, Marion County, ss:

I, Warren G. Sayre, speaker of the house of representatives and president of the joint convention of the fifty-fifth General Assembly of the State of Indiana, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true and correct copy of a resolution adopted by the joint convention of the two houses of said General Assembly, held on the 3d day of February, 1887.

INDEMNITY TO CHINESE SUBJECTS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2225) to indemnify certain subjects of the Chinese Empire for losses sustained by the violence of a mob at Rock Springs, in the Territory of Wyoming, in September, 1885; which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the sum of $147,748.74 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be paid to the Chinese Government, in consideration of the losses unhappily sustained by certain Chinese subjects by mob violence at Rock Springs, in the Territory of Wyoming, September 2, 1885; the said sum being intended for distribution among the sufferers and their legal representatives, in the discretion of the Chinese Government.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have looked at that amendment and compared it with the bill; and as it seems to accomplish the same purpose and perhaps in a simpler way, I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The amendment was concurred in.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT DETROIT, MICH.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1131) to amend an act to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Detroit, Mich., approved March 2, 1885. The amendments of the House of Representatives were in line 20, before the word "thousand," to strike out "three hundred" and insert "twenty-five;" so as to read "one million twenty-five thousand dollars;" in line 44, before the word "thousand," to strike out "three hundred" and insert "twenty-five;" so as to read "one million twenty-five thousand dollars;" and in line 52, before the word "thousand," to strike out "three hundred" and insert "twenty-five;" so as to read "one million twenty-five thousand dollars."

Mr. PALMER. I move that the Senate non-concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives, and ask for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. MAHONE, Mr. VEST, and Mr. PALMER were appointed.

I present the petition of the Genesee conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, praying for the passage of the Chinese outrage-indemnity bill, and further legislation to protect the lives and property of Chinamen in the United States. The indemnity bill has been passed by both Houses, but as the petition prays for legislation in the direction of protecting Chinamen in this country, I move that it be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. CULLOM. I present the petition of M. W. Beveridge and 20 other importing houses in Washington, D. C., praying for the passage of a bill to amend the immediate transportation act. I desire to say that this petition, as well as many others which I have presented heretofore from business firms in different parts of the country, refer especially to the bill introduced by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL]. I make this statement hoping that the Committee on Commerce having that bill in charge will give it as early consideration as possible.

I ask that the petition be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. ALLISON. I think the Senate has passed a bill on that subject.

Mr. CULLOM. Not the bill I refer to. It has passed one, but not covering the particular branch of the subject that is designed by the petitioners to be covered.

Mr. VEST. We have reported three bills from the Committee on Commerce, but the one introduced by my colleague is a very different bill.

Mr. CULLOM. So I stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition will be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

JAS. M. BROWN,
President.

A true copy.
[SEAL.]

GEORGE WILSON,
Secretary.

Mr. BUTLER. I move that the resolutions be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MCMILLAN. The Senate passed a bill making that appropriation some time ago.

Mr. BUTLER. I am aware of that, but I prefer that the resolutions should go to the Committee on Commerce, to be considered in connection with the present river and harbor bill pending there.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Is there such an amendment proposed to the river and harbor bill?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolutions will be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MILLER presented a telegraphic memorial of the International Cattle Range Association; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, as follows:

DENVER, COLO., February 9, 1887.

To the United States Senate:

To the end that Congress may fully appreciate the great anxiety of the range cattle industry on the subject to which it refers, your memorialists, members of the International Range Association in convention assembled, would respectfully represent that—

Whereas contagious pleuro-pneumonia is known to exist in several States in this Union, and the imminent danger of the spread of the same to the large and unprotected cattle herds of the West is viewed with alarm by our citizens, and if this, as well as other contagious and infectious diseases among live-stock, is not prevented by prompt legislation in Congress and protection given to this vast industry, it is liable to cause great destruction to the live-stock interests of this and adjoining States and Territories. And we further represent and state that owing to the vast area of the plains and our inability to fence and protect our ranges from daily incursions of cattle from one range to another renders it impossible to successfully quarantine against the spread of said disease: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Congress of the United States be, and is hereby, requested to pass such a law as will effectually extirpate all contagious diseases of the character mentioned by placing in the hands of competent agents of the General Government full and complete power to act in all matters relating thereto, and that a sufficient appropriation be made of not less than $1,000,000 to pay all necessary expenses of the same.

Respectfully,

J. C. LEARY,
Secretary International Range Association.

Mr. TELLER presented a telegraphic memorial of the Legislature of Colorado; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, as follows:

DENVER, COLO., February 2, 1887.

House joint memorial No. 3.

To the Congress of the United States:

Your memorialists, the General Assembly of the State of Colorado, would respectfully present that—

Whereas contagious pleuro-pneumonia is known to exist in several States of this Union, and the imminent danger of the spread of the same to the large and unprotected cattle herds of the West is viewed with alarm by our citizens, and if this as well as other contagious and infectious diseases among live-stock is not prevented by prompt legislation in Congress and protection given to this vast industry it is liable to cause great destruction to the live-stock interests of this and adjoining States and Territories. And we further represent and state that owing to the vast area of the plains and our inability to fence and protect our ranges from daily incursions of cattle from one range to another renders it impossible to successfully quarantine against the spread of said disease: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Congress of the United States be, and is hereby, requested to pass such a law as will effectually extirpate all contagious diseases of the character mentioned by placing in the hands of competent agents of the General Government full and complete power to act in all matters relating thereto, and that a sufficient appropriation be made of not less than $1,000,000 to pay all necessary expenses of the same.

T. B. STUART,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
W. H. MELDRUM,
President of the Senate.

Approved February 2, 1887.

ALVA ADAMS, Governor.

Hon. H. M. TELLER,
Senate, Washington.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I present the petition of Thomas J. Deavitt and a large number of other citizens of Vermont, praying for the passage of the bill granting arrears of pension. I believe the committee has been discharged from the consideration of that bill, and I move that the petition lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland, presented the petition of James S. Crawford, of Maryland, at present residing in the District of Columbia, praying for the passage of a bill for his relief; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. DOLPH. I present a petition of the Independent Order of Good Templars of Washington Territory, praying for the passage of the bill (S. 1759) granting to the people of the District of Columbia the right to determine by ballot whether intoxicating liquors may hereafter be legally manufactured and sold in that District. This petition is signed by the officers of that organization. I understand the bill is before the Committee on the District of Columbia, and I move that the petition be referred to that committee.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DOLPH presented the petition of Mrs. Helen Randolph, widow of John Randolph, late a private in Company G, One hundred and eighty-fifth New York Volunteers, praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I present the petition of Samuel M. Clark and other citizens of Iowa, praying for the necessary appropriation to extend the outer wall of the Des Moines Rapids Canal at Keokuk, Iowa, so as to connect it with the pivot-pier of the bridge at that place, and thereby prevent the obstruction of navigation, &c. This petition is addressed to me personally, but is evidently intended for the consideration of the Senate, and I present it and ask that it may be referred, together with certain papers which I desire to go with it, to the Committee on Commerce.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the petition will be received, and, together with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon, presented eleven petitions of citizens of Washington, D. C., praying for the passage of the bill incorporating the Washington Cable Railway Company; which were ordered to lie on the table.

WRECK OF THE BARK CASHMERE.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. I present a memorial of Horace F. Cutter, an honored citizen of the Pacific coast, a cultivated gentleman and an altruist of the broadest type, praying that the Government of the United States may make some suitable acknowledgment for the kindness and hospitality displayed by the people of Japan in succoring the surviving members of the shipwrecked crew of the American bark Cashmere, which was wrecked by typhoon in the eastern seas on the 12th of August, 1885.

The memorial is accompanied by a detailed narrative from the San Francisco Morning Call (taken from the statements of the survivors) of the circumstances attending the wreck, and of the hospitalities extended to the suffers by the Japanese peasantry and fishermen dwelling on the island upon which the shipwrecked men were cast.

The petitioner believes that it would be consistent not only with the dictates of humanity, but of good policy, to give these poor people some recognition of their kindness.

It has always been regarded one of the highest duties of a nation to punish any barbarities committed upon its citizens by the people of other countries. It is even a higher obligation to recognize and reward conspicuous instances of humanity and mercy, such as are illustrated by this case. It is the example of acts like this that lifts mankind out of the atmosphere of self, and tends to advance and make universal that spirit of brotherhood which represents the highest human aspirations, and which, as civilization advances and commerce extends, becomes more and more a necessity of society. To my mind, it is not only the duty, but should be the pleasure of a free, powerful, and peace-loving people to become in this respect an examplar to the nations—not only by expressing its gratitude, but on suitable occasions giving substantial recognition for conspicuous acts of humanity. This recognition will be the more gratefully appreciated when, as in this instance, the kindness was extended by those who occupy the humblest walk of life.

But I shall not enlarge upon the subject. The simple and touching story of the memorial itself presents the merits of the case more graphically and vividly than could any words of mine. The memorial and its accompanying narrative are as follows:

MEMORIAL.

To the Senate of the United States:

I respectfully present for the consideration of your honorable body the detailed narrative of the loss of the American bark Cashmere, in September, 1885, some 200 miles off the coast of Japan.

It appears that all the officers having perished, seven of the crew took the only boat, and after several days of suffering, being without food or water, landed on the little island of Tanegashima, inhabited solely by Japanese fishermen and peasants, who hastened to feed and clothe the unfortunates, and then provided a vessel to take them where they could be cared for by an American consul.

In the mean time the other four sailors and a poor lad, the son of the deceased captain, remained on the dismantled vessel, nearly dead with hunger and thirst, having nothing to eat but raw yams and with only vinegar to drink.

The helpless craft having drifted in sight of land, the men managed to construct a raft, and so were enabled to reach the shore. They landed on the same little island which had received their comrades. Again these poor fishermen and peasants, unwearied in their kindness, hurried down to welcome, to clothe, and to feed these famishing strangers, and then took care that they also should be provided with the means of reaching the port where they could receive assistance.

Many years ago an American ship was wrecked on the inhospitable coast of Sumatra. The vessel was plundered by the natives, and the officers and sailors were treated most cruelly. After much suffering they contrived to escape and return home. When the news of their inhuman treatment reached this country public indignation was aroused, a vessel of war was sent out, and the destruction of the offending village by the guns of the Potomac gave a lesson of retribution to the pirates who infested those distant seas which has never been forgotten.

Now, will it not be a proper thing for our Government to order a national vessel, this time on an errand of peace, to visit this little island, and manifest to these kindly-hearted good people, in some suitable manner, that we appreciate their generosity to our distressed fellow-countrymen, and also show to the friendly empire of Japan that we cultivate the trait which in a great nation is so graceful and becoming, that of gratitude?

HORACE F. CUTTER,
San Francisco, Cal.

The narrative accompanying the memorial is as follows:

[From the San Francisco Morning Call, November 25, 1885.]

WRECK OF THE BARK CASHMERE; TRAGIC FATE OF HER OFFICERS; THE SUFFERINGS OF HER CREW; THE KINDNESS OF THE JAPANESE ISLANDERS.

By the barkentine Catherine Sudden and the steamship City of New York, the survivors of the American bark Cashmere have reached this city.

The Cashmere left Philadelphia just seven months ago, her destination being Hiogo, Japan. When her long voyage was nearly finished she was struck by one of those terrible typhoons that are most dreaded by navigators in the North Pacific Ocean. All her officers perished and the vessel itself was nearly demolished. The tale related by those who passed safely through this peril has many remarkable and interesting features. The incident concerning the manner in which the wrecked vessel was kept from sinking to the bottom of the sea is peculiar and altogether novel. No such thing has happened outside of romance before. The narratives of the men are appended.

The names of the three lost officers of the Cashmere were: Capt. A. Nichols, first mate James Allen, second mate Charles Johnson. The five men left upon the ship were the captain's son, Charles R. Nichols, the carpenter, Otto Petersen, and three seamen, Fred. Olsen, John Schmitt, and Theodore Larsen. Those who went away in the boat were Thomas McDermott, Andrew Johnson, Julius Dodler, Theodore Stevenson, and "Alex," a Russian, all seamen, together with the cook and steward, both Chinese.

Just as the men on board the bark Cashmere were beginning to recover their spirits, which had been cast down by the succession of stormy days and miserable nights that attended their voyage since the vessel's departure from Philadelphia on April 24, 1885, they ran into the tail end of a typhoon, when near the coast of Japan, to which country they were going with a cargo of kerosene oil in cans. The gale struck the bark about September 11, and the vessel ran before it for thirty hours. She had diverged from her course on account of it, as she had frequently done before on her long sea journey because of bad weather, and was again speeding on the way to her destination when the barometer ran down to 29. This was an unmistakable indication of a tempest, and in order to avoid its coming fury Captain Nichols ordered sail taken in as the wind increased, until at 4 o'clock on the afternoon of Saturday, September 12, the only canvas flying was a hammock in the mizzen rigging to keep the ship's head to the sea. Shortly after 4 p. m. the threatened typhoon burst in all its violence upon the luckless ship. She was according to an observation taken that morning in latitude 20° 40′ north, longitude 134° east, or about 280 miles southeast of Yokohama. The Cashmere was thrown upon her beam ends by the fury of the blast, and Captain Nichols ordered that the masts be cut away. This was at 15 minutes to 5 o'clock. At 6 o'clock the work had been accomplished, after much difficulty and danger, and the wreckage had been cleared away, but the mainmast had broken off so far down that in falling it tore up a portion of the deck.

Through the big opening thus made the sea began to pour into the hold. The hole was not discovered for many minutes, both on account of the darkness and the deep water which had covered the deck. The gurgle and rush of the sea as it ran below called attention to the unfortunate accident. The chief officer cried out on finding it: "There's a hole in the deck. It's every one for himself now."

The discovery completed the dejection of most of the crew, but the two mates and one of the men, who felt that all hopes were not lost while life remained, procured blankets and other bedding from the cabin and with them endeavored to stop the flow of water into the hold. They stuffed the bedding into the orifice and stood on it to keep it in place. The water continued to rush through and fill the ship, and at every moment it was thought she would go under. The suspense to the men who were waiting for death was agonizing. Stupendous waves kept rolling over the vessel, and the hurricane that was blowing was strong enough to uproot an oak. The sky had rapidly become pitch dark. It was about midnight, the men supposed, when a terrific sea swept over the deck and carried the second mate away. Half an hour later the first mate, who remained standing on the bedding in the hole, was also carried overboard. The seaman who was with them endeavoring to keep the blankets in the rent, knowing that he would share their fate if he remained there, went forward to the forecastle, where four others of the crew had sought safety.

The remaining nine men—there being fifteen in all when the Cashmere began her unhappy voyage—were aft in a protected part of the ship. They included the captain and his son. The Cashmere's rudder had been carried away early in the night, and the captain, with the men who were around him, tried to recover it, but could not succeed. At 3 o'clock on the morning of September 13, Captain Nichols, with his son, concluded to go forward. This was an operation which involved great risk, as to go out on the open part of the deck was like stepping into the trough of the sea. The ocean had lashed itself into increasing wrath, and tumultuous volumes of water poured over the bulwarks with a power no human being could withstand. The surrounding blackness, the rolling and pitching of the bark, and the slippery condition of the deluged deck lent additional insecurity to the short walk from one end of the vessel to the other. Before starting forward the father embraced his son and said: "Charley, my poor boy, I am sorry you came. May God bless you, my boy, whatever may happen." The boy went across the deck first and the captain followed. The former reached the forecastle, but his father was swept overboard. The din of the storm was so great that his cry could scarcely be heard as he was hurled into the sea. No expectation of release from their horrible situation was entertained by the men, and they were surprised when at the glimmer of daylight they found themselves still afloat.

The manner in which the ship was sustained on the surface is one of the most curious things in the annals of the sea. The kerosene, with which the hold was loaded, has a lighter specific gravity than salt water, and on that account the vessel could not sink. The cases kept the ship up just as a life-preserver does a man.

When day broke the sun was not visible, but the dim light that radiated from it enabled the survivors to see only a waste of waters around. The ship was so submerged that the only boat which remained hung on its davits close to the surface.

Some of the men determined to take advantage of the chance for life which this boat might afford them. It was supposed, from observations made before the typhoon was met, that land was not far away. Seven of the men, including the Chinese cook, resolved to leave the hulk. The captain's boy remained with the other four, who thought that to put to sea in an open boat, without food or drinking water, in such weather, was hardly preferable to dying where they were. The boy, like the rest, was totally discouraged. "Father is gone," he said tearfully, "and I wish that I were gone, too. I would as lief die as not."

There were some yams in the forward part of the vessel, but the departing seven took nothing with them. The mountainous sea had abated little. The Chinaman being unable to swim got into the boat with a sailor before it was cut loose.

The others then jumped into the water, taking their chances to reach the boat, and all got aboard. There was great risk in the attempt, the waters were thickly inhabited by sharks.

A couple of pairs of oars and a piece of canvas, which they rigged for a sail, were all that the seven men had to find land with when they departed on Sunday morning. The boat was leaky and two of its occupants were continually engaged in bailing it out. The gale was blowing from the south and east, and the boat with its meager sail rushed along in its path. The men had no idea of where they were going to. On Monday they had a sight of the sun, and it encouraged them a little. The storm subsided and at night the stars came out. They guided themselves by the polar star then. Four of the men were exhausted by the rowing and went to sleep in the bottom of the boat, lying there in the water. About midnight the three who were awake saw a light ahead. They thought it was a steamer's headlight, and as they could not hope to attract her notice, they considered that it was for them a mere will-of-the-wisp. So they refrained from rousing the others, thinking that they would only awaken a delusive hope. Presently they saw another light. A third one gleamed out, and soon the rays from half a hundred more reached their eyes.

They shouted for joy at their coming deliverance, feeling like men who had been raised from the dead. They awoke the sleepers. It was supposed that the lights were those of a fishing fleet. The men took hold of the oars and tried to row toward the beacons, but they were so weak they could hardly paddle. Gradually the lights disappeared, and hope was again deserting them when land loomed upon their sight. By hard exertions they neared the shore, only to hear the warning of the breakers. Not knowing how to avoid this danger that might wreck them again if they tried to land, they remained in the boat all night, and at daybreak renewed their efforts. They pulled for five hours, until they saw a nook which they thought a safe landing place. It proved to be rocky. A breaker capsized the boat and threw them on the beach, bruising and tearing their flesh. The spot proved to be the island of Tanegashima, inhabited solely by Japanese. After resting on the beach and recovering some strength, they crept up a cliff near by and saw a pebbly stream winding along. It was the first fresh water they had seen for a long time. They ran to it and flung themselves in the stream, and luxuriated in the bath.

The salt water had immersed them so long that the change was delightful. Their garments were nothing more than rags, but they drenched and wrung the salt out of them. They then slowly ascended a hill and saw a crowd of Japanese who had evidently witnessed the boatwreck. The natives received the weary mariners kindly and gave them boiled rice and sweet potatoes to eat. The next day they were escorted to the other end of the island, and some officials there, after having their wounds dressed, put them on a steamer bound for Kagoshima, where they were even better treated. They were kept at a hotel and fed on English-cooked food. European clothes were also given them. After eight days they were taken to Kobe, where the United States consul placed them on the barkentine Catherine Sudden, on which they worked their way to San Francisco.

From the story told by Otto Petersen and Fred. Olsen, two of the five men who were left on board, it would seem that they do not attach any particular blame to their shipmates for leaving them, though thinking they were rather impatient and in too much of a hurry to get away. Still it is generally considered that the fact of the entire crew not having embarked proved the salvation of all, since the boat would have been so overloaded as inevitably to have swamped. Nevertheless, it was with a feeling much akin to despair that the five who remained saw what then appeared their only means of rescue taken from them, and for the moment they bitterly blamed their comrades for deserting them.

They had crawled up under the topgallant forecastle, which was the only dry spot in the vessel, and here for a time they all seem to have given away to the gloomiest forebodings, which was but natural when all the horrors of their situation were considered.

The whole ship was flooded with salt water, and if it had been possible to obtain any provisions from the hold they would undoubtedly have been entirely unfit for use.

But nothing was to be found, and for some time after the boat had gone it was believed that there was absolutely no food, and that nothing but a lingering death by thirst or starvation was before them.

Finally, however, as the seas grew less violent, and allowed the castaways to more closely examine their surroundings, a small quantity of yams were found stowed away in the forecastle, which with some little difficulty the sailors obtained. The vegetables were, of course, raw and not specially palatable, but there was no possible way of cooking them, as a fire was utterly out of the question. Even raw, however, they were welcomed with joy by the anxious and already famishing men, who began faintly to hope that their lives might possibly be saved. But though the yams tended to allay the pangs of hunger in a degree at least, the question of water was still unsolved, and the prospect of dying by that most horrible death produced from thirst began to appall them.

They had welcomed the appearance of the sun after the awful gloom and horror of the storm, but as it grew brighter upon the day following the subsidence of the typhoon the sight was less grateful, since already their throats had grown parched and swollen with feverish heat. It was at this time that one of the men noticed a large jug or demijohn floating about in the scuppers, evidently partially filled with some liquid. The sight was hailed with joy, dashed by fears that the jug might not contain water, which, as the event proved, were only too well founded.

One of the men cautiously moved along the slippery and wave-swept deck and secured the floating vessel, which to the deep disappointment of all was found to be partially filled with vinegar.

In the first moment of their disgust it was about to be thrown overboard, but more prudent counsels prevailed, and it was retained on board, though no one then dreamed of drinking it, as it was feared it would increase rather than allay the pangs of thirst. But their sufferings, aggravated by the eating of the raw yams, grew too severe to be borne without some effort to alleviate them, and the despised vinegar was soon eagerly drunk, though in small quantities, as it was most vitally necessary to husband their supply. Drinking it increased to an intense degree their longing for water, but still alleviated in a slight degree their actual sufferings, rendering them devoutly thankful that their first impulse had not been obeyed and the precious liquid thrown away.

For seven days and nights after the departure of the boat the five men remained upon the vessel, cramped and crowded in the narrow space under the forecastle, and suffering intensely from hunger and thirst. The raw yams gave them no satisfaction, and it soon became almost impossible for any of them to retain the vinegar upon their stomachs. All were in a state of hopelessness and despair, while Charley Nichols, the young son of the captain, who remembered his father's tragic death, was sunk in the deepest grief.

After the storm the weather continued fair and the sea grew comparatively calm, which was all that kept the faintest hope alive, as there was not a man but knew that even a moderately rough sea would in a few moments beat their shattered hulk to splinters. Upon the morning of the seventh day the joyful cry of "Land!" burst from the earliest watcher, and his comrades saw that it was indeed true, and that the winds and currents had drifted their helpless craft within sight of the Japanese coast. A number of loose deck planks still remained lashed fast alongside the shattered bulwarks, and there had already been some talk of utilizing them in forming a raft, lest the hulk should go to pieces. Now, with a more definite object in view, there was no longer any hesitation, and with the aid of some pieces of rope and rigging, a number of the planks were speedily lashed together into a small but tolerably strong raft. The few remaining yams were collected, and preparations made for immediate embarkation; but it was finally concluded to stay by the ship another day in the hope that she might drift nearer the shore. Accordingly they remained on board until the next morning, when it was found that they had gained apparently nothing, whereupon, without further delay, they embarked upon the raft. This was upon the morning of the eighth day.

With such rude makeshift oars and paddles as they had been able to secure, efforts were made to propel the raft toward the shore, but with little apparent success. Night closed with the forlorn voyagers still far out at sea. The next morning, however, they found they had drifted considerably nearer, but nevertheless that day also ended with them still out at sea, though now the distance had become much less. Their efforts were redoubled, as it was a beautifully clear moonlight night, and about 10 o'clock they reached the beach.

They found that they had landed upon Tanegashima, the identical small island on the southern coast of Japan on which their comrades in the boat had been cast. The island is thickly inhabited by farmers and fishermen, all of whom, as soon as they became aware of the shipwrecked sailors' arrival, vied with each other in their endeavor to show them kindness, as they had previously done with their seven shipmates. The other sailors, however, had departed for Kobe the day before the last party arrived, whither the latter also repaired in a junk, which sailed ten days later.

At Kobe the American vice-consul treated them very kindly during their stay, finally forwarding them to Yokohama with a letter of introduction to the consul-general, who procured them a chance to work their passage home upon the City of New York.

I move that the memorial and accompanying papers be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC LAND LAWS.

Mr. DOLPH. I present the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7887) to repeal all laws providing for the pre-emption of the public lands, the laws allowing entries for timber-culture, and for other purposes. We report a disagreement, and in presenting the report, I shall ask for a further conference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7887) to repeal all laws providing for the pre-emption of the public lands, the laws allowing entries for timber-culture, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have been unable to agree.

J. N. DOLPH,
P. B. PLUMB,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

THOS. R. COBB,
W. J. STONE,
H. B. STRAIT,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. INGALLS. Before the request of the Senator from Oregon is disposed of, I wish he would be good enough to state the condition of the subject in the conference, and whether the differences are so radical as to probably present an issue that can not be adjusted at this session of Congress.

My reason for asking is because I receive a great many letters from people interested in the public domain as homestead settlers and pre-emption settlers, and it would concern the public, I am sure, to know whether we are likely to have any such legislation as is proposed by the bill at this session or not.

Mr. DOLPH. The differences between the managers on the part of the Senate and on the part of the House upon this bill have been quite radical, but they are differences that I think may be overcome and upon which an agreement ought to be reached.

There was contained in the first section of the bill as it passed the Senate a provision, in substance—not having the bill before me I can not give it literally—that in all cases where final proof had been made and final receiver's receipts had been issued for pre-emption claims and such claims had been sold to innocent purchasers for valuable consideration, the patent should be issued, notwithstanding any alleged informality in the proofs of the original entryman.

There was also in the eighth section of the bill a provision upon the same subject. These provisions were strenuously objected to by some members of the Senate and by the conferees on the part of the House, and it was alleged that the effect would be to confirm fraudulent claims. The managers on the part of the Senate believe, as a majority of the Senate did, that where such lands after final proof and payment and the issuing of final certificates had passed into the hands of bona fide purchasers the title should be confirmed to them.

If I am at liberty to state what the managers on the part of the Senate have been disposed to yield in this controversy, I will state that they have been disposed to yield this provision and permit it to be stricken out, so as to leave the law in that respect precisely as it now stands, and insert in lieu a provision in section 8, as follows: "That nothing in this act shall be construed to impair any existing rights of any bona fide purchaser of any such claim under existing law."

The most important point of disagreement, after that one is disposed of, is the provision of the bill as passed by the Senate, that in cases where the Commissioner of the General Land Office shall be convinced that fraud has entered into the final proofs made by an entryman under the homestead or pre-emption law, he shall suspend the issuing of patent and refer the matter to the Attorney-General, who shall cause suit to be instituted in the courts of the United States to set aside and cancel the certificate which has been issued to the entryman under the pre-emption law or homestead law, as the case may be.

The conferees on the part of the other House insist that in all cases the Commissioner of the General Land Office or the Secretary of the Interior shall be the sole absolute judge, and their judgment shall be based upon proceedings instituted by them in the local land offices as to whether an entry is fraudulent, and that they shall have the sole and absolute power of canceling and setting aside the entry and throwing open the land which had been settled upon, improved, and made valuable by the pre-emption and homestead claimant to further settlement under the laws of the United States.

The conferees on the part of the Senate believe that a man who has resided for years upon a piece of public land, who has made such proofs as are required by the laws of the United States, who has paid the amount required to be paid into the Treasury for his land and received his final certificate, who has put his all into his home, should have a right to go to a court and to have there determined the question as to whether the certificate for his entry has been properly issued to him, and as to whether his land shall be taken away from him.

That is, as I understand, at present the radical point of difference between the managers on the part of the two Houses, the Senate conferees insisting that some provision shall be retained in the bill by which a man whose title is attacked in the Land Office shall have a right virtually to appeal from the action of the Interior Department or from the Commissioner of the General Land Office to the courts and to there try the question of his right to the land, the House conferees insisting that the power shall either be left where they claim it now is, or shall be vested in the Commissioner of the General Land Office and the Secretary of the Interior Department to decide finally and conclusively whether such a claimant to the public lands under the laws of the United States is entitled to his land.

Mr. INGALLS. Both Houses of Congress have agreed by very large majorities that the pre-emption, timber-culture, and desert-land acts shall be repealed, to the effect that what remains of the public domain may be left to the operation of the homestead laws for individual settlement. That I believe is the judgment of the country at large, and I am convinced that the Senate conferees will fail in the discharge of a great public duty if they permit adhesion to minor and unimportant details to prevent the accomplishment of this great public work. I therefore hope that the conferees will consider themselves at liberty at least, in case the issue is tendered, to allow the question of remedy for individual rights either to remain as it now is or else to provide hereafter for some method by an amendment of existing laws, so that we may have the main object accomplished before the adjournment of this session of Congress.

Mr. DOLPH. The Senate Committee on Public Lands and the Senate have had the question of the amendment of the public land laws under consideration quite as long as the other branch of Congress. Numerous bills were referred to the Senate Committee on Public Lands. They were carefully considered, and a report was made at an early day at the last session of Congress of a bill which it was supposed would answer the purposes and cover the various questions which it was thought necessary to have legislation upon. That action was afterwards reconsidered by the Senate committee, and after a careful and elaborate consideration, extending through several sessions of the committee, a measure was reported to the Senate embodying the legislation that was thought necessary on the part of the Senate Committee on Public Lands. When the House bill came over the provisions in regard to the repeal of the pre-emption law and the timber-culture act were substantially the provisions of the bill which had passed the Senate a year before, or during the last Congress, but it did not include the various matters on which it was thought by the Senate committee necessary to have legislation. Therefore, the Senate Committee on Public Lands determined to take up the Senate bill and substitute it for the House bill. The Senate bill had been pending on our Calendar for a long time.

These are not unimportant matters. I am in constant receipt of letters from almost every Western State and Territory, and so is every other member of the Committee on Public Lands; and delegations come up to the Capitol and interview the members of the Committee on Public Lands almost daily upon the question of some remedy for the existing evils growing out of the present condition of the public land laws or them anner of their execution. Patents for pre-emption claims have been suspended in nearly all the Western States and Territories. No patents are being issued. Settlers are unable to get their titles. They can get no credit upon their claims. There is actually great suffering for want of action upon their application for title to these lands.

One provision that is objected to in section 8 is the one which provides that if at the end of two years after final proof and the issue of the final certificate of the register and receiver, there is no suggestion of fraud and no contest, a patent shall be issued. Even that is objected to by the managers on the part of the other House. Under the provisions of the bill as it passed the Senate a homestead entryman will be required to reside five years upon his claim. He then must make his final proof. He then gets his final certificate. Then his papers will be hung up for two years in the General Land Office, if they choose to hold them, waiting for somebody to make a suggestion of fraud in the procurement of his title. That will be seven years from the time he goes upon his land. Still the managers on the part of the other House are not satisfied with that provision, a provision which, if there is no suggestion of fraud and no contest, would compel the issuing of a patent after seven years' time.

I think any one who has given this matter attention will see that some general legislation is necessary. As far as I am concerned, I do not care to serve upon the committee of conference, but I do not wish it to be understood that the matters of difference are trivial features at all. I call attention to the fact that the bill as it passed the Senate does not involve a repeal of the desert-land act, but a modification of it only.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon moves that the Senate insist upon its disagreement and ask for a further conference.

Mr. PLUMB. Before that motion is put I wish to say a word. I have myself been for many years in favor of the repeal of the pre-emption law, not because that repeal was demanded by any powerful and overwhelming sentiment of the State which I in part represent, but because in the larger view of the situation I believed there ought to be further limitation put upon the acquisition of public land in view of its rapid absorption.

Probably there would be no trouble in agreeing upon a bill for this single purpose. In fact there is little substantial difference between the two Houses on this question.

But since this subject has been under discussion a practice has come into vogue in the administration of the General Land Office of a character which is not only threatening to existing rights under the law, but which is subversive of all rules of procedure by which the rights of property are affected, the rectification of which is of a great deal more consequence than the repeal of the pre-emption law or of the timber-culture law or both together. The proceeding by special agents, by detectives, by private inquiry, by secret inquisition, whereby titles are assumed to be set aside upon ex parte hearing, is going on to an extent which is paralyzing to the business of certain sections of the West, and which is practically destroying the right of honest pre-emptors and of honest purchasers—of a kind which, except that it is covered by the cry of fraud which has filled the public press, would be regarded as a shame and a disgrace not to be permitted to continue for one single instant longer. Every agency which cupidity, which hate, which malice and self-seeking and private revenge can suggest in man has been exerted against the honest settlers on the frontier—not, mind you, against the cattle-man, but against the individual entry-man and his honest successor in interest claiming a single quarter section of land.

I will state what recently occurred in a public hearing in a western Territory to illustrate the character of the proceedings that are being carried on under the sanction of the Land Department's present construction of the law, when I say that the witness on the stand, who was the contestant in the pending case for a piece of land which had been valuably improved and was then in the honest bona fide occupation of the claimant, admitted that he kept a bawdy house near there and that the special agent at whose instance he had made the contest had solicited him to make such contest and had promised him that if he would make it he should have the land under consideration, and which had been made valuable by the labor of another, as the reward for instituting the contest. That is not one case alone; it is one of hundreds of cases that are taking place all over the frontier.

So far as I am concerned there is no question of public policy involved concerning the public lands that equals in importance the one of providing that titles acquired under the land laws shall not be set aside except by that due process of law which can only be applied by the courts, in which ex parte testimony is not heard and in which rich and poor are on an equal footing.

Mr. PLATT. May I ask the Senator from Kansas a question?

Mr. PLUMB. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT. In case a pre-emption entry has been made, and the certificate has been issued and then assigned to a party for value by the person who made the entry, does the Commissioner of the Land Office, when he cancels that entry, allow the assignee to take an appeal?

Mr. PLUMB. I think not. Under the theory upon which the Commissioner proceeds the subsequent purchaser is not a party in interest at all, except he is able to establish the bona fides of the original entryman. In other words, he has no right of his own as an innocent purchaser.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. He is not recognized as having any right.

Mr. PLUMB. He is not recognized as having any right intervening on account of any act or thing that he has himself done or of any right which it is supposed he may have acquired.

Mr. PLATT. These questions affect some other parties than Western people. They affect Eastern people as well. I know a good many Eastern people who have loaned money upon lands of which they supposed the title was perfect, but where an assignment had been made by the man who made the original entry the money was loaned to the assignee. It may be said that the people at the East have no right to loan money, that they are Shylocks and deserve no consideration; but when the Commissioner proceeds to cancel those land entries, it seems to me that at any rate he ought to allow the person who has parted with his money innocently, supposing that there was a good title, to come in and appeal. I understand he does not do it. If that is involved in this question, I hope the members of the conference committee on the part of the Senate will insist.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I think it is due to the administration of the Land Department that some reply should be given to the statements which have been made.

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] says that the patents are suspended and scarcely any are being issued. I was present a few days since at a conversation between the Secretary of the Interior and the Committee on Appropriations of this body in which he stated that there were more patents being issued than had been issued under the preceding administration; that the office to the full capacity of its clerks employed for that purpose were constantly engaged in the issuing of patents. I have no doubt that the official evidence of this fact will be presented and furnished to the committee, showing that so far from patents being suspended there are more being issued than under any previous administration.

I am informed by the Commissioner of Public Lands that 3,000 a month are being issued, the full number which the clerical force allowed him by law can examine and certify. If more are not issued it is the fault of Congress and not that of the Commissioner of Public Lands.

If the administration of the Land Department is such as is stated or appears from the facts stated by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], the proper remedy is an impeachment of the officer. It is not just, nor is it creditable to anybody, whether the Senate of the United States or even a justice of the peace, that public officers should be tried and condemned without a chance of being heard and without evidence of the charges made. If the administration permits secret agents to prejudice the title and the rights of parties without their being heard, upon false statements that bad houses of one kind or another are kept or may be kept, or by promises of titles to land to individuals who are favorites, then the persons who permit such officers to conduct such practices in the performance of public duty ought to be tried and impeached, and if the charge is not true they should be heard and an opportunity presented to them to disprove it.

The administration of the Interior Department is in charge of men of high character, who will not permit such injustice to be done, but will promptly dismiss officials who are guilty of such acts. The charge, I am sure, can not be sustained. The Commissioner of Public Lands is not only a man of distinguished ability, but also a man of a high sense of honor, impartiality, and justice.

So far as my own State is concerned, under the administration of the present Commissioner of the General Land Office, more protection has been afforded to the people of the country who are honestly interested in the ownership and occupation of the public land than under the preceding one. It is the fraudulent entries that have been stopped there. I do not know what has happened elsewhere, but in my own State the Commissioner of the General Land Office has endeavored to do his utmost to protect the honest settler.

I introduced a resolution which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and now stands adversely reported upon the Calendar. The resolution was introduced upon the petition of hundreds of actual settlers—citizens of the United States—from other States who had gone to Florida, and who stated that the public lands of the United States which had been entered under homestead entry by them, high and dry as the top of this Capitol, had, to the extent of many thousands of acres, been located under the swamp and overflowed land grant, and they appealed to me that they might have a hearing before a committee of this body to prove their grievances in that respect, and have such legislation as would prevent it. I introduced the resolution and had it referred to the committee, and the committee reported it adversely, remitting the whole thing to the administration of the Land Office, governed as they are by rules of their own, and perhaps needing some legislation to provide a proper and an adequate remedy. I shall discuss that resolution when it comes up on the Calendar, and I shall show what these citizens of Florida say, and so far as I am concerned they shall have justice and protection in their rights.

I mention this to show that the Committee on Public Lands have not been so anxious, doubtless not from any improper motives, to discredit the Commissioner of the General Land Office and the Interior Department upon this subject as would seem to be indicated by the facts which are now stated. But if there are such grievances, admitting all that has been said by the Senator from Kansas, the proper remedy is for the Committee on Public Lands to introduce some resolution of inquiry, some examination, some method by which the parties subject to this impeachment may be heard, and the facts in their defense may be brought out, and not to condemn them by disparaging statements of which no proof is offered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion that the Senate further insist on its amendments and ask for a further conference with the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

SURVEY OF PUBLIC LANDS IN MONTANA.

Mr. ALLISON. The day before yesterday the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK] submitted a resolution calling upon the Committee on Appropriations to produce and place in the RECORD a certain letter. I find on examination that the letter is a letter addressed to me and not to the Committee on Appropriations. I have here the letter with its inclosure, and in justice to the Commissioner of the General Land Office and to what I said in this Chamber, I ask that the letter be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter will be inserted in the RECORD, if there be no objection.

The letter is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., February 2, 1887.

SIR: The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of this date reports you as stating in the Senate yesterday as follows:

"No doubt there ought to be a survey of the lands in the land grant not only of the Northern Pacific but of the other railroads; but the general appropriations made for the Land Office are not so used, and I think it would be rather a dangerous precedent to make special appropriations in this way. We made a special appropriation last year for the State of Nevada, and the Commissioner of the General Land Office has not executed it, as I understand. So we do not know what will become of this if this special appropriation is made."

And in reply to an inquiry by Senator TELLER "why has the Commissioner of the General Land Office not executed it?" you replied, "I do not know why."

I am well aware that you would not intentionally give currency to an erroneous statement of fact, and for your information and the information of the Senate I inclose herewith a copy of letter from this office to the surveyor-general for Nevada, dated September 22, 1886, instructing him to enter into contract for the surveys authorized by the special appropriation referred to in yesterday's debate.

It will be perceived that steps were promptly taken by this office to carry the law into effect. Appropriations for surveys are expended through contracts made by the respective surveyors-general. (See U. S. Revised Statutes, sec. 223 and following sections, also sec. 2398.) The instructions to the surveyor-general of Nevada were issued within six weeks from the adjournment of the last session of Congress and immediately after a verified copy of the appropriation act had been received at this office.
